Mr. Raftery: With the exception of two pictures, Stage Door Canteen and Johnny Come Lately, both of which played Mrs. Smith's theatre—what is the name of her——

Mr. Wright: The Lakeview.

Mr. Raftery: (Continuing) The Lakeview first-run in that zone, all of our pictures have been made available to Mrs. Smith for booking, I mean all the pictures she has licensed have been made available to her for booking sixty days after their play date at the other theatre.

Mr. Wright: The Beacon.

Mr. Raftery: The play-off shows on the 1943-44 product that she has played these pictures: the earliest one of 13 she played three months after availability, the last one, the outside date, is eight months after availability. All the other pictures vary from three months to eight months.

On the 1944-45 season, there were 13 pictures involved, the earliest one she played 43 days after availability, the longest eight months after availability, and the same sixty-day availability prevailed.

Mr. Caskey: Availability means the time when she had a right——

Mr. Raftery: When she had a right to play it. And the other eleven pictures vary from two months to eight months after availability.

Mr. Wright: It is a fact, is it not, Mr. Raftery, that in her contracts all that is said as to clearance is simply "after Beacon"?

Mr. Raftery: That is right.

Mr. Wright: Sixty days after Beacon.

Mr. Raftery: No, there is nothing in the contract. He asked me to find the fact.

Mr. Wright: The fact is the contract simply says (3374)

"after Beacon" but the practice is to make her wait at least sixty days.

Mr. Raftery: And also, the top price she paid for any one of these features with the exception of the two she played clear, was $15.

Judge Bright: Would she be given notice of availability of those pictures after the expiration of sixty days?

Mr. Raftery: That is right.

Judge Bright: Right immediately after?

Mr. Caskey: Before.

Mr. Raftery: In sixty days they are available to her.

Judge Bright: When is she given notice of availability?

Mr. Raftery: As soon as we set a booking in the other theatre. You set the booking in the theatre. That is a question that Judge Goddard was asking about during the examination of one of the witnesses. In your contract you have a provision that requires the distributor to give a written notice of availability as soon as the picture is available. Then it is her option to date the picture. She is the one that dates it and she has a period within which to date. Notwithstanding the fact that these pictures were made available on the sixtieth day after the finish of the (3375) run at the other theatre, her booking sheets on the play-off shows we waited as long as three months to get the big sum of $15 in this situation. The other two pictures she played clear of the Beacon because we had a fight with Mershon and did not sell him the picture in any part of his United Theatres.

Mr. Caskey: I don't think you have answered Judge Bright's question as to when notice of availability was sent to her.

Mr. Raftery: It was sent to her as soon as you set your booking date in the first theatre.

Judge Bright: That does not mean a thing to me. When do you set the booking date in the first theatre?

Mr. Raftery: In the first theatre, that depends on the first run in your theatre. You have a first-run in New Orleans. That picture plays downtown—most of our pictures up until this year played downtown in the Loew theatre. As soon as you set your first-run, then you set your availability for the second run. Now we will assume this Peacock theatre was the second run. As soon as you set your date on that one, you immediately set your date on your third run. That is the date of availability. Then the exhibitor comes into the exchange, goes to the booker and sits down and works out her dates on the pictures she wants to book. She had all these availabilities sixty days after the other one, and she set them as far back as eight months after they could have been played. That is the way they book them.

Mr. Caskey: She got the notice sixty days before she could have played the picture.

Mr. Raftery: Right.

Judge Bright: When you say they play clear you mean that is without any clearance?

Mr. Raftery: No, the other theatre did not play the picture at all. Stage Door Canteen——

Judge Bright: She could play it first-run?

Mr. Raftery: She played it first run in both instances—exclusive run in that competitive area.

Mr. Wright: Now I am informed that Mr. Raftery is also willing to stipulate this schedule that was marked for identification as 417, as to the Stage Door Canteen in certain theatres in Kansas City, is that right?

Mr. Raftery: I was willing to stipulate that but I am awfully sorry about that Universal one. I don't want to stipulate the two of them. You had better ask Mr. Caskey about that. That is his stuff. I don't want to be stipulating for him, too.

Mr. Caskey: The Government cannot justify the statement on the front of this, that the Dickinson theatre played after the Waldo.

Mr. Marcus: The Appeal Board decision indicates that.

Mr. Caskey: I am thoroughly familiar with that, sir, and the Appeal Board does not indicate any such thing. Of course if you want to put the contract in evidence, that is all right, but I certainly object to this prejudicial schedule, which is not like anything that is in evidence.

Mr. Wright: What do you want taken out of the schedule to satisfy you?

Mr. Caskey: Put in the contract and then make up your own schedule and we will make up one for our brief.

Mr. Wright: We will offer the folder identified as 417 with the contracts in evidence and without the schedule.

Mr. Caskey: There are some others than Kansas City in that folder.

Mr. Wright: Then they should be removed.

Mr. Raftery: What are the towns involved there?

Mr. Wright: The only town involved is Kansas City, Missouri. The theatres involved are the Fox, Waldo, the Rock Hill and the independent Dickinson and Bijou.

Mr. Raftery: Where is the Dickinson, in what town?

Mr. Wright: It is in, I believe, a suburb of Kansas City, called Mission, Kansas City.

(3377-A)

Judge Goddard: What is the date of the contract?

Mr. Wright: The date of the contract between United Artists and the Bijou is October 8, 1943; that between United Artists and Dickinson is July 19, 1943; the Fox contract with United Artists is Dated May 8th, 1945.

(3378)

Mr. Wright: We should also like to offer these two United Artists—well, they are actually two contracts dated September 20, 1944. This contract, dated September 20, 1944, relates to one picture but consists of three pages, all between United Arists and a group of exhibitor corporations affiliated with Paramount and Minnesota Amusement Company. I will ask to have that marked with the next exhibit number.

(Marked Government's Exhibit 475 for identification.)

Mr. Wright: And as 476 for identification two dated June 26, 1944, attached together, for exhibition of one picture in the Kincey Circuit, also affiliated with Paramount.

Mr. Raftery: Before I consent, could you tell us the purpose for offering anything like that?

Mr. Wright: These are recent agreements in which a profit-sharing deal was made between United Artists and these Paramount affiliates.

Mr. Raftery: Do you mean we have an interest in the operation of those theatres?

Mr. Wright: You do.

Mr. Raftery: Or was our film rental measured by house expenses? Is that what it means?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Raftery: I object to the characterization of (3379)
profit-sharing. I have no objection to it going in.

Judge Hand: There is a great tendency on the part of everybody except yourself to put in anything of which he has possession.

(Marked Government's Exhibits 475 and 476 in evidence.)

Mr. Wright: That tendency, if the Court please, we have now checked. We rest—I have one qualification, subject to the supplying of the schedule which was to be added to Exhibit 421 for identification in order that it might be received, and that, I think, they are working on upstairs.

Mr. Caskey: I withdraw my desire to see it.

Mr. Seymour: I have those remaining affidavits and things, if I may proceed for a couple of minutes and clean up that matter.

Judge Hand: All right. These exhibits that are marked here only for identification, I take it, have been offered in evidence, isn't that right?

Mr. Wright: Which exhibits are those?

Judge Bright: 474, 475 and 476.

Judge Hand: There were a number.

Mr. Wright: They were all offered and received, I understood it.

Judge Hand: We intended to receive them. I (3380) wanted to be sure they had been.

Judge Goddard: 417 too.

Mr. Seymour: First, Mr. Keough, who was a witness here is in the hospital, and there were certain corrections in his testimony that he wanted to have made, and that we have agreed with the Government should be made by stipulation, and I would like to have the stenographer copy those corrections into the record, so that reference can be made to that.

"IT IS HEREBY STIPULATED AND AGREED that if Austin C. Keough were recalled to the witness stand, he would testify as follows, in correction of the testimony heretofore given by him at the following pages of the typewritten record:

"1. At page 1263. In lieu of his answer reading 'Starting in about the year 1913, Paramount,* * ' he would testify 'Starting in about the year 1918, Paramount, * *'.

"2. Also at page 1263. In lieu of the answer commencing 'There was a Big Four, which then consisted of a company called Vitagraph, and Selig, and Spoor, and Essanay', he would testify 'There was a Big Four, which then consisted of a company called Vitagraph, and Selig, and Lubin, and Essanay'.

"3. At page 1289. In lieu of the sentence in the answer commencing 'That is the form that Judge Thacher and the Supreme Court said was illegal to use by agreement', he would testify: 'This form, as later revised in 1926 and again revised after the Federal Trade Commission conference in 1927, is the form that Judge Thacher and the Supreme Court said was illegal to use by agreement'.

"4. At page 1295. In lieu of the answer commencing 'Now that contract, having been worked out by this Committee,' * * * and ending the Federal Trade Commission conference—', he would testify: 'This 1928 contract, evolved from the Federal Trade Commission conference, was in use until a decision by Judge Thacher in October, 1929, and thereafter Paramount used its own form of contract until about 1934'.

"'In April of 1930, representatives of distributors and exhibitors met at Atlantic City to evolve another uniform contract. They did evolve a contract, and by the end of the year 1930 submitted it and recommended its adoption. It was used by some distributors and not by others. There was no agreement among any of the distributors as to its use. It is not the same agreement which Paramount used and which is marked "Exhibit P-10." It was referred to in the industry as the 5-5-5 contract and its use was optional, as were also the provisions therein for the arbitration of disputes'.

"5. At page 1296. In view of the foregoing clarification, Mr. Seymour's answer to Judge Bright's question at page 1296 should be changed to read as follows:

'Judge Bright: The 5-5-5- contract is Exhibit P-10?

'Mr. Seymour: No, Exhibit P-10 is Paramount's own form of contract. The 5-5-5 contract was similar to the one marked P-11'.

"6. At page 1297. In lieu of the answer commencing 'It was a shorthand description of the Committee that was made up * * *', Mr. Keough would testify: 'It was a shorthand description of the Committee that was made up. There were 5 men representing Allied States Exhibitors' Association, 5 representing motion picture theatre owners of America, who were both independent exhibitors' organizations, and 5 who represented distributors of the affiliated exhibitors.'

"7. At page 1317. In lieu of the sentence in the answer which commences 'In other words, Paramount agrees that this first run account of its choice * * *', Mr. Keough would testify as follows: 'In other words, Paramount thereby agrees that this first run account of its choice, to whom it has granted the license, that Paramount, in licensing that same picture to be exhibited on a subsequent run in competing theatres whose admission prices are equal to or lower than the minimum stated in the clearance provision of the license agreement, will not so license that picture as to permit its exhibition until after the expiration of the stated period of clearance.'

"8. Also at page 1317. In lieu of his answer to the question by Mr. Proskauer, Mr. Keough would testify: 'Won't license it for exhibition within 30 days, within the 30 days stipulated clearance, in a theatre which charges less than whatever the stated price is in that particular contract'."

Mr. Seymour: Second, Mr. Beatty, who was a witness for Paramount, called by Paramount, has made an affidavit as to testimony which he would have given if recalled, and I understand that the Government stipulates that the testimony would be given in accordance with this affidavit, if recalled, with the same force and effect as if he were here, and I ask that that be copied into the record.

Mr. Wright: There is one qualification I wish to make as to this last stipulation. He is now offering an affidavit from the witness Beatty as to what the witness Beatty would say if now recalled to explain certain terms in a contract which was offered in evidence. Mr. Beatty has signed this affidavit and I accordingly agree that if called to the stand at this time he would say what he said in his affidavit. However, I would object at this stage to that testimony being received, even if he were here on the witness stand because he should have made the explanation that he now seeks to make at the time he was here.

Mr. Seymour: The only reason——

Judge Hand: We will overrule that. Go on.

Mr. Seymour: Very good. I would like to have that copied into the record.

(The affidavit of E. C. BEATTY is as follows:)

"E. C. BEATTY, President of W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc. and Butterfield Michigan Theatres Company, being duly sworn, deposes and says;

"I am informed by counsel for Paramount Pictures, Inc., that after I was called as a witness on behalf of that defendant and testified in connection with the proceedings in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York in United States vs. Paramount, et al., counsel for the Government introduced in evidence a certain agreement between Walter S. Butterfield, Famous Players Lasky Corporation, Balaban & Katz Corporation, Publix Theatres Corporation, and B. F. Keith Corporation, dated September 24th, 1926, as Government's Exhibit number 387.

"I am further informed that Government counsel referred to paragraph 20 of said agreement. This paragraph speaks for itself.

"If I had been interrogated by the Government counsel in regard to this Agreement, and particularly paragraph 20 thereof, when I was on the witness stand, I would have testified, and the fact is, that this paragraph of the Agreement was never carried out or performed by any party to the Agreement and that it has never been operative.

The fact is W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc. was incorporated on the 24th day of December, 1926; that prior to that time there was no one in existence who could execute a contract for said W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc.; and I further state that after the 24th day of December, 1926, and up to the present time, no contract as set forth in the said paragraph 20 was ever entered into by W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc.; that neither Publix, Keith or any other organizaton or individual ever requested execution of such a contract; and I, together with all my associates with W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc., and so far as I know all interested in Keith or Publix took it for granted and acted on the theory that no such contract was or would be executed. And the fact is, further, that W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc. did not, after its incorporation, agree with Keith that Publix would act as agent in negotiations with Producers Releasing Corporation, nor did Publix Theatres Corporation negotiate film licenses for W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc., Butterfield Michigan Theatres Company, or any subsidiary of either of the said corporations.

"From the organization of the Butterfield corporations, and including the period during the lifetime of W. S. Butterfield, all negotiations for pictures purchased for exhibition purposes have been conducted and consummated by myself or those specially designated employees who referred for final action all such purchases to me. To the best of my recollection, I do not recall that W. S. Butterfield made any purchases or participated in any other way for pictures for exhibition purposes.

"To the best of my personal knowledge, neither Keith nor any successor of Keith ever demanded that the new company, W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc., contract for any pictures of Producers Distributing Corporation, never named a substitute therefor, and never demanded that it contract for the exhibition of any pictures whatsoever. However, I further state to my personal knowledge that practically all of the pictures of Producers Distributing Corporation, while it existed, and all leading Companies in the country, sold to and the Butterfield Corporations purchased substantially all their pictures.

"I further state that Mr. W. S. Butterfield died in the month of April, 1936, and immediately thereafter I became President and Treasurer, and performed all the duties of General Manager of the two aforementioned corporations.

"I further state that no officer, employee or representative of Publix Theatres Corporation or of Paramount Pictures, Inc. or any of its predecessors has ever participated in or been consulted in regard to any negotiations with any distributors in the licensing of films to the theatres operated by said corporations except that naturally officers, employees or representatives or Paramount Pictures, Inc. have participated with myself, or specially designated subordinates of mine, in the negotiations of licenses for the exhibition of Paramount pictures in theatres operated by those two corporations or any subsidiaries thereof.

(Sgd.) E. C. BEATTY."

Mr. Seymour: Now, to complete two groups of affidavits which I had offered, the first group being P-24, I offer as part of P-24 the affidavits of M. A. Lightman, William K. Jenkins and E. H. Rowley and ask to have those treated as part of P-24.

Mr. Seymour: Then I ask to have treated as part of P-25 the remaining affidavits in that category which I propose to have marked, an affidavit David R. Wallerstein, an affidavit of Clifford J. Shaw—several affidavits of Clifford J. Shaw—and an affidavit of Joseph Phillipson.

That completes the reserved right to put in additional affidavits, which your Honors were kind enough (3389) to grant me.

(Marked Defendant Paramount's Exhibit P-25-A.)

Mr. Wright: It raises, of course, the question of our motion to strike. We had the motion virtually completed but we haven't yet seen this last material. I haven't had a chance to include it. I suppose that our motion, if forwarded and included in the record after the close of the proceedings, would be taken to have the same force and effect as if filed now?

Judge Hand: Oh, yes.

Mr. Proskauer: Shall I proceed? I have a very short number of exhibits.

The first ones I offer, I state by way of explanation, relate to Government's Exhibit 403, which you will remember was the statement of our profit and loss for certain years.

I offer in evidence a condensed statement of the profit and loss of Warner Bros. for the fiscal years ending 1929 to 1944 inclusive, which are taken from our published reports.

Mr. Wright: Did you say condensed or consolidated?

Mr. Proskauer: I said condensed.

Mr. Wright: Is it a condensed consolidated statement?

(3390)

Mr. Proskauer: It is a statement of the profits of the corporation as shown in its annual reports, and it is by the books of account of the company.

I don't want to comment on this other than to call your Honors' attention to the fact that in 1929 our profit was 14 million dollars, in 1932 our loss was 14 million dollars. There have been variables like that all through. The average, for the last three years, was a profit of just under eight million dollars and for the 13 years prior to that it was $948,000.

(Marked Defendant Warner's Exhibit W-17.)

Mr. Proskauer: I offer in evidence a schedule showing the net profit in relation to our total income percentagewise during each of those years.

While it is being marked, I will call your Honors' attention to the fact that in 1929 we earned almost 20 per cent on our income.

Mr. Wright: May we have a copy of that?

Mr. Proskauer: The 16-year average was 2.19 per cent. The 13-year average from 1929 to 1941 was just under one per cent and the three-year percentage for the years 1942 to 1944 inclusive was 6.02 per cent.

(3391)

Mr. Proskauer: The next schedule I offer shows net profit in relation to net worth. That shows that in 1929 we made nearly 20 per cent on our net worth. In 1932 we lost 20 per cent on our net worth. For the 13 prewar years, 1929 to 1941, we earned 1.22 per cent on our net worth and for the three war years we earned 7.84 per cent.

(Marked Defendant Warner's Exhibit W-20.)

Mr. Proskauer: The next schedule shows the same computation with respect to our total assets.

Mr. Wright: We are going to get copies of these eventually, I take it?

Mr. Proskauer: Right now, I hope.

That shows for the three war years we averaged 4.33 per cent on our assets; that for the 13 years preceding that we averaged .53 per cent, and that for the 16 years prior to that, we averaged 1¼ per cent earning on our total assets.

(Marked Defendant Warner's Exhibit W-21.)

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors will recall I cross-examined the Government witness on the box-office receipts as showing why the profits for the last three years had been so good. I offer in evidence a schedule showing the fluctuation in attendance and box-office receipts of motion picture theatres operated in the United States. By that, of course, I mean the Warner Bros. theatres. The heading is somewhat ambiguous.

It shows that in 1932 the attendance was 163,000,000 and the box-office receipts $51,600,000; in 1944 the attendance increased to 218,000,000 and the box-office receipts increased to $77,200,000. The 13-year average is 183,900,000 attendance and $54,300,000 receipts. The 10-year average for the prewar years 1932 to 1941, inclusive, are 174,800,000 attendance and only $49,300,000 box-office receipts, but for the three war years, the attendance went up to an average of 214,100,000, and the box-office receipts to an average of $71,100,000.

I offer in evidence a schedule taken from the Film Daily Year Book of 1945 page 47, showing the national average of United States theatre admission prices for motion picture theatres.

Mr. Wright: Now, just a minute: As far as we are concerned, these admission price fluctuation data I think are not relevant or material, but if we are going to use such sources as Motion Picture Daily tabulation, we have an OPA study showing the rise in admission prices when they considered the question of applying ceilings. I submit if we get into that kind of a field there is better data than this——

Mr. Proskauer: If there is any question about it I will withdraw it. We will rest on our own admission prices. Counsel suggested at one stage here that we had not, as he said, passed on to the public economies, or that the huge increase in the cost of our film production had been passed on to the public. I will rest on my own figures on that if counsel objects to showing the national figures.

Mr. Wright: We do not object to showing the national figures.

Mr. Proskauer: Well, if you do not want to show them one way or the other, do not make arguments like that.

(3394)

Mr. Frohlich: If the Court please, I would like to have Mr. Wright——

Judge Hand: Wait a minute. You have got something more?

Mr. Proskauer: Yes. I have got an affidavit.

Mr. Frohlich: I am sorry.

Mr. Proskauer: This affidavit shows the actual minimum evening adult admission prices actually charged in the various theatres that played Princess O'Rourke. I understand that Mr. Wright is willing to stipulate that this affidavit may be used in lieu of calling Mr. Jones personally.

Mr. Wright: Yes, indeed, and that he would testify——

Mr. Proskauer: And it may be admitted and marked with the same force and effect as though it were his testimony if he were called as a witness.

(Marked Defendant Warner's Exhibit W-22.)

Mr. Proskauer: I now offer a schedule—and the source of it is this last affidavit which went in evidence—of the contract minimum admission prices and the actual minimum admission prices of exhibitions listed—these are exhibitions of Princess O'Rourke—listed in Government's interrogatories 6 to 11 in evidence and while it is being marked I will briefly call attention to this——

(3395)

Judge Hand: Wait a minute.

(Marked Defendant Warner Exhibit W-23.)

Mr. Proskauer: What the schedule shows is, when you get down to A and B, that in 395 cases the actual minimum admission prices were greater than contract minimum admission prices, and it lists how much more there were. Then it shows that in 57 cases the minimum admission price was less than the contract minimum price, and it shows how much—I mean the actual admission price was lower than the contract minimum. And we shall argue certain inferences from that in our brief.

I think that is all we have. We rest.

Mr. Davis: If the Court please, my contribution will be a very trifling one. In view of what has transpired this afternoon, I am not even sure that it is a necessary one. The Court will remember that the Government produced tabulations showing the distribution of license fees paid to all defendants in the cities of Atlanta, Philadelphia and Kansas City, showing the distribution of license fees between affiliated and non-affiliated theatres, first-runs and subsequent-runs. I rather anticipated that on those three exhibits we should hear an argument from the Government that they were typical in the situations throughout the country. Mr. Wright has now stipulated that that is not his purpose, and that that will not be the argument as to Atlanta, Kansas City, and Philadelphia.

To meet that argument, however, I have had prepared a schedule of 15 cities, including such cities as Baltimore, Cleveland, St. Louis, Washington, New York, Columbus, Ohio, and others, in which I have had shown the distribution of license fees paid to Loew's on the first-run, subsequent-runs and all the film rentals distributed between Loew's own theatres, theatres of co-defendants here, and the independents. And although, as I say, the concession of the Government has somewhat minimized my belief in the necessity of this, I nevertheless offer it; and having offered it, I gracefully retire.

(Marked Defendant Loew's Exhibit L-18.)

Mr. Caskey: Will you mark this for identification.

(Marked Defendant Fox Exhibit F-28 for identification.)

Mr. Caskey: I offer in evidence a chart showing the playoff of the picture Sweet Rosie O'Grady in St. Louis, Missouri.

(Marked in evidence Fox Exhibit F-28.)

Mr. Caskey: It was made on the same basis as some charts that were offered by the Government for other cities.

I offer in evidence a similar chart for Indianapolis, Indiana.

(Marked Defendant Fox's Exhibit F-29.)

Mr. Caskey: In the course of Mr. Kupper's testimony I stated that I was not examining him in detail as to the 92 cities, but would offer in evidence as an exhibit the detailed statement that was submitted to Mr. Wright prior to Mr. Kupper's leaving the stand; and we now have submitted to him the revised copy which contains wholly immaterial corrections.

Mr. Wright: I haven't the faintest idea as to whether these corrections made since he left the stand are material or not.

Mr. Caskey: I assure you they are not.

Mr. Wright: I submit this is an objectionable procedure.

Judge Hand: I hope we won't get into the old business of spending more time for days correcting minutes.

Mr. Caskey: You can see they are purely grammatical.

Mr. Wright: If you will just offer it with the changes made since he was on the stand indicated, I think the Court can then see and we can see what has been done.

Mr. Caskey: All right; stitch that right on the back, Mr. Clerk.

Mr. Proskauer: With the understanding if you do not agree on it, you can go back and talk to the reporter.

(Marked Defendant Fox's Exhibit F-30.)

Mr. Caskey: We rest.

Mr. Leisure: We have three exhibits, if your Honor please: We have three exhibits which we have already cleared with Mr. Wright. I think they can just be marked without comment. This is a schedule of income, of net profits of RKO. May we have that marked, please?

(Marked Defendant's RKO-Exhibit 26.)

Mr. Leisure: The second is a schedule of RKO film rentals received for typical pictures from affiliated and unaffiliated exhibitors in comparable size theatres.

(Marked Defendant RKO Exhibit 27.)

Mr. Leisure: And the third is a table supplementing material shown by the Government on its chart, Exhibit 432.

(Marked Defendant RKO Exhibit 28.)

Mr. Frohlich: I will be very brief. I have a simple request to make, with the permission of the Court, of Mr. Wright. There came into evidence this afternoon a contract between Columbia and Loew's, a franchise agreement. That had a provision in it under which Columbia made some allowance of house expenses. In view of Mr. Wright's statement that he would consider that a sharing of profits—and I did not bring any other contracts down with me—but I would like him to stipulate that I have such contracts of a similar nature with independents with identical clauses. I assure you that is a fact, and I want to do this in the interest of time.

Mr. Wright: I would like to see those contracts that are identical. I would concede that you may have contracts with independents in which your film rental is determined giving consideration to house expense, if that is what you have in mind.

Mr. Frohlich: Yes, I have those.

Mr. Wright: That stipulation we will give you, but that they are identical, we will not.

Mr. Frohlich: That will satisfy me. That is all.

Mr. Raftery: The Universal defendants rest. United Artists rests.

For the record I wish to make the same motions to dismiss I made at the close of the Government's case.

Mr. Frohlich: Columbia makes the same motions.

Mr. Seymour: I suppose there may be some virtue in renewing the motions to strike which the defendants made, and I should like to renew them and include within them, without taking the time to supply details, the various exhibits that have been offered since the defendants closed their case, the point being, of course, that we have taken the position throughout as to all these exhibits that exhibits affecting one defendant were not admissible against others, and they have never been connected until this time.

Judge Hand: Well, that will be denied.

Mr. Caskey: Denied as to all of them?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: And may they all have the benefit of an exception?

Judge Hand: Yes. But the time is coming when you do not have to take it. I think it has come under the new rule. I do not know too much about the new rule. Hasn't it?

Judge Bright: Yes.

Judge Hand: Now, Mr. Wright, you want to put on the record motions to do all kinds of things, too?

Mr. Wright: That is correct, Judge.

Judge Hand: So as to show that you too have not been idle?

Mr. Wright: I cannot claim any activity in that connection myself, but one of my assistants has been laboring with that problem for a week.

Mr. Proskauer: Why not insert in the record any motion you want and let the Court deny it now?

Mr. Wright: That is agreeable.

Judge Hand: Is there anything more anybody wants to do except put in briefs and argue the case?

(3401)

Mr. Proskauer: That is all I want.

Judge Hand: Now when will you be ready with your brief, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Well, we are wholly in sympathy with the Court's program of disposing of the case at the earliest possible moment. As I recall, your Honor has definitely set a date for argument as either the 3rd or 4th of January, or at least some time in the first week. Now, we, of course, would like to get a brief from the defendants as far in advance of that argument as we can. That is our problem, and we will do anything possible in the way of serving our brief so that we may have a brief from them at the earliest possible date. I had originally suggested an exchange with that in view, but even if we must file ours first, we would certainly do it at such time as would compel them to file a brief at least a week or more in advance of argument.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, may I suggest this: This case has been a great physical strain due to the shorthand way it was put in. Now, all of my associates here who are going to have the burden of effectual briefing here are unanimous that we cannot do a job under three weeks after we get the Government's brief. I assure your Honors that we older men feel that is a wholly reasonable position. There is such a mass of detail here. So whatever Mr. Wright says as to his necessities, I would suggest you grant them and give us three weeks, and then set the argument down for a week after the expiration of that three weeks, and we can have our reply briefs either on the argument or shortly after that, as your Honors may direct.

Judge Hand: How about that, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: I think a week prior to argument is fairly short. We would rather have ten days, but that is——

Judge Hand: Well, all right, we will give you ten days. You have been very cooperative, and we are certainly very grateful. It has been a very pleasant trial, with very pleasant, accomplished people. I do not want to leave a bad taste in anybody's mouth, except the man who is discontented with the ultimate decision, who, I suppose, is never satisfied.

(Discussion off the record.)

Judge Hand: Now, Mr. Wright, what have you got to say in view of all these things? What do you want? Your main brief you will be ready to serve, I take it, about the 10th of December?

Mr. Wright: That is a very tight squeeze, I think, for us. We will endeavor to get, if the defendants are to have three weeks after for theirs, I suppose we would have to file on the 10th. If we were still going to have a week before argument, theirs would be the 31st, then I assume the argument would go into the second week in January.

Judge Hand: Yes, I rather think that will have to be so. I think probably both of you need a little more time to get ready after these main briefs are in. Of course, reply briefs ordinarily, unless they bring up some new point——

Mr. Proskauer: They never amount to anything, your Honor.

Judge Hand: Well, they sometimes do, but they generally do not, I will admit. But sometimes they do a great deal. In the Circuit of Appeals they have sometimes been responsible for deciding a case.

Mr. Wright: Now, in Washington there is just one qualification. We have a very serious typing problem, with the multiple defendants and the Court. If there was some way we could arrange to have service on, let us say, a common agent for these five, and one for the other three, so that we could serve a brief which has been run once on the typewriter on the due date, which, of course, we will have printed up later, I think we could meet that December 10th date, providing we could make service in that manner.

Mr. Proskauer: How many copies would you give us?

Mr. Wright: Well, we would have one run, which would be an original and six. I suppose that would mean three for the Court, and we would have to have at least one for our file——

Mr. Proskauer: It is all right, we will print it overnight.

Judge Hand: Do you want the 15th, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Well, if that is going to extend their time I don't want the 15th. I want to keep——

Judge Hand: Of course it has got to extend their time. I do not believe they can get their stuff in in less than three weeks. What I am awfully anxious about is the length of these briefs. I am death on long briefs. I know you have a lot of things to discuss, but I am death on long briefs. They confuse and they multiply confusions.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Wright: As far as I am concerned I am willing to abide by any page limitation or other limitation you wish to set on our brief now. I believe too in short briefs. I did serve you with voluminous appendices on that trial brief, but I did supply a 25-page brief.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, in this case I think we are going to find ourselves in the position of serving briefs with certain supplemental schedules that you would not read unless you were in doubt as to some fact. Now for example, let me illustrate what I mean. Mr. Caskey has prepared a very elaborate analysis of all these appeal board decisions. I think we ought to hand that to your Honors. But in the brief proper we would reason certain deductions from that long analysis, and the analysis would be just handed to you separately. So I am going to suggest to your Honors, do not give us an artificial form here. Just admonish us that we are going to get much more favorable consideration from the Court if we do not burden them with extensive briefs, and I think we shall obey.

Judge Hand: And you can probably plan that out with one another so as to avoid duplication.

Mr. Proskauer: We are going to do our best to avoid repetition in the briefs.

Judge Hand: All right. Now when do you want to serve your brief, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: We will accept the extra five days that your Honors generously offered and take the 15th.

Judge Hand: All right, the 15th of December.

Mr. Wright: That is with the understanding that we make only two copies available to all the defendants——

Mr. Seymour: That is not very practical. I understood Mr. Wright to say he could not do that on December 10th. Unfortunately, their habit of charting makes it very difficult for us to reproduce it properly here.

Judge Hand: Yes, I think so. You had better get it here in suitable form, and stir up the Government Printing Office——

Mr. Wright: I am sure we cannot get a printed brief by the 15th. That is something I have had up with them many times. I cannot get a brief printed in that office within two weeks of the time I submit the original copy. That is the fact as it now is. It is impossible to serve printed briefs.

Judge Hand: Well, they will have great difficulty in their references then.

Mr. Wright: They say they have the facilities here for printing a copy on receipt for their own use, and I propose to give them as many copies as we get from one run of the typewriter.

Mr. Proskauer: Don't worry about that, your Honors. We will print their brief overnight.

Judge Bright: You did not plan to give the Court a typewritten copy, did you?

Mr. Wright: Well, if the Court——

Judge Bright: Why not give counsel our typewritten copies and furnish us with the printed copies?

Mr. Wright: That would be agreeable. If your Honors are willing to wait we could then serve——

Judge Bright: You could use those typewritten copies, give them to counsel, and serve us only with a printed one.

Mr. Wright: Yes. We can then serve six copies, and that should be enough for the defendants.

Judge Hand: What is the other proposition?

Mr. Proskauer: My proposition is, your Honor, we will get their brief on Saturday, the 15th, and I suggest that we serve our brief then on Monday, January 7th. That gives us the weekend and three weeks.

Judge Hand: Yes, I think you will have to do that.

Mr. Proskauer: And then you can set the argument, as far as we are concerned, on any day that is agreeable to your Honors and the Government.

Judge Hand: Well, we will probably set it—what day would be the 15th of January?

Mr. Caskey: Tuesday, sir.

Judge Hand: Tuesday. Would that be all right for you?

Mr. Wright: Well, we were to get their briefs when?

Mr. Proskauer: Monday, the 7th.

Mr. Wright: Yes, we could go ahead then.

Judge Hand: And then you can get up any reply you want meanwhile. And I should think that ought to be one brief with such charges as you wish to make against the various defendants under a single cover anyway.

I want to remind the defendants now that this does not provide for their having anything really before their argument in the way of a reply brief. What do you care about that?

Mr. Proskauer: Personally I don't. I don't know what anybody else does.

Mr. Davis: I don't, for one.

Judge Hand: All right. They have an indifference to your reply brief, Mr. Wright, which may tend to abbreviate it, I don't know.

Mr. Wright: I did not understand that there was any limitation on our reply. I thought we wanted the time so that we could get ready for the argument. We might wish, and I assume we would have an opportunity to file a reply brief within a few days after the argument. I do not believe we could actually get a brief on file within seven days of the receipt of their brief.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, that is perfectly agreeable to us. Let us just exchange the main briefs, but I think that must mean, of course, Mr. Wright, that you are not going to serve us a pro forma main brief, reserving your fire for your reply brief?

Mr. Wright: We will do the best job we can to make it a complete and full presentation.

Judge Hand: All right. We thank you very much, and we will now adjourn to January 15th for the argument. The various briefs to be dealt with as we have indicated.

(Adjourned until January 15th, 1946, at 10:30 a.m.)

PLAINTIFF'S MOTION TO STRIKE OUT CERTAIN TESTIMONY OFFERED BY THE DEFENDANTS

The defendants having rested their case, plaintiff hereby moves to strike out the following testimony offered on their behalf on the grounds hereinafter stated:

Plaintiff moves to strike out the following testimony as incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial because it was either:

a) a conclusion of ultimate fact which was for the Court to draw from facts in evidence, or

b) a conclusion of ultimate fact based upon unoffered primary evidence within the control of the offering defendants, or

c) represented mere speculation based upon facts not in evidence, or

d) was an argument unsupported by facts in evidence, or

e) seeks to establish a reasonable use of a power to exclude competitors and fix prices which is illegal per se:

(1) The statements of William F. Rodgers, General Sales Manager and Vice-President of Loew's, Inc.:

(a) that the system of runs used in the industry is necessary, the reasons therefor, and that it is the only basis on which you can afford to invest large amounts of money in pictures; and stating what would happen if pictures were shown simultaneously without priority of run (fols. 602-4).

(b) that in negotiating runs he applies the same criteria for theatres affiliated with the co-defendants as he does to theatres owned by independents (fol. 606).

(c) that he has no agreement, contract, understanding or concert of action with the co-defendants or any of their officers or agents regarding the run that should be given to any theatre (fol. 607).

(d) that if clearance were not given the first-run exhibitor, the subsequent run exhibitors would advertise the picture while the first or other prior run exhibitor is playing it; and stating that only in this way can their collective business be handled (fols. 608-9).

(e) that in fixing clearance he disregards the fact that the theatre involved is affiliated with a co-defendant or with a circuit (fol. 611).

(f) that there is not and never has been any agreement beween himself or Loew's with any defendant as to the time or place of clearance, or the granting of clearance to any particular theatre (fol. 611).

(g) that the exhibitor prefers to buy a season's product (3412) at one time, and that he believes this method is better for the exhibitor (fols. 614-15).

(h) as to advantages to exhibitor of fixing compensation on a percentage rather than a flat rental (fol. 619).

(i) that he does not make the licensing of Loew's pictures to a theatre of a co-defendant dependent as to price, terms or duration, on what that co-defendant may be licensing him (fols. 626-7).

(j) that the theatre owner in specifying the admission price expects to get his availability in many cases based upon the price of admission that he charges (fol. 630).

(k) denying that he procured information relating to the business of the co-dependants, or of competitors from the audit reports (fol. 633).

Plaintiff's Motion to Strike Out Certain Testimony Offered by the Defendants

(l) that there is no agreed division of territory between Loew's and any co-defendant, as far as exhibition or sales is concerned (fol. 634).

(m) that there is no relationship between negotiations or arrangements for the showing of Paramount pictures in Loew's theatres and the licensing of Loew's pictures in Paramount's theatres (fol. 757).

(n) that he has never conditioned the licensing of Loew's pictures to Fox West Coast theatres, upon Fox licensing its pictures to Loew's theatres; and that the subject has never been discussed; also that the same is true as to National Theatre groups operating out of Seattle, Denver, Milwaukee and Kansas City (fol. 763).

(o) that the licensing of Loew's pictures to the California group is never conditioned upon the licensing of the pictures in any or all of the theatre groups in Seattle, Denver, Milwaukee or Kansas City (fol. 763).

(p) that none of the groups described in (o) above have conditioned the licensing of Loew's pictures upon Loew's licensing the other groups (fol. 764).

(q) that in licensing R.K.O. theatres there was no conditioning of the showing of R.K.O. pictures in Loew's theatres (fol. 767).

(r) that Republic, Monogram and P.R.C. carry on certain distribution activities and general statements as to what they do (fols. 768-71).

(2) The statements of Adolph Zukor, Chairman of the Board of Paramount Pictures, Inc.:

Plaintiff's Motion to Strike Out Certain Testimony Offered by the Defendants

(a) purporting to set forth the reasons why Paramount Pictures, Inc. acquired theatres (fols. 853 to 858).

(b) that the acquisition of theatres by Paramount Pictures, Inc. was not for the purpose of monopolizing the exhibition of motion pictures in the United States (fol. 859).

(c) that Paramount has not at any time monopolized the exhibition of pictures in the United States (fol. 860).

(d) that distribution and exhibition of motion pictures has always been highly competitive (fol. 861).

(e) that Paramount is in competition with the co-defendants and independents in production, distribution and exhibition, at all levels and in all branches (fol. 861).

(f) that the cost of a first class picture has increased from between 40 and 60 thousand dollars, when he went in business, to $1,500,000 to $2,000,000 today; and some cost $3,000,000 (fol. 862).

(g) that there is not and has not been any agreement or understanding among the defendants, or any of them, to restrain competition in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures in the United States (fol. 864).

(h) that there is not and has not been any agreement or understanding among the defendants, or any of them, to aid and assist one another in the loaning and exchanging of production personnel and to deal with one another on uniform, non-competitive terms (fol. 864).

(i) that there has not been any agreement or understanding to withhold any production personnel and equipment from any producer of motion pictures (fol. 865).

(j) that there is not and has not been, any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to exclude independent producers from access to production personnel or to withhold production equipment owned by the defendants or any of them on the same terms on which they are made available to the defendants (fol. 865).

(k) that there is not and has not been any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any of them to fix the terms upon which pictures would be licensed to any exhibitor in the United States (fol. 865).

(l) that there is not and has not been any agreement among the defendants or any of them to license pictures in any theatres before they have been produced and before any exhibitor has had a fair opportunity to estimate the value and character of the film and before it has been trade-shown (fol. 866).

(m) that there is not and has not been, any agreement or understanding among any of the defendants to condition the licensing of films or group of films upon the licensing of another film or group of films (fol. 866).

(n) that there is not and has not been any agreement or understanding among any defendants to condition the licensing of films in a theatre or theatres upon the licensing of film in another theatre or theatres (fol. 866).

(o) that there is not and has not been any agreement or understanding among any defendants to enter into long term franchises with circuits of theatres or to suppress competition offered by competing theatres during the term of such long term franchises or to preclude independent distributors from licensing their pictures to such circuit theatres (fol. 866).

(p) that there is not and has not been any agreement or understanding among any defendants with respect to the license terms granted to circuit theatres because such theatres are part of the circuit (fol. 866).

(q) that there is not and has not been any agreement or understanding among any defendants in licensing their pictures to favor the theatres in which any defendant had an interest against theatres not affiliated, with respect to run, clearance, license fee or any other terms of licensing (fol. 867).

(r) that there is not and has not been any agreement or understanding among the defendants or any two or more of them to license pictures for exhibition in the theatres in (3417) which one of the defendants had an interest, on condition or in consideration of another licensing its pictures with respect to the pictures distributed by the other (fol. 867).

(s) that there is not and has not been any agreement or understanding among any of the defendants to exclude independently produced pictures from theatres in which any defendant has an interest (fol. 868).

(t) that there is not and has not been any agreement or understanding among any defendants to exclude unaffiliated exhibitors from the operation of competing first-run theatres in places where theatres affiliated with defendants are located (fol. 868).

(u) that there is not and has not been any agreement or understanding among any defendants to exclude unaffiliated exhibitors from operating competing theatres on the same run as the subsequent run affiliated theatres in places where affiliated theatres are located (fol. 868).

(v) that there is not and has not been any agreement or understanding among any defendants to use the first and early run affiliated theatres to control the film supply, run, clearance and admission price of operators of competing unaffiliated theatres in places where affiliated theatres are located and elsewhere. (fol. 869).

(w) that there is not and has not been any agreement or understanding among any defendants as to the terms upon which each or any of them would license their film to unaffiliatde exhibitors (fol. 869).

(x) that there is not and has not been any agreement or understanding among any defendants to deprive any theatre operator of film supply or to withhold film from an unaffiliated exhibitor or to limit the terms and conditions on which licenses would be made to any unaffiliated exhibitor (fol. 869).

(y) that there is not and has not been any agreement or understanding among any defendants to divide available films among affiliated theatres owned or controlled by two or more producer—exhibitor defendants located in the same competitive area without competitive negotiations (fol. 869).

(z) that there is not and has not been any agreement or understanding among any defendants not to compete with each other in licensing pictures to be exhibited in places where two or more of them had interests in theatres (fol. 869).

(aa) that there is not and has not been any understanding or agreement among any defendants to enter into joint agreements with respect to a theatre whereby film buying control or operation proceeds is divided between two or more exhibitor defendants for the purpose of restraining competition unreasonably or monopolizing exhibition or distribution with respect to such theatre (fol. 870).

(bb) that there is not and has not been any understanding or agreement among any defendants to refrain from building, buying or offering to lease theatres in areas where they might compete with existing affiliated theatres (fol. 870).

(cc) that there is not or has not been any agreement or understanding among any defendants to acquire a monopoly or to monopolize the business of exhibiting pictures in the United States or any city or town thereof (fol. 870).

(dd) that as far as his company is concerned there was never any agreement with Warner's or anybody else as to where his company or Warner's should operate or what the two respective companies should do (fols. 873-4).

(ee) that he never made any agreement with Warner's or anybody regarding subject covered in (dd), (fol. 874).

(ff) that there was no agreement not to go into any territory where Warner's had theatres or for Warner's not to go into territory where Paramount had theatres or an interest therein (fol. 874).

(3) The statements of Y. Frank Freeman, Vice-President of Paramount, and until October 1944 in charge of their studio operations in Hollywood:

(a) that since 1938 the cost of the production of a top bracket picture has increased 100 to 150% (fols. 822-3).

(b) that competitive bidding results in prices as high as $450 for a stage play for production of a picture (fol. 884).

(c) that there is no agreement or understanding to limit the practice of exchanging stars, production material, etc. to the defendants in this case (fol. 902).

Plaintiff's Motion to Strike Out Certain Testimony Offered by the Defendants

(4) The statements of Charles M. Reagan, Vice-President of Paramount Pictures, Inc. in charge of sales for the United States and Canada:

(a) that the cost of production of Paramount pictures has been going up; that the cost of production is much greater than it was even a few years ago (fol. 947).

(b) that there is no joint advertising by the distributors about all their pictures (fol. 956).

(c) that there is no discrimination between affiliated and independent theatres in cooperative advertising (fol. 957). (3421)

(d) that there is no relationship between his negotiations, or that of his colleagues, with Loew's Inc. for the licensing of Paramount pictures in Loew's theatres and the negotiations for the licensing of Metro pictures in theatres in which Paramount has an interest (fol. 965).

(e) that as to negotiations or arrangements made or under way for exhibition of Warner pictures in Paramount theatres, there is no relationship between them; and vice versa (fol. 969).

(f) that the deals are indiscriminately negotiated (fol. 981).

(g) that in selecting the theatre to which Paramount pictures will be licensed first run, he doesn't apply any different criterion to the theatres in which the defendants have an interest than he does where they have no interest (fol. 991).

(h) that there is keen competition in the distribution of films (fol. 986).

(i) that where one distributor grants clearance that is identical or nearly identical to the clearance granted by another distributor to the same theatre, this is not the result of any agreement or understanding between the distributors (fol. 999).

(j) that exhibitors generally charge the same admission price over a long period of time and the reasons therefor (fol. 1015). (3422)

(k) that the public would object if admission prices were changed from picture to picture, or repeatedly (fols. 1015-16).

(l) that with reference to admission charges there is no difference whether an exhibitor is independent or affiliated (fol. 1016).

(m) that the frequent uniformity of minimum admission prices in contracts with a particular exhibitor from several distributors, does not result from any agreement or understanding between the distributors (fol. 1016).

(n) that the fact that various subsequent runs have about the same admission prices in the same area does not result from any agreement or understanding between the distributors (fol. 1018).

(o) that one exhibitor will decide to charge a certain admission price and if the theatre is successful the others quickly copy him (fol. 1018).

(p) that there is no difference in the consideration given to cancellations depending on the source of the request (fol. 1024).

(q) that the fact of whether a defendant has an interest in a theatre or not does not affect whether his product is split (fol. 1025). (3423)

Plaintiff's Motion to Strike Out Certain Testimony Offered by the Defendants

(r) that he could not effectively offer to license his pictures on the basis of competitive bidding (fol. 1035).

(s) that the licensing of Paramount pictures to Loew's Inc. on a particular run in New York City, and the licensing of pictures of other distributors either to Loew's, Inc. or R.K.O. is not the result of any understanding or agreement between the distributors (fol. 1138).

(t) that the fact that Paramount licenses to Loew's, Inc. on certain runs is not to the result of any agreement between distributors other than Paramount and Loew's (fol. 1139).

5. The statements of Martin J. Mullin, Vice-President and General Manager of M. & P. Theatres; Vice-President of New England Theatres; an officer of Publix Notoco and President of its subsidiaries;

(a) that there is no relationship between the terms of film deals for theatres he operates and negotiations or arrangements made for licensing or exhibiting Paramount films in theatres of any other defendant (fols. 1343-44).

(b) giving his theory as to what would happen if his (3424) admission prices were changed regularly (fols. 1348-49).

(6) The statements of John J. Friedl, President and General Manager of Minnesota Amusement Company:

(a) giving his theory as to the economic condition of the industry at the time an operating agreement between R.K.O. and Minnesota Amusement was in effect (fols. 1376 to 1378).

(b) that there is no relationship between his negotiations with distributors and negotiations or arrangements which may be made by Paramount or the distributors with respect to other theatres (fol. 1385).

(c) that the length of clearance has nothing to do with whether the theatre is one of his or that of an independent (fols. 1396-97).

(d) that there is no difference in clearance based upon the fact of affiliation (fol. 1399a).

(e) that to the best of his knowledge the similarity of clearance does not result from any agreement or understanding aomng the distributors (fol. 1424).

(7) The statements of Edward C. Beatty, President and Treasurer of W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc. and Butterfield Theatres Corporation:

(a) that the status of operation of R.K.O. theatres in (3425)
Grand Rapdis, Michigan, was very poor in 1933 (fol. 1440).

(b) that one theatre referred to above in Grand Rapids, Michigan, was closed because of the lack of business and that the other one was not very successful (fol. 1440).

(c) that due to changes in theatres after an operating agreement was effected, the public got better facilities for seeing pictures in Grand Rapids, Michigan (fol. 1442).

(d) contained in his affidavit supplementing the testimony he gave on the witness stand (fols. 3385-88).

(8) The statements of Spyros P. Skouras, President of Fox:

(a) giving negative answers to the so-called "Zukor" questions concerning conspiracy, unreasonable restraint of trade and monopoly (fols. 1453 to 1458-a).

(9) Statements of William J. Kupper, General Sales Manager of Fox:

Plaintiff's Motion to Strike Out Certain Testimony Offered by the Defendants

(a) that the first run exhibitor would not object if subsequent runs charged higher admission prices than specified in the contract (fol. 1504).

(b) that the length of time a picture will play in a first run theatre of Loew's Inc. in Worcester is not conditioned (3426) upon the length of time Fox will play a Loew's picture (fol. 1538).

(c) that there is no exchange of screen time between the defendants (fol. 1538).

(d) that his company and the other defendants have not "ganged up" on the independent exhibitors (fol. 1628).

(e) giving negative answers to the so-called "Zukor" questions concerning conspiracy, unreasonable restraint of trade and monopoly (fol. 1628).

(f) that there is no relationship between licenses Fox negotiates with Paramount operating companies for exhibition of Fox pictures in Paramount theatres and licenses for Paramount pictures in Fox theatres; and also the same statements (by stipulation) as to the other defendants (fol. 1629).

(g) that no exhibitor who has followed an affiliated exhibitor has been prejudiced or injured by omission of admission prices from the contract (fol. 1695).

(h) and all of his statements contained in a pamphlet entitled "Extension of Wm. J. Kupper Testimony"—pages 1 thru 94, (Exhibit F-30, fol. 3397).

(10) The statements of A. W. Smith, Jr., Eastern Sales Manager of Fox and having jurisdiction over exchanges in the Eastern part of the country:

(a) giving negative answers (by stipulation) to the so-called "Zukor" questions relating to conspiracy, unreasonable restraint of trade and monopoly; and giving negative answers to the so-called "Skouras" questions relating to conspiracy, unreasonable restraint of trade and monopoly (fol. 1697).

(11) The statements of Joseph M. Schenck, an executive in the production department of Fox:

(a) giving the reasons why Charlie Chaplan did not subscribe to a franchise which gave United Artists' Circuit theatres exclusive right to first run exhibition of United Artists' pictures in towns where they were located (fol. 1706).

(b) that he had no knowledge of an agreement among any of the defendants to aid or assist one another in loaning and exchanging production personnel and deal with each other on non-competitive basis (fol. 1711).

(c) giving negative answers to the so-called "Zukor" questions relating to conspiracy, restraint of trade and monopoly as to production personnel and equipment (fols. 1711-12).

(d) giving negative answers to the so-called "Zukor" (3428) questions relating to conspiracy; restraint of trade and monopoly as to general activities of the defendants (fols. 1712 to 1715).

(12) The statements of Felix A. Jenkins, Secretary and Director of Fox:

(a) that Fox has not conspired with any other defendant or defendants to monopolize or restrain trade and commerce (affidavit—stipulated) (fol. 1730).

Plaintiff's Motion to Strike Out Certain Testimony Offered by the Defendants

(13) The statements of Abraham Montague, General Sales Manager of Columbia:

(a) that the exhibitor knew what he was buying when he bought a year's product (fol. 1736).

(b) that "blind selling" or "block booking" is the most satisfactory method of distribution from the exhibitor's standpoint (fol. 1737).

(c) that the "block booking" method of selling is vital to Columbia and his theory as to why (fols. 1737-38).

(d) that his company has no understanding, arrangement or agreement with any defendant except the contracts for exhibition of pictures in their theatres (fol. 1739).

(e) that Columbia spent $1,632,300 for production in 1928 and that amount has increased each year (fol. 1740). (3429)

(f) that Columbia faces competition from all defendants (fol. 1743).

(g) that his company treats affiliated and independents the same as to selectivity (fol. 1750).

(h) that the action of NRA affected standard contracts, admission prices, etc. and that this was for the protection of the exhibitor (fols. 1751-52).

(i) that exhibitors have been very successful in the last ten years (fol. 1754).

(j) giving his reasons why "block booking" is necessary for Columbia and his theory as to what would happen without it (fols. 1754-55).

(k) that the situations applicable as to Columbia also apply to Republic, P.R.C., Universal, and Monogram (fol. 1789).

(l) as to the general activities of other companies and associations (fols. 1790 to 1794).

(m) that the subsequent run theatres have been very prosperous in the past ten years (fol. 1799).

(n) that the cost of top pictures has increased in the last ten years, giving the figures (fol. 1801).

(o) that there is no relationship between licenses granted one Paramount affiliate (Minnesota Amusement) and those granted another (New England) (fol. 1802).

(p) giving negative answers to the so-called "Zukor" questions relating to conspiracy, restraint of trade and monopoly (by stipulation) (fol. 1808).

(14) The statements of Paul N. Lazarus, Manager of the Contract Department of United Artists:

(a) giving negative answers to the so-called "Zukor" questions relating to cosnpiracy, restraint of trade, and monopoly (fol. 1948).

(15) The statements of Harry J. Muller, Treasurer of United Artists:

(a) that there has been a progressive increase in the cost of domestic distribution during the last ten years, (with exceptions) (fol. 1995).

(b) that advertising cost from 1945 to date is 35% higher than corresponding period of last year (fol. 1995).

(16) The statements of Edward C. Raftery, President of United Artists:

Plaintiff's Motion to Strike Out Certain Testimony Offered by the Defendants

(a) giving negative answers (by stipulation) to the so-called "Zukor" questions relating to conspiracy, restraint of trade and monopoly (fol. 1998).

(17) The statements of William A. Scully, Vice-President and General Sales Manager of Universal:

(a) that independents and affiliates are treated alike regarding selectivity (p. 2017).

(b) indicating the desires of exhibitors regarding product (fols. 2017-18).

(c) that exhibitors like "block booking" and why (fol. 2018).

(d) giving negative answers to the so-called "Zukor" questions relating to conspiracy, restraint of trade and monopoly (fol. 2036).

(e) that his company does not discriminate between independents and affiliates (fol. 2036).

(18) The statements of Benjamin Kalmenson, Sales Manager of Warner:

(a) That no contracts since 1938 contain covenant on part of Warner to require subsequent run exhibitor to charge any particular price (fol. 2069).

(b) that most Warner contracts do not refer at all to subsequent admission prices as criterion of clearance (fol. 2071).

(c) that showing in their own theatres benefit first and subsequent run exhibitors (fol. 2076).

Plaintiff's Motion to Strike Out Certain Testimony Offered by the Defendants

(d) giving negative answers to the so-called "Zukor" (3432) questions relating to conspiracy, restraint of trade and monopoly (fol. 2077).

(e) that his company uses no devices to discriminate against independent exhibitors (fol. 2077).

(19) Statements of Jason J. Joy, Executive of Fox, having charge of all personnel at studio except actors;

(a) that no distinction is made as to whether producer is affiliated or independent in deciding whether they will lend a star or feature player (fol. 2100).

(b) that the cost of producing pictures increased during the last ten years (fol. 2125).

(c) that competition for books, plays and similar material applies to all companies (fol. 2128).

(20) The statements of Harry M. Warner, President of Warner:

(a) that his company has not monopolized, etc. (by stipulation) (fol. 2129).

(b) that the only way to solve their difficulties was to acquire theatres (fol. 2132).

(c) that theatres were not acquired to avoid competition (fol. 2134).

(d) that First National was not acquired to stifle competition in production and distribution (fol. 2135).

(e) denying that Warner conditions licensing to other defendants on reciprocal basis (fol. 2137).

(f) that divorcement of theatres will jeopardize the industry (fol. 2140).

Plaintiff's Motion to Strike Out Certain Testimony Offered by the Defendants

(g) giving negative answers to the so-called "Zukor" questions relating to conspiracy, restraint of trade, and monopoly (fols. 2141 to 2146a).

(21) The statements of Barney Balaban, President of Paramount:

(a) giving negative answers to the so-called "Zukor" questions relating to conspiracy, restraint of trade, and monopoly (fol. 2147).

(22) The statements of Nathaniel P. Rathvon, President of R.K.O.:

(a) giving his theory as to the advantages of integration of production, distribution and exhibition; and the effect of their separation (fol. 2217).

(23) The statements of Robert Mochrie, General Sales Manager of R.K.O.:

(a) that the annual cost of operating the R.K.O. distribution system is in excess of $7,000,000 (fol. 2308).

(b) that his company and the other distributor-defendants have never combined and conspired to monopolize the distribution of motion pictures and to exclude from that business independently produced pictures, and that his company has no such understandings or agreements (fols. 2311-12).

(c) that in selling pictures his company is competing and did compete during the 1943-44 season with some companies (fol. 2312).

(d) that in selling to independents or affiliates he does not make any distinction between them as to whether he will insist on a block of five or not (fol. 2318).

(e) that the fact that a theatre is or is not affiliated with one of the integrated companies does not constitute a factor in his choice of customers (fol. 2328).

(f) that there is no difference in applying his company's policy between towns where the first run theatres are both affiliated and independent and towns where all the first run theatres are independent (fol. 2331).

(g) that there is no agreement between R.K.O. and any other defendant whereby R.K.O. agrees that it will continue to serve its present customers and will not entertain bids from others (fols. 2336-37).

(h) that the fact that the theatre is affiliated or independent has nothing to do with the length of time that R.K.O. will run a picture; and that he fights with all of them to run pictures as long as he can get them to (fol. 2339).

(i) that the fact that a theatre is operated or controlled by an integrated company does not constitute any factor at all in deciding the clearance to be granted it (fol. 2339).

(j) that he has no agreements or understandings that he will adopt the same clearance (fol. 2349).

(k) that in making certain contracts he did not differentiate between theatres operated or controlled by integrated companies or other theatres (fol. 2351).

(l) that in licensing his pictures for exhibition in theatres affiliated with another defendant, he does not agree in the contract or agree orally upon the admission price to be charged by subsequent run theatres (fol. 2361).

(m) that he has never licensed R.K.O. pictures to theatres affiliated with an integrated company on the condition or understanding that that company extend particular terms to any R.K.O. theatres (fol. 2362).

(n) that the fact that an integrated company licensed (3436) pictures to any of R.K.O.'s theatres does not in any way effect his readiness to license his pictures to theatres affiliated with such an integrated company; or have any bearing on the terms which he will extend to theatres affiliated with such integrated company (fol. 2362).

(o) that he is in absolute, keen, continuous competition all of the time to sell pictures (fols. 2368-69).

(p) that the subsequent run exhibitor prefers the pictures which have a longer first run over the one that has a shorter first run; and that he (the subsequent run exhibitor) has found from experience that it will gross more business for him and certainly he wants it (fol. 2403).

(q) that he (the subsequent run exhibitor) does not suffer the inconvenience of not knowing the exact date on which he is going to get that picture; he (the witness) thinks the subsequent run exhibitor is glad to have a picture like that available to him (fols. 2403-04).

(24) Part of R.K.O.'s Exhibit 25 as follows:

(a) that part of Exhibit R.K.O.-25 which gives the acquisition cost of the various theatres shown in the table (fol. 2473).

Plaintiff's Motion to Strike Out Certain Testimony Offered by the Defendants

(25) Warner's Exhibit W-5 which is a table giving total film rentals received by Warner and its subsidiaries from domestic and foreign sources (fol. 2479).

(26) Warner's Exhibit W-10 which is a table for the years 1931 to 1945 purporting to show the cost of American-made Warner Feature Pictures and the average theatre admission prices at Warner theatres (fol. 2483).

(27) Warner's Exhibit W-11 which is a table for the years 1937 to 1944 purporting to show percentage of Warner Film Cost paid to Warner as film rental by Warner theatres and theatres affiliated with other four Distributor Defendants (fol. 2485).

(28) Warner's Exhibit W-12 which is a schedule showing a comparison of the cost of the positive print of "Princess O'Rourke" and the average film rental per booking (fol. 2486).

(29) The statements of Joseph Bernhard, head of Warner's Theatre Department until November 7, 1945:

(a) that Warner's did not acquire an interest in any theatre during his tenure of office with the purpose of having theatres where they would not be in competition with the theatres of any other person or company; and that there was no agreement or understanding, express or implied, to such effect (fol. 2496).

(b) that all of their theatres were acquired in the open market and in most cases in open and keen competition; and some of such theatres were acquired in competition with competing companies engaged in producing pictures (fol. 2487).

(c) that as head of the Theatre Department he has had no policy for the expansion of theatre holdings (fol. 2497).

(d) that any theatres acquired during the time he was employed by Warner were to protect their business and meet varying economic conditions, shift of populations or needs caused by obsolescence which had arisen with the changes over the years (fol. 2497).

(e) that he always operated the Theatre Department separate and apart from the Distribution Department and has never allowed the operations of the Distribution Department to influence his judgment in the licensing of pictures for the Theatre Department (fol. 2497).

(f) Warner's Exhibit W-15 purporting to give a collation from the Theatre Department and Distribution Department of instances bearing out the witness's testimony (fols. 2497-8).

(g) giving negative answers to questions relating to con- (3439) spiracy, restraint of trade and monopoly similar to the Skouras' answers pertaining to the same subject (fols. 2499 to 2504).

(30) The statements of Nicholas N. Schenck, President of Loew's:

(a) that there is not now and has not been any contract, agreement, understanding or concert of action between Loew's Incorporated and any one or more of the defendants with respect to matters described as (1), (2), (3), (4), (5), (6), (7), (8), (9), (10), (11), (12), (13), (14), (15), (16), and (17) in his testimony (fols. 2514 to 2517).

(b) that with the exception of individual license contracts entered into between Loew's and other distributors or vice-versa, there has been no combination of the defendants to do the acts mentioned in (a) above, after the ending of the National Recovery Act (fol. 2517).

(c) that Loew's has not prevented any defendant or any independent producer from competing with Loew's in the production of films (fols. 2517).

(d) that Loew's has not prevented any defendant or independent distributor from competing with Loew's in the distribution of films (fol. 2518).

(e) that Loew's has not prevented any defendant or any unaffiliated exhibitor from competing with Loew's in the operation of theatres (fol. 2518).

(f) that Loew's has never discriminated in favor of "affiliated" or "circuit" theatres and against "independent" theatres with respect to any of the license terms granted because of the fact of being a part of a cricuit or because of such affiliation (fol. 2518).

(g) that Loew's has never conditioned its granting a license for the exhibition of films distributed by Loew's in theatres operated or controlled by another producer-exhibitor defendant upon such other defendant granting Loew's a license for the exhibition of films distributed by such other defendant in theatres operated or controlled by Loew's (fol. 2518).

(h) that no other producer-exhibitor defendant ever has conditioned its granting Loew's a license for the exhibition of films distributed by such other defendant in theatres operated or controlled by Loew's upon Loew's granting a license for the exhibition of films distributed by Loew's in theatres operated or controlled by such other defendant (fol. 2518).

Plaintiff's Motion to Strike Out Certain Testimony Offered by the Defendants

(i) that Loew's has never had and does not now have, any agreement or understanding with any distributor with respect to the minimum admission prices which such dis- (3441)
tributor should insert in its licenses for any theatre or theatres not operated or controlled by Loew's (fols. 2518-19).

(j) that Loew's has never had and does not now have, any agreement or understanding with any distributor with respect to the run which such distributor should grant for any theatre or theatres not operated or controlled by Loew's or the order of sequence of runs between such theatres (fol. 2519).

(k) giving negative answers (by stipulation) to the so-called "Zukor" questions relating to conspiracy, unreasonable restraint of trade and monopoly (fol. 2519).

(31) The statements of Rudolph Berger, J. E. Flynn, E. K. O'Shea, J. J. Maloney and G. A. Hickey, Division Sales Managers of Loew's:

(a) that in the respective exchange areas over which they have supervision, there is not now and has not been any contract, agreement, understanding or concert of action between Loew's and any one or more of the defendants with respect to any of the matters set forth in paragraphs (1) through (13) under item "2" of their testimony (fols. 2523 to 2525).

(b) that except for the individual contracts licensing the exhibition of films which Loew's as a distributor or ex- (3442) hibitor has made with any of the defendants, there has not been any combination of the defendants to do the acts specified in paragraph (a) above at any time after the ending of the National Recovery Act (fol. 2525).

(c) that Loew's has not prevented any defendant or any independent distributor from competing with Loew's in the distribution of films (fol. 2525).

(d) that Loew's has never discriminated in favor of "affiliated" or "circuit" theatres and against "independent" theatres with respect to any of the license terms granted because of the fact of being a part of a circuit or because of affiliation (fols. 2525-26).

(e) that Loew's has never conditioned its granting a license for the exhibition of films distributed by Loew's in theatres operated or controlled by another producer-exhibitor defendant upon such other defendant granting Loew's a license for the exhibition of films distributed by such other defendant in theatres operated or controlled by Loew's (fol. 2526).

(f) that Loew's has no agreement or understanding with any prior run exhibitor either "affiliated" or "independent" fixed the minimum admission price which Loew's must insert in its license agreement with a subsequent run exhibitor (fol. 2526).

(32) The statements of Joseph R. Vogel and Charles C. Moskowitz, Vice-Presidents of Loew's and in charge of the theatres operated by that company:

(a) that there is not now and has not been any contract, agreement, understanding or concert of action between Loew's and any one or more of the defendants with respect to any of the matters described in paragraphs (1) through (11) under item "1" of their testimony (fols. 2527-28).

(b) that except for individual contracts licensing the exhibition of Loew's films, as a distributor or exhibitor, made with another defendant, there has been no combination of the defendants to do the acts outlined in (a) above at any time after the ending of the National Recovery Act (fol. 2529).

(c) that Loew's has not prevented any defendant or "unaffiliated" exhibitor from competing with Loew's in the operation of theatres (fol. 2529).

(d) that no other producer-exhibitor defendant has ever conditioned its granting Loew's a license for the exhibition of films distributed by such other defendant in theatres operated or controlled by Loew's upon Loew's granting a license for the exhibition of films distributed by Loew's in theatres operated or controlled by such other defendant (fol. 2529).

(e) that Loew's has no agreement or understanding with any distributor, either "affiliated" or "independent," fixing the minimum admission price which a subsequent run exhibitor of said distributor's feature pictures must charge (fol. 2529).

(33) The statements of George A. Smith, Western Division Sales Manager for Paramount:

(a) that in licensing Paramount pictures for exhibition in theatres in which any other defendant is interested, neither he nor his associates are concerned as to whether or not that defendant as a distributor licenses or refuses to license its pictures for exhibition in any theatre in which Paramount is interested, or with the terms upon which they are licensed (fol. 2560).

(b) that the Distribution Department is not concerned in any way with the matters mentioned in (a) above (fol. 2560).

(c) that in negotiating with the heads of the various exhibition companies associated with National Theatres Corporation such negotiations with these individuals are separately conducted and wholly independent of each other (fol. 2561).

(d) that the licensing of pictures with any of the National Theatres Corporation companies is not dependent in any way upon the success or failure of negotiations with any of the other companies (fol. 2561).

(e) that in negotiating with representatives of various companies associated with National Theatres Corporation he has no knowledge or information as to whether or not Fox is negotiating to license or has licensed Fox films for exhibition in any of the Paramount theatres (fol. 2561).

(f) that there is no relation whatever between his negotiations for the licensing of Paramount pictures and the licensing of Fox pictures for exhibition in any of the Paramount theatres (fol. 2561).

(g) that he never refuses to license Paramount pictures to the various theatre companies associated with National Theatres Corporation unless and until any of the theatres in which Paramount is interested has offered or concluded licenses for Fox pictures (fol. 2561).

(h) that except for individual license agreements made with a particular defendant for the exhibition of Paramount pictures in the theatres of that defendant, he does not have any agreement or understanding with any distributor as to whether Paramount will or will not license its pictures to any exhibitor, or as to terms, including run and clearance upon which Paramount pictures will be licensed to any exhibitor (fol. 2562).

Plaintiff's Motion to Strike Out Certain Testimony Offered by the Defendants

(i) that subject to the exceptions noted in (h) above, he does not have any agreement with any distributor as to the admission prices which are charged or to be charged by any "affiliated" or "unaffiliated" theatre (fol. 2562).

(j) that subject to the exceptions noted in (h) above, he does not communicate to any distributor the terms upon which Paramount has licensed or will license the exhibition of Paramount pictures to any "affiliated" or "unaffiliated" exhibitor (fols. 2562-3).

(k) that he does not receive any information as to the terms upon which other distributors have licensed or will license their pictures to any "affiliated" or "unaffiliated" exhibitor (fol. 2563).

(l) giving negative answers to the so-called "Zukor" questions relating to conspiracy, restraint of trade and monopoly (fol. 2579).

(34) The statements of William H. Erbb, Eastern Division Manager for Paramount:

(a) that in licensing Paramount's pictures for exhibition in theatres of other defendants, he and his associates are not concerned as to whether or not that defendant as a distributor licenses or refuses to license its pictures for exhibition in any Paramount theatre, or with the terms upon which they are licensed (fol. 2565).

(b) that the Distribution Department is not concerned in any way with the matters mentioned in (a) above and that such matters are beyond the functions of the Distribution Department (fols. 2565-6).

(c) that there is no relationship between his negotiations for the licensing of Paramount pictures to companies associated with Warner's and the licensing of the pictures of that defendant for exhibition in any Paramount theatres (fol. 2566).

(d) that he does not ever refuse to license Paramount pictures to companies associated with Warner's unless and until any of the Paramount theatres have offered or concluded licenses for the theatres of that defendant as a distributor (fols. 2566-67).

(e) that except for individual license agreements made with a particular defendant for the exhibition of Paramount pictures in theatres of that defendant, he has no agreement or understanding with any distributor as to whether Paramount will or will not license the exhibition of their pictures to any exhibitor, as to the terms, including the terms as to run and clearance upon which Paramount pictures will be licensed to any exhibitor (fol. 2567).

(f) that with the exceptions noted in (e) above, he does not have any agreement with any distributor as to the admission prices which are charged or to be charged by any "affiliated" or "unaffiliated" exhibitor (fol. 2567).

(35) The statements of James J. Donohue, Central Division Manager of Paramount:

(a) that except for individual license agreements made with a particular defendant for the exhibition of Paramount pictures in the theatres of that defendant, he does not have any agreement or understanding with any distributor as to whether Paramount will or will not license the exhibition of Paramount pictures to any exhibitor, or as to the terms, including the terms as to run and clearance upon which Paramount pictures will be licensed to any exhibitor (fols. 2571-72).

Plaintiff's Motion to Strike Out Certain Testimony Offered by the Defendants

(b) that subject to execptions stated in (a) above, he does not have any agreement with any distributor as to the admission prices which are charged or to be charged by any "affiliate" or "unaffiliated" exhibitor (fol. 2572).

(c) that subject to exceptions stated in (a) above, he does not communicate to any distributor the terms upon which Paramount has licensed or will license the exhibition of its pictures to any "affiliated" or "unaffiliated" exhibitor (fol. 2572).

(d) giving negative answers to the so-called "Zukor" questions relating to consiracy, restraint of trade and monopoly (fol. 2579).

(e) contained in an affidavit (folg. 2580 to 2618).

(36) The statements of Hugh Owen, Southern Division Manager of Paramount:

(a) that in licensing Paramount pictures for exhibition in theatres in which any other defendant is interested, he and his assistants are not concerned as to whether or not that defendant, as a distributor, licenses or refuses to license its picture for exhibition in any Paramount theatre, or with the terms upon which they are licensed (fol. 2575).

(b) that the Distribution Department is not concerned in any way with the matters mentioned in (a) above; and that such matters are entirely beyond the function of the Distribution Department (fol. 2575).

(c) that his negotiations with Mr. Vogel and Mr. Moskowitz are separately conducted and independent of each other (fol. 2576).

(d) that the licensing of pictures in the field where Mr. Moskowitz represents Loew's are not dependent in any way upon the success or failure of negotiations with respect to the field in which Mr. Vogel represents Loew's (fol. 2576). (3450)

(e) that there is no relationship between his negotiations for the licensing of Paramount pictures for exhibition in Loew's theatres or in R.K.O. theatres, and the licensing of the theatres of either of those defendants for exhibition in any of Paramount's theatres (fols. 2576-77).

(f) that he does not ever refuse to license Paramount pictures for exhibition in Loew's theatres or R.K.O.'s theatres unless and until any of Paramount theatres have offered or concluded licenses for the pictures of either of those distributors (fol. 2577),

(g) that except for individual license agreements made with a particular defendant for the exhibition of Paramount pictures in the theatres of that defendant, he has no agreement or understanding with any distributor as to whether Paramount will or will not license the exhibition of Paramount pictures to any exhibitor, or as to the terms, including the terms as to run and clearance upon which the Paramount pictures will be licensed to any exhibitor (fols. 2577-78).

(h) that subject to the exceptions noted in (g) above, he has no agreement with any distributor as to the admission prices which are charged or to be charged by any "affiliated" or "unaffiliated" exhibitor (fol. 2578).

(i) giving negative answers to the so-called "Zukor" questions relating to conspiracy, restraint of trade and monopoly (fol. 2578).

(37) All of the statements of Sam Dembow, President of Golden Pictures, Inc. (fols. 2624 to 2632).

Plaintiff's Motion to Strike Out Certain Testimony Offered by the Defendants

(a) that there is no relationship whatever between the terms of film deals negotiated for the theatres which the respective witnesses operate and any negotiations or arrangements for the licensing or exhibition of Paramount films in theatres of any other defendant (respective affidavits attached to Exhibit P-24).

(b) that there is no relationship whatever between film deals of their respective companies and film deals of any other companies in which Paramount is interested (respective affidavits attached to Exhibit P-24).

(c) that no representative of Paramount participates or interferes in any way in their respective negotiations with distributors for the licensing of films to be used in theatres operated by their respective companies or dictate or advise them as to the terms of any film license contracts that they respectively make or are to make with any other distributor (respective affidavits attached to Exhibit P-24).

(d) that there are theatres operated by the respective witnesses in which they would like to license the pictures of Loew, Fox, Warner, R.K.O., Columbia, Universal and United Artists where they are unable to do so (respective affidavits attached to Exhibit P-24).

(e) that in the cases referred to in (a) above, the distributors mentioned, license some or all of their pictures to theatres which are in competition with the theatres operated by the respective witnesses (respective affidavits attached to Exhibit P-24).

(f) that their respective companies follow a policy of keeping all theatres operated by them up to date in accordance with the needs of the community (respective affidavits attached to Exhibit P-24).

Before:

HON. AUGUSTUS N. HAND, C.J.,
HON. HENRY W. GODDARD, D.J., and
HON. JOHN BRIGHT, D.J.,

New York, January 15, 1946;
10:30 o'clock a. m.

(Met pursuant to adjournment.)

Judge Hand: Now, have you arranged among yourselves for any order of argument or any scheme at all?

Mr. Wright: I discussed the matter over the telephone with Mr. Caskey yesterday, if the Court please. I told him that our main argument would consume, I thought, less than two hours, and we would then, of course, finish up this morning; and I understood from him the defendants would probably want this afternoon and tomorrow morning, and then we could finish up tomorrow afternoon.

Judge Hand: That is all right. We shall adjourn today at a quarter past four. I have an engagement at half-past four that I should get to ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF GOVERNMENT.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, in making this argument we shall assume that the Court has read our brief, the two joint briefs filed by the producer-exhibitor defendants, and the briefs separately filed on behalf of Columbia and on behalf of United Artists and Universal. These briefs, we believe, define the basic issues with which the Court is confronted, and we shall address ourselves to those issues. The five supplemental briefs filed by each of the producer-exhibitors merely elaborate the arguments contained in joint briefs, and while they point up certain invidious distinctions between the various producer-exhibitors, we do not read any of them as claiming that any differences in their business conduct or power are so great that the dissolution relief sought by the plaintiff might properly be denied as to one while granted as to another.

Judge Hand: Assuming that there were no defendants but one, do you claim that any of them monopolize or restrain commerce as between themselves and their own subsidiaries?

Mr. Wright: Oh yes, we do.

Judge Hand: So you could leave out, according to your contention, all of the great, universal alleged conspiracy and still have a case you think?

Mr. Wright: That is right, your Honor.

Judge Hand: Based on their system and not on just incidents, particular incidents?

Mr. Wright: That is right. Of course, they have to be viewed against the context of the industry in which they are engaged and the industry practices.

Our main argument will be divided between Mr. Marcus and myself, with Mr. Marcus devoting his attention principally to the aspects of the case which affect all eight defendants as distributors. My argument will be confined, insofar as practicable, to the relief sought against the five producer-exhibitor combinations, as such.

Mr. Wright on behalf of Government

I think it is reasonbly clear from their briefs that the producer-exhibitors' defense to this suit rests principally on a claim that their trade practices must be viewed as isolated transactions wholly unrelated to the kind of business organizations that employ them. A further assumption on which their defense rests is that if a particular business practice or method of organization has been habitually and generally employed in a particular trade, it cannot violate the Sherman Act, even though this normal structure and practice are such as to restrict arbit arily the competitive opportunities in the trade in question.

Now, the plaintiff's case, admittedly, rests on the rejection by the Court of both of these fundamental assumptions on which the defendants argument is based. We make no claim that we can prevail in this case unless the Court makes an objective examination of the economic structure of this industry and the competitive practices which prevail in it, and the basic assumptions on which it operates, free from any——

Judge Hand: Now there perhaps I misunderstand you. I thought that you did. I thought you just have in answer to my question.

Mr. Wright: No, I think not.

Judge Hand: I thought you said if there was—well, we will take the Fox films in the California situation and other situations, that they and their subsidiaries violated the Sherman Act if there was not another defendant on the scene.

Mr. Wright: That is right, but our contentions as to dissolution do attack the basic assumptions on which Fox considered alone operates its business. That is if you adopt a preconception that merely because the Fox organization alone has assumed a status as a respected institution the Government may not challenge its validity under the Act, then of course we can't prevail.

I merely point out in viewing any segment of this industry this suit raises basic questions which require a fresh objective examination of what is being done in the business free from any notion that merely because it is established it is legal.

Now this proceeding was deliberately designed to bring into question these basic assumptions on which the industry operates in its economic structure and trade practices. It was not brought to ascertain the extent of such economic hardships as the system may from time to time inflict upon any particular members of the industry, nor was it primarily directed to competitive effects prohibited by the Act in any particular local area. The Government has deliberately confined its evidence to the more general aspects of the structure and practice of the defendants in order to demonstrate the fundamental incompatibility of that structure and practice with free competition as such. We freely concede that if the defendants are right in their theory that the Sherman Act protects only complaining witnesses and not the interest of the general public in the maintenance of a free enterprise system as such then this proceeding has no merit.

We also concede that in evaluating the structure of these defendant combinations and their established trade practice, the Court is not bound to accept any notions of the prosecuting officers as to what kind of an industry structure seems to them to be desirable. In fact, the Court is bound to reject all such notions advanced by anyone except in so far as they are found compatible with maintenance of the kind of competitive opportunities which the Supreme Court has said the Sherman Act protects. We do not ask this Court to replace the existing consent decree with an effective decree on any other basis than a finding that the consent decree is inadequate to enforce the Sherman Act against the defendants. Such a finding must, of course, be based upon an application of what the Supreme Court has held in interpreting the Act to the proven industry facts rather than the past or present opinions of the parties as expressed by their counsel.

Now as a corollary of this proposition, the fact that a particular monopolistic or competition-suppressing practice represents an exercise of sound business judgment on the part of persons enjoying its benefits, must equally be without weight in determining whether or not the Act has been violated.

If absence of sound business judgment were a condition of law violation there could be no effective enforcement of this Act, which, by its nature, places restraints upon the pursuit of business self-interest to its logical limits.

We make these concessions, not from any altruistic motive, but in the firm knowledge that the decisions of the Supreme Court make it impossible for this Court to accept these postulates on which the defendants rely.

The courts have repeatedly emphasized the necessity for viewing the activity of the dominant elements of an industry as a whole in any antitrust case brought against them by the Government. The courts have also repeatedly held that even when a restraint of trade has become sufficiently established and generally profitable to become acceptable to most or all of the members of an industry immediately involved in the restraint, that fact cannot save it from the condemnation of the law. The Pullman Company enjoyed an unchallenged monopoly of the business of furnishing sleeping car service for fifty years, but that did not prevent the divorcement of this business from Pullman's car manufacturing business when it was found that such integration unreasonably restrained trade in the purchase of sleeping car equipment. The Aluminum Company of America enjoyed a virtually complete monopoly of the production of alumina and partial monopolization of the aluminum fabricating business for almost as long a period and was only saved from a decree ordering its dissolution as a means of establishing competition by the existence of a statute more specific than the Sherman Act, designed to accomplish the same purpose. In that case, as here, there had been a prior consent decree which the defendants attempted to use as an immunity cloak for continuing monopolization, but the effort met with no success.

In their reliance upon the consent decree in this case to defeat relief here, the defendants have succinctly stated their basic opposition to the enforcement of the antitrust laws, as such. At pages 2 and 3 of their joint brief regarding the consent decree, the defendants state:

> "In the negotiation of the decree it early became apparent to all parties that, in addition to the subjects referred to above"—those subjects were blind selling and block booking—"there were certain recognized trade practices within the industry which in practical application had given rise to a number of complaints and criticisms on the part of some so-called independent exhibitors. It was also recognized that the considerations and factors involved in these trade practices (such as clearance and run, for example) were of a business nature and that decisions with respect thereto primarily involved the exercise of business judgment. It was concluded by both the Government and the defendants that an adequate and fair solution of many of these problems could not be achieved by resort to proceedings under the antitrust law. Many elements quite different from violations of law, were involved. It was considered essential that some procedure, expeditious in nature and designed to provide something of a layman's review of business judgment was the most desirable procedure for resolving these controversies."

The suggestion that the Government, in entering into the consent decree agreed with the defendants that the solution of unfair trade practice problems within the industry "could not be achieved by resort to proceedings under the antitrust law," is simply a claim that the Government and the Court, by entering that decree, were setting up a plan of industry regulation which neither had the slightest authority to sanction. The only jurisdiction this Court has now or ever had in this case was to enforce the antitrust laws against the defendants or to dismiss them from the suit. The filing of the complaint in this suit had no other purpose than such enforcement; the members of the Attorney General's staff who represented the Government in negotiating that decree were employed for no other purpose; and the Court, in entering that decree, was engaged in no other purpose than the enforcement of the antitrust law.

Judge Hand: That is all very true, in one sense, but it is not very profitable, you know, to lead the Court and the industry like infants crying in the night, and nothing but a cry; or, as Sill said in his poem, "A lot of people dancing in infuriosio, nothing but cares around."

You ought to have some kind of a system, I should think, that you advocate and could point to, if you object to this.

Mr. Wright: I think we do. We advocate a free competitive system instead of this rigidly controlled one.

Judge Hand: You mean a system where they rent a picture to one theatre just that one time, with nothing else?

Mr. Wright: We advocate, fundamentally, a system where a distributor is free to function as a distributor without any agreement or affiliation binding him to some exhibitor for the purpose of eliminating competition between exhibitors.

The defendants' claim that restraint of trade in this industry may not be corrected by resort to proceedings under the antitrust law is simply another way of phrasing its basic claim that the industry practices in which the defendants engage are outside the reach of the antitrust laws because they have been widely accepted and continuously employed for many years. This Court is not organized to perform and this proceeding was not brought to provide "a layman's review" of the business judgment of the defendants. Their business judgment, insofar as it is reflected in the profitability of their business, may be unimpeachable. The question that this Court has to resolve is whether or not what was done by them unreasonably restrained trade in motion pictures.

While a concept of unreasonableness, related to the public interest in the preservation of competition, rather than the pursuit of successful business policy is one which is apparently foreign to these defendants, this concept has become firmly imbedded in the most recent decisions of the Supreme Court. These decisions show that Court's profound concern for the protection of this interest, regardless of whether anyone gets on the witness stand and complains that suppression of competition hurt him and regardless of whether the suppression has become thoroughly institutionalized.

In the Interstate Circuit case the business judgment of the defendants in imposing the restrictions which the Court found illegal was clearly vindicated by the fact that their overall revenue from the exhibition areas in question was increased as the result of the imposition of the illegal restrictions. That is to say, the increase in rentals received from Interstate more than offset the decrease in rentals from independents, yet the soundness of the business judgment which led to the imposition of these restrains could not save them from the Court's condemnation. In the Ethyl Gasoline case no witness took the stand to complain about any practice. The case was heard on stipulated facts. There was no attempt to show that the prices which the Ethyl Gasoline Corporation sought to maintain for its product by the licensing system there brought in question were reasonable or unreasonable, nor was there any attempt to show that any particular member of the public or the gasoline industry had been directly injured by the system. In fact, the defendants offered proof that the whole purpose of the system was to protect the public from injury by providing for safe handling of a potentially dangerous product. Yet the Court was unimpressed by those claims and insisted that that system was illegal per se because it arbitrarily stabilized prices, and the public was conclusively presumed to have an interest in a free market for any product which moves in interstate commerce, and which the Sherman Act protects.

In the Masonite case no one complained that he was hurt by the practices there brought into question. The defendants offered affirmative proof to the effect that the prices charged for hardboard were reasonable and that the public benefited from this system of distribution that they had devised whereby one manufacturer made all the board and the others distributed it on an agency basis at prices fixed by Masonite. Again the complete rationality of this system was assumed from the standpoint of the exercise of sound business judgment by the defendants, but the scheme was held to be illegal because it suppressed price competition as such.

Now, in Mercoid v. Midcontinent Corporation, a long established patent licensing practice was overthrown. A combination patent was held not infringed by the knowing manufacture and sale of competing products for use as part of the patented combination. Now, although such activity had long been established as contributory infringement, the Court simply held that an extension of monopoly rights granted by the patent laws in any manner whatsoever violated the public purposes of the patent laws and the Sherman Act.

Now, in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., the District Court, in refusing the Government's request to incorporate in its decree a provision compelling the defendants to secure Court approval before acquiring theatres, held that it was sufficient merely to prohibit future acquisitions which were preceded by predatory practices.

Now, when the Government argued that there might be a complete destruction of competition by a voluntary sale without any predatory practices when the only competing theatre in a particular town was acquired, the District Court replied that such a limitation would tend to deprive independent theatre operators of a market for their theatres. The plaintiff argued successfully in the Supreme Court that the effect of an acquisition on competition must be the test, regardless of whether or not the application of that rule tended to restrict the sales opportunities of particular independent exhibitors. The Supreme Court accepted the plaintiff's argument and directed the District Court to incorporate a provision in its decree which would prevent the defendants from acquiring theatres in any town unless they first satisfied the court that it would not restrain unreasonably competition in theatre operations, and those defendants operated in towns with less than 2500 people.

Now, in going to the unusual length it did in reversing the District Court on a matter which would ordinarily have been within its discretion, the Supreme Court demonstrated a concern for the preservation of motion picture theatre operating competition, per se, which completely refutes the defendants' assertion that the sole basis for the Court's decision in that case was the history of predatory practices in which the defendants had engaged. We submit that anyone who will read together the opinions in these five consecutive cases just mentioned, commencing with Interstate Circuit and concluding with Crescent Amusement, cannot escape the conclusion that the Supreme Court has steadily moved in a direction which these defendants have simply ignored in their argument. While the Crescent case alone commits the Court to the specific proposition that full opportunity for theatre operating competition in licensing films is required by the Sherman Act, the general trend of the Court's thinking, exhibited by these five cases, shows that regardless of how firmly established are the practices indulged in by any business organization, or how desirable they may seem from the standpoint of business efficiency, if they endanger the existence of a competitive market, as such, they must be terminated.

Now, the only court besides this one which has had occasion to consider the competitive effects of the defendants' integrated structure, as a structure, found that this structure had in fact unreasonably restrained competition in and of itself. This decision, rendered by a three-judge court in Paramount v. Langer (23 F. Supp. 890), upheld the North Dakota theatre divorcement law, and although appealed by the defendants, was not reviewed on the merits by the Supreme Court because the statute was repealed before the case could be heard.

Now, let us examine the precise nature of the competition that the defendants claim exists in the motion picture theatre market. It is expressly conceded that there is no competition among them as theatre operators for the films of the distributors which own theatres, in the locations where those distributors have affiliated theatre interests. The extent of their claims as to competition among affiliated theatres is simply the claim that they are in competition with each other for the public's dollar in the small number of situations where two or more serve the same competitive area.

Now, there is no testimony in this entire record to the effect that there have been at any time any competitive negotiations between two or more affiliated theatres for the film product of any distributor defendant. The plaintiff's evidence shows that for the last ten years, in the principal cities of the country, there has been no shift in the first run outlets for the defendants' films as between affiliated theatres, except as a result of termination of product or theatre pooling agreements. There is evidence that on occasion some of the distributor defendants have broken with affiliated circuit outlets at various times, but there is no evidence that any distributor defendant did so because it received a better offer from one defendant's theatres than from the theatres of another defendant. No affiliated theatre operator testified, by affidavit or otherwise, that he has ever even made an offer to license films being exhibited by another affiliated theatre, and in view of the elaborate testimony of the defendants' executives received by the Court without restrictions of any kind, the fact that no such testimony was tendered is clear evidence that no such offers have been made.

Now, there is no express concession as to lack of competition in licensing films by the affiliated theatres generally, by their counsel, but the record is perfectly clear that there was no more competition among them in licensing films generally than there was with respect to the situations where their affiliated theatres used their own films. Now, this absence of film licensing competition among the producer-exhibitors is not fortuitous. It is amply illustrated by documents in evidence which demonstrate a specific intent on the part of all of them not to compete with each other.

Now, let us look first at the theatre operating agreements in evidence relating to San Francisco, California——

Judge Goddard: Mr. Wright, what would you do, auction off pictures? What is your solution?

Mr. Wright: You mean as to how pictures should be sold?

Judge Goddard: Yes.

Mr. Wright: I see no reason why they should not be sold competitively.

Judge Bright: What do you mean by that?

Mr. Wright: Well, putting pictures on the auction block does not appeal to me as anything which is inconsistent with the purposes of the Sherman Act. I do not see why they should not go on the auction block.

Judge Goddard: What is your solution? What do you say? What is your solution?

Mr. Wright: Well, our solution primarily is the dissolution of these combinations which we say, as such, prevent competitive distribution and exhibition of films.

Judge Goddard: Assuming that that is done, then how does a distributor go about to sell his picture?

Mr. Wright: We think a distributor should go about selling his picture by deciding where he wants it shown and how many runs, what the sequence shall be, and so forth, without making any agreement with one group of exhibitors against another giving certain theatres a fixed quasi permanent preferred status in a system of exhibition or distribution. Let him use his own judgment in making his film contracts free from these restrictions.

Judge Goddard: Isn't that what the distributor is doing now? Getting as much as he can?

Mr. Wright: He is getting as much as he can, but he is doing it by a process which involves the making of agreements which plainly restrict competition between theatre operators. That is a privilege that we don't think he has. Mr. Marcus in his argument will undertake to develop more fully the case against the distributors as such.

However, if I may, I would like to proceed with my discussion of this question of theatre operating competition if I may.

Now, as I say, calling attention to San Francisco, California, that is a case where Fox alone with five producer-exhibitors is engaged in operating theatres, although Paramount and Loew also own theatres in that town.

Now the first agreement——

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, RKO operates a theatre in San Francisco.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Caskey calls my attention to the fact that RKO has one theatre there, and I believe that is correct. But at any event Fox operates first-run theatres there. Paramount and Loew also own theatres there which are operated by Fox and I propose to discuss the agreements which have brought that situation about.

Now the first agreement in point of time is Exhibit 232-A, dated December 10, 1930, which was when Paramount first leased its first-run theatres in San Francisco, Portland, and Seattle to Fox for periods varying from three to twenty years.

Now that contract was made between Paramount-Publix Corporation, the principal Paramount theatre-operating corporation, and Fox Film Corporation, distributor of Fox films, which controlled Fox West Coast Theatres, Inc., exhibiting corporation which was to operate the theatres in question. The agreement expressly assumed that the latter all of the first-run theatres in these towns in which Fox had any financial interest whatsoever whether in the form of a minority stock ownership or just a participating agreement. It provided that Paramount should receive as additional rent a share of Fox's earnings from first-run exhibition of all distributors' films in all such first-run theatres if those earnings exceeded a stipulated amount. Fox is also given the exclusive right to show Paramount films first-run in these towns and an option to license them for second run. The agreement further expressly provided that if control of Fox West Coast Theatres, Inc. passed out of the hands of Fox Film Corporation, Paramount could terminate the agreement on six months' notice. The present disclaimer of a vital interest in the affiliation of those theatres with which they do business had apparently not occurred to these defendants in 1930.

The next agreements involving the San Francisco situation are both dated January, 1934, and were made between the Paramount trustees in bankruptcy and Fox West Coast and Fox Film and are in evidence as Exhibits 232 and 233. The latter consists of three leases for the same three Paramount theatres in San Francisco covered by the 1930 agreement, for ten-year terms, all expiring in 1943, and they are expressly conditioned on the continuance of a Paramount ten-year film franchise for the same theatres dated August 1, 1933.

These leases were executed pursuant to Exhibit 232, under which the trustees made an agreement with Fox covering the San Francisco, Seattle and Portland theatres included in the 1930 agreement and adding to the Fox San Francisco first-run pool Loew's Warfield Theatre.

Now this over all agreement did not result merely from problems arising in bankruptcy, but expressly states that it is a composition of disputes arising under the 1930 agreement and its terms are in effect an extension of that agreement through 1943. It gives Paramount 37½ per cent of the operating profits of all of the first-run theatres in San Francisco operated by Fox, including the one owned by Loew and leased to Fox, and provides for parallel franchises for the use of Paramount films in Fox theatres in Oakland and Portland, as well as in San Francisco.

Now by Exhibit 222, dated November 5, 1943, an agreement made between Paramount Pictures, Inc., and Fox West Coast Theatres, this pooling arrangement as to San Francisco has been extended for another ten years, through 1953.

Now then, Exhibit 231 is a lease of the Loew's Warfield Theatre to Fox executed by Metro Goldwyn Mayer Distributing Corporation, which is also in evidence, and that is dated August 1, 1936, and covers a ten-year period, and is also expressly conditioned upon continuation of a film franchise simultaneously executed for the exhibition of the Loew films in the Fox first-run houses in San Francisco.

Now there are also in evidence franchise and lease agreements executed by Loew and Fox with reference to Los Angeles at the same time whereby a theatre there was leased to Fox and the Loew pictures were committed to the Fox Theatres.

Now in the face of those written agreements, how can anyone argue that Fox, Loew and Paramount have exhibited no intention of restricting competition among themselves, and that their film licenses with each other have not been conditioned upon theatre affiliation?

Now the written agreements by which RKO and Warner have prevented and still prevent theatre operating competition between the theatres owned by them in Albany, New York, are in evidence as Exhibits 204 and 229. 204 is an agreement between RKO Proctor Corporation and Fast Theatres, Inc., by S. H. Fabian, president, which provides for lease to and operation by Fast of two RKO theatres in Albany, two located at Schenectady, and one at Troy. The agreement is dated January 1, 1935, and extends for 21 years, expiring in 1956. In addition to a guaranteed rental, Fast is to pay a percentage of its net profits from theatre operations to RKO, after deducting certain management fees paid to Fast. The agreement originally provided that the film buying for these theatres be done by RKO for a fee of 1% of the gross. In 1937, according to a supplemental letter attached to the agreement, the film buying was taken over by Fast, but the 1% fee continued to be paid to RKO.

Perhaps the most striking provision of this agreement is that under it Fast agreed that it would not extend its business outside the cities of Albany, Schenectady and Troy, New York, and that it would not become financially interested in any theatre in any manner outside of those cities. Fast also agreed not to operate the five theatres covered by the agreement in conjunction with theatres located outside these three cities and RKO agreed not to acquire any other theatre interests in those cities.

Now Fast's agreement to confine its operation to these three cities went far beyond the mere restriction of competition between Fast and RKO. It was plainly a provision calculated to preserve from encroachment the theatre operating territory of the other defendants as it excluded Fast from areas in which they and not RKO operated theatres. For example, Paramount, which operates in nearby towns, such as Newburgh and Poughkeepsie, received direct protection by this agreement against any encroachment by Fast on its territory.

Judge Hand: Why do you have to sell theatres in order to cure that, if there is a wrong there?

Mr. Wright: Well, the agreement is, I would say, per se illegal, and of course——

Judge Hand: You seem really to aim at, I won't say nothing, because you are calling attention now to other wrongs, but your great aim is to upset all the ownership of theatres. Now that is an extremely drastic remedy that I should think was extremely unlikely for this court to give. But that is merely a first impression by myself, and I have got to study this thing very carefully in other ways than just by reading through the briefs once, of course.

But this sort of think that you are arguing now is the kind of thing that has always been argued, and remedies have constantly been granted that were thought sufficient. Maybe they have not been against the kind of thing you are calling our attention to here.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, my only purpose in calling attention to these specific agreements is on this question of intent. Obviously, the particular situation in Albany might to some extent be remedied by voiding particular competition-restraining agreements. But I am arguing these and calling them to your attention merely as evidence of the fact that there is an express intention on the part of these defendants not to compete as theatre operators.

Now I have not finished the analysis of this situation which shows where Warner came in there at the same time, and it is through Fast that the link between Warner and RKO in that situation occurred.

Judge Bright: May I ask you one question, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Bright: In that restriction to Fast, restricting theatre operation, is there any territorial limit to which that restriction should be confined?

Mr. Wright: He is confined to those three towns.

Judge Bright: I mean outside those three towns is there any limit where he shall not acquire other theatres?

Mr. Wright: No, he cannot acquire theatres anywhere.

Judge Bright: In the United States?

Mr. Wright: That is right. It limits his operation expressly to those three cities—Albany, Schenectady and Troy. He agrees not to become interested in theatres outside those three cities,—that is, not Fabian individually. This is Fast Theatres Corporation.

Judge Bright: That is one reason why I asked the question. Fabian has other theatres.

Mr. Wright: Oh, Fabian operates in partnership with these defendants in many other situations through many other corporations.

Judge Bright: Isn't Fabian Fast, and Fast Fabian?

Mr. Wright: Well, the only thing that appears in the record is that Fabian is president of the Fast Theatres, Inc. a corporation, which executed the agreement, and which operates the Albany theatres and the theatres in Schenectady and Troy.

Now Exhibit 229 is a profit-sharing agreement dated July 2, 1941, between Fast Theatres, Inc., and Stanley Mark-Strand Corporation, a wholly-owned theatre operating subsidiary of Warner, pooling the operation of three theatres owned by Warner in Albany with the Palace and Leland theatres operated by Fast. The Palace is one of those owned by RKO, and leased to Fast under the exhibit that I just referred to.

Now this Exhibit 229, the pooling agreement between Fast and Warner, provides for the formation of an operating committee composed of representatives of Fast and Warner, to determine the policies of the five theatres and contains the following provision at paragraph 3, page 4, with respect to clearance:

> "Fast, as the operator of the Palace Theatre, Albany, New York,"—that is an RKO theatre—"agrees that in the licensing of photoplays for exhibition in the said Palace Theatre, it shall not obtain clearance over the theatres covered by this agreement in excess of the clearance which the said Palace Theatre now has, and Stanley, as the operator of the Strand Theatre, Albany, New York,"—that is the Warner theatre—"agrees that in the licensing of photoplays for the said Strand Theatre, it will not obtain clearance over the theatres covered by this agreement in excess of the clearance now in effect for said Strand Theatre."

While RKO was not a direct party to this agreement it was a necessary party to any clearance arrangement involving its films, which were committed to the Palace Theatre by the franchise made a part of its lease of the Palace Theatre to Fast in its operating agreement with Fast. (Exhibit 204.)

Now the occasion for this Warner pooling agreement was apparently the construction of a new theatre in Albany by Warner, called the Delaware. Warner had previously owned theatres there for a number of years and had previously pooled its theatres in Troy, New York, with those operated by Fast, including the Proctor, owned by RKO, by an agreement dated August 30th, 1935, as appears from Warner's 1939 answer to Interrogatory 52a (Ex. 118).

Paragraph 13 of page 15a, of the Albany pooling agreement between Fast and Warner contains the following covenant by Fast:

> "Fast is the owner in fee, in the City of Albany, New York, of a theatre site upon which was formerly erected the Hall Theatre and which was recently detroyed by fire. In consideration of the granting by Stanley to Fast of an interest in the operating results of the Delaware Theatre, as hereinbefore set forth,"—that refers to the provision sharing profits of the Albany operation—"Fast agrees during the term of the lease on the said Delaware Theatre, namely, twenty (20) years from the date of the completion thereof, that it will not erect or permit to be erected on the said Hall Theatre site a theatre building, or permit the said Hall Theatre site to be used for the exhibition of motion pictures, television or vaudeville."

Now paragraph 14, which appears on page 16 of the same agreement, further provides that neither of the parties will own theatre interests in Albany in the future during the term of the Delaware Theatre lease, unless they are operated jointly or unless either party refuses to share in such joint operation.

By an agreement dated July 21, 1943, attached to this Exhibit, this profit-sharing arrangement was extended for a five-year period, expiring in August 1951. Now neither of these Warner agreements purported to restrict Fast's operations to Albany, Schenectady and Troy, but this had already been accomplished by its agreement with RKO. The net effect of all these agreements, read together, was, of course, simply the complete elimination of any theatre operating competition between Fast, RKO, and Warner, in Albany.

Now these agreements I have just referred to are admittedly of a somewhat more complex character than those generally employed by the defendants to accomplish a similar purpose. We did not offer in evidence all of their pooling agreements but we did offer a sufficient number to illustrate the various kinds of express arrangements under which the defendants have limited theatre operating and film licensing competition among themselves and their theatre operating affiliates.

We have digested these agreements in evidence and have submitted copies of the digests to counsel for the defendants, together with an appropriate index, and we are today delivering copies of these to the Court.

Sufficient it is to note here that similar results to these I have just described have been obtained in other cities by straight leases of theatres from one defendant to another, leases conditioned upon the simultaneous maintenance of film franchises, leases coupled with operating agreements relating to general film licensing procedure, operating agreements which share profits, and agreements confining future theatre operations to specific territory. The areas covered by these agreements in evidence include more than 30 towns of widely varying sizes in approximately 25 states and involve all of the defendants in one agreement or another. Agreements of this character do not exhaust the kind of arrangements by which the defendants jointly engage in theatre operations. The instances such as Buffalo, New York, where Paramount and Loew each own approximately 40 per cent of the stock in a theatre operating corporation, Buffalo Theatres, Inc.; or Oklahoma City, where Warner owns a half and Paramount one-quarter of the stock of another theatre operating corporation; or Denver, Colorado, where Loew has a half interest in a corporation in which RKO has the other half—those stock holdings were listed and described together with others at page 6 of our Trial Brief. In those situations, contractual arrangements are, of course, superfluous as a means of eliminating competition between the defendants involved.

All possible combinations of the five theatre-owning defendants are represented by these joint stockholding arrangements or operating agreements. There are only ten mathematically possible two-party combinations of five different parties and these defendants have managed to exhaust all of those possibilities by combinations with one another which expressly eliminate theatre operating competition.

These written agreements and corporate arrangements, the defendants argue, are not enough to establish an intent not to compete with each other, but if they are not, what evidence possibly could establish that fact? We have shown that in the 32 cities of more than 100,000 population, where they operate theatres in nominal opposition to each other, they do not in fact compete for films. We have shown that in a substantial number of cities of all sizes where they might normally be expected to compete with each other if they desired to do so, that they have not done so by express agreement. In the 800-odd towns of less than 100,000 population in which the defendants operate theatres, there are only 19 in which more than one has any theatre affiliations. The details of this national division of theatre operating territory appear in the appendix to our brief. Apparently the only proof that would satisfy the defendants' concept of proof of an intent not to compete with each other as theatre operators would be one gigantic written pooling agreement executed by all of the defendants and their affiliates which provided in express terms for the situation that actually exists, to wit, a stable, arbitrary division of all film product and all theatre operating territory among their theatres. Of course, the so-called Paramount formula deal comes close to being that kind of agreement, as it is in essence an arbitrary division of the theatre market which simply assigns an arbitrary percentage of the national market to each of the circuits licensed under it. The theory on which these circuits are expected to furnish fixed percentages of Paramount's national film rental regardless of the films' performance in their theatres is apparently that each of them has been assigned a fixed percentage of the national theatre market.

All of these agreements are far more direct and decisive evidence of an intent to restrict competition than the Government ordinarily possesses. Normally, we rely on letters or memoranda in which a careless or poorly advised corporate official has expressed an interest in making the kind of an agreement with a competitor which these defendants have actually executed. This industry is one of the few in which restraint of trade remains so firmly imbedded in the practice of its managers that they habitually execute written agreements suppressing competition in the ordinary conduct of their business.

If the Court prefers evidence of restraint of more subtle character, we recommend examination of the Mainstreet Theatre situation at Kansas City, Missouri. This is a 3000-seat, downtown, million-dollar theatre formerly leased to RKO which was once operated with the best pictures available as part of a first run pool covering the Fox, RKO and Paramount theatres in that town. Mr. Rhoden, the Fox theatre head in the area, assures us that it was not suitable for such operation because it was in the wrong part of the downtown area, and it was closed in 1938, after the pool terminated. He does not say why this was not discovered before 1938. In 1941, he states, an independent tried to operate it for two months with vaudeville and feature films of "lesser box-office attraction," but was unsuccessful. Now, in November, 1942, Fox bought a half interest in the fee to that theatre and in January, 1943, RKO bought the other half interest in it.

Now, there is no written agreement regarding it between the joint owners, but it remains closed and the joint ownership of these defendants will obviously prevent any independent who might suppose that he could get suitable film for it from attempting to operate it and thus disrupt the first run situation in Kansas City.

We are told by Mr. Rhoden that a partition suit is pending, and I suppose if the theatre is cut in half it would be permanently removed as a threat to the Kansas City first run situation. According to the defendants' argument, all theatres are competitive, regardless of affiliation, and no doubt the only way in which the kind of theatre competition they talk about may be suppressed is by physical destruction of a theatre building.

All of this conduct simply reflects a non-competitive condition that is inherent in the corporate structure of the defendant organizations. This structure may not be viewed as existing in a vacuum. The fact that a distributor might conceivably own a theatre circuit which exhibited only the films that it distributes does not make the integrated structure of these defendants, which habitually use each other's theatres as outlets for each other's films, a legal one. The defendants' claim that a distributor's exhibition of his own pictures in his own theatres is legal, as an abstract proposition of law, simply begs the fundamental question posed by this lawsuit. That question is not the abstract one of whether or not one who distributes pictures may lawfully own theatres. The question presented by this suit is whether or not elimination of competition resulting from the continued and habitual use of theatres controlled by each of these defendants as outlets for the films of the others, with the consequent elimination of theatre operating and film licensing competition among them, may be permitted to continue.

Now, the defendants' argument that this established cross use of each other's theatres as distribution outlets is legal because it makes more commercial transactions than would occur if their theatres confined themselves to their own pictures and thereby stimulates what they are pleased to call competition, is predicated on the assumption that they must and should own theatres. Their right to an integrated structure of this kind, if presented in the absence of any showing as to its competitive effects, might well be sanctioned by any court. But these defendants must be judged, not on the basis of how they might theoretically behave, but on what their actual competitive record has been, and this record is one of habitual suppression of theatre operating and film licensing competition among them and with others.

Now, this Court, by their argument, is faced with the alternative of simply assuming the legality of the defendants' theatre ownership because they say it is legal, or subjecting it to the tests of legality announced by the Supreme Court. Now, as long ago as the Reading cases, that Court expressly rejected the argument advanced here that if you don't exceed the powers granted in your corporate charters, your corporate structure is immune from attack under the Sherman Act. The second Reading case clearly rejected the further argument advanced here that if the structure was legal when created, it could not be dissolved by virtue of adverse effects on competition which later developed.

Now, the Supreme Court has never countenanced a non-competitive relationship such as that necessarily resulting from the established cross use of the five largest theatre circuits in this country as market outlets for the films of the five largest distributors. In approving the pooling of certain oil cracking patents among four oil companies which did not and could not dominate the production or marketing of the finished product, gasoline, the Court said in Standard Oil v. United States, 283 U.S. 163, at page 174:

> "Where domination exists, a pooling of competing process patents, or an exchange of licenses for the purpose of curtailing the manufacture and supply of an unpatented product, is beyond the privileges conferred by the patents and constitutes a violation of the Sherman Act"

And the same language, of course, applies with all the more force to an exchange of licenses which fixes prices.

Now, these defendants might conceivably argue that there are alternative remedies for dealing with this situation, but they cannot justify its continuance under the Sherman Act. Dissolution is not an end in itself, but only an established judicial means of terminating an unlawful combination. They could, for example, with some plausibility, argue that if a theatre-owning distributor were prohibited from licensing its films to theatres owned by another distributor and if theatres affiliated with a distributor were similarly prohibited from licensing the films released by other theatre-owning distributors, for exhibition in their theatres, the relationship between them might conceivably be made competitive without divorcement. But since they themselves obviously prefer to give up their theatres rather than the right to such cross use of films, there is no alternative but to terminate——

Judge Hand: Who says that?

Mr. Wright: Well, their argument certainly by implication says it.

Judge Hand: I did not think so. They are arguing for every point they can make, as lawyers generally do, and just as you are doing. I do not see any implication at all from their argument in their briefs that they would prefer divorcement of their theatres and dismembering everything to restriction to the kind you are talking about now.

Mr. Wright: Well, quite apart from that, and assuming there is no implication in their brief of any such argument, I merely point out that if the defendants or the Court can devise or knows of some relief which would accomplish the same result, we would welcome it ourselves as an alternative to dissolution, because we recognize that that is a last resort proposition which should only be used when other means have failed. But I am merely pointing out that on the basis of experience nothing else that has been done over the long period of time in which we have been trying to solve this problem has or gives any promise of restoring or making competition among these integrated companies possible except dissolution.

Judge Bright: I have just been wondering: Assuming we go a hundred per cent with your demand for dissolution, where does it leave this industry? And where do you start from there, and in which direction do you go?

Mr. Wright: Well, in the first place, the first thing it does for this industry is to free the exhibition business as such from distributor domination. You then have an industry where your distributors are behaving as distributors with a sole eye to film rental and your exhibitors are operating their theatres on an independent basis with a view to satisfying the requirements of theatre operation.

Now, I do not say that that alone solves the problems of the industry. In my view, when you are dealing with a situation such as you have here, where restraint of competition has become so firmly imbedded in an industry structure, there is not any one step that you can take that will make competition where competition did not exist before. The most that can be done in any event is to work out provisions which will make competition possible and which will prevent the continuance of the restraints which have been found to occur in it in the past.

Now, on this problem of competition among these defendants, it seems to me there is no way of eliminating the habitual restraint of competition among them without preventing this cross use of each other's theatres as exclusive outlets for them as distributors.

Judge Hand: Now you are arguing for this different remedy and really not arguing for the situation where it might well be said, as they said about Agricola, he made a desert and called it peace.

Mr. Wright: I am merely suggesting that as an alternative remedy. I do not think myself that it is as adequate a remedy of dissolution. But I point it out as simply another means of attempting to accomplish the same result; and I say there is nothing in the defendants' attitude to indicate that they would not regard restrictions of that character as any more desirable than the more traditional method of an actual dissolution of these combinations through stock divestiture.

Judge Bright: Doesn't your argument impliedly admit that there is keen competition in distribution?

Mr. Wright: I think not. I do not see how there can be any more competition in distribution as among the five integrated distributors with this system of cross use of each other's theatres as outlets than there can be competition among them as theatre operators. They are constantly making agreements with each other which directly restrict their conduct as distributors. Now, you can't——

Judge Bright: It does not restrict their conduct as distributors. It finds a sure market for distribution.

Mr. Wright: Well, I call your Honors' attention to the provision that I just read from the operating agreement in Albany where the agreements were made as to what clearance restrictions should be imposed. Now, that is an express agreement but impliedly, whenever one distributor is licensing the theatres of another distributor, he is, in effect, agreeing to impose similar terms and similar restrictions with respect to his theatres, because the affiliated theatre with whom he is dealing——

Judge Bright: Doesn't it more definitely fix the clearance provisions that have already existed in the business?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, assuming that it does, that does not make it legal. Now, this clearance structure—there is no proof in this record, despite the defendants' allegation that the clearance structure that you have in this industry existed prior to the organization of these integrated groups. That structure is itself a product of this system. You did not have these elaborate clearance and run structures back in the days when there was no affiliation. I think if you will look at those early license agreements in evidence you will see that there is no printed provision for admission prices such as you now have and that the whole character of the business did undergo a change when your distributors became interested in theatre operation, and vice versa.

Now, the mere fact that many of those clearance structures are long established cannot possibly save them. Now, if their effect——

Judge Hand: That is true, of course, but what I would like to get at is whether really you think there should not be any clearance provisions at all by anybody; anything?

Mr. Wright: Precisely.

Judge Hand: You do?

Mr. Wright: That is right.

Judge Hand: You didn't once.

Mr. Wright: That is right.

Judge Bright: You do not want to scrap the consent decree completely, then?

Mr. Wright: In so far as it purports to arbitrate the clearance, quite definitely.

Judge Bright: In other respects, too?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Hand: Isn't it simply a question of arbitrating, as Judge Bright says? You don't want any clearance provision under any circumstance?

Mr. Wright: That is quite right. We feel that the distributor should be free to determine his run and clearance structure without making any express agreement with any exhibitor in the area.

Judge Bright: That carries you right back to the copyright owner's right to sell his product.

Mr. Wright: That is quite right. It depends on the interpretation of copyright.

Judge Goddard: If I understand, the cost of a print, of an ordinary picture, is $150 to $300 and for technicolor, $600 to $850. I also understand that a great many, perhaps thousands of the smaller theatres pay less than the cost of a print.

Mr. Wright: That is right.

Judge Goddard: How would you work that out?

Mr. Wright: The distributor needs to make no clearance agreement with anybody to distribute whatever number of prints he has got in the manner in which he thinks is most advantageous. He would, I presume——

Judge Goddard: I want to understand that, because it seems to me that is what he is doing now. My question seems to me clear. Where the price of the print is more than the theatre pays, if you don't have clearance, what would you do? How would that theatre get pictures?

Mr. Wright: The absence of a clearance agreement does not in any way prevent the distributor from making such multiple use of the prints he has got as he can by licensing as many exhibitors as he can deliver a print to. There is nothing to prevent him from doing that. He does not have to make an agreement with any exhibitor in order to efficiently use his print supply.

Judge Goddard: How would he determine to whom he would give his print? I mean, there would be no clearance? You would say if he did not give it to A that A was discriminated against.

Mr. Wright: Well, I suppose that he would use his best judgment as to where he thought the pictures ought to play and when. He would, of course, include in his license provision, I suppose, the dates and places where the picture was to play in the particular theatres that he licensed, but he does not have to make a further agreement with that exhibitor as to where they shall play subsequently in order to license them to some subsequent run.

Judge Goddard: Don't you come down, finally, to the proposition that one theatre must have it in advance of another? Isn't that essentially clearance?

Mr. Wright: This record very clearly shows that one theatre does not have to have the print in advance of another. In many situations that obtains. 15 or 20 theatres in Baltimore play virtually simultaneously, and in some first-run situations you will find two and occasionally three theatres playing day and date.

The matter of how many runs you have in a particular sequence and where they occur is something that we think can be safely left to the distributor's own judgment without encumbering that judgment with agreements to operate in a certain way in the future, which give these theatre operators, as such, protection from competition.

I think if you examine this structure objectively you cannot help concluding that the main purpose of clearance is to control and regulate theatre operating competition, and, as such, it is, of course, principally in the hands of theatre owners rather than distributors.

Judge Goddard: Now, Mr. Wright, supposing we were to decide that clearance should be done away with, how would you handle this question that I have just raised?

Mr. Wright: I do not think it is up to the Court to handle it. I think it is up to the distributor to handle it. The decree would simply prohibit him from making an agreement with any exhibitor as to the terms on which he would serve his pictures to other exhibitors. He would be left free, of course, to license his film to such exhibitors on such runs as he thought would give him the most revenue in the particular area where he was serving his prints.

Judge Goddard: Isn't that what he is doing now?

Mr. Wright: No.

Judge Goddard: Exercising his judgment?

Mr. Wright: Not at all, if the Court please. I think the agreements in evidence very clearly show that he in many cases makes an express agreement to abrogate any exercise of judgment. He says that for a certain period of time you shall have, that is theatre A, shall have a priority over theatre B on all my pictures. That kind of agreement is not necessary to permit him to efficiently distribute his prints, and that is what the clearance system today is, is one which fixes a theatre's status. That is the way it performs; that is the way it functions. There is no justification, in our view, for the use of these restrictions to fix theatre operating status.

Judge Hand: Would you ask for a decree that the picture owner or distributor would only play his pictures in his own theatre or in that of the independents?

Mr. Wright: That kind of decree might be a substitute for divorcement if it were coupled with, of course, a freeze on theatre acquisitions, because if you had unrestricted interchange of theatres, you would have a situation such as Kansas City, where five of these people each has a first-run theatre.

I would expect that kind of provision to lead really to the divorcement of theatres, because it would take the monopoly value away from them that they now have, and if you took that away, I don't think these defendants would want them. That is the main purpose of their structure, is to use these outlets as a means of preferential treatment for each other.

Judge Hand: You think they would prefer total to partial divorcement?

Mr. Wright: That is a matter for them, I think, to express themselves on. I do not pretend to know.

Quite apart from the obvious elimination of competition between the five integrated groups which has occurred by virtue of their corporate structure, that same structure has a very substantial effect in eliminating theatre-operating competition among the various units affiliated with each defendant combination. The Paramount combination, for example, consists not only of a parent producing and distributing corporation and a parent theatre-operating company, but numerous subsidiary theatre-operating corporations, many of which are only half owned by Paramount and are claimed to operate on a highly independent basis, although subject to negative control by Paramount's New York office, which nominates half of the directorate. There is no dispute about the fact that all of these corporations, whether 50 per cent owned or 100 per cent owned, cannot acquire a theatre without approval of the parent organization. The fact that they all confine their operations to separate territories is, therefore, not a matter of mere chance. Paramount is able to enforce the kind of geographical pattern of theatre ownership among these affiliates that is most compatible with the general division of theatre operating territory among all defendants. If local management autonomy has the stimulating effect on efficiency claimed for it by the Paramount witnesses, why should their theatre acquisition activities be directed and controlled by Paramount's New York office any more than their film licensing activities? We think the answer lies in the fact that Paramount could not, in the absence of such control, prevent theatre acquisitions. But the allocation of films among them may be and is accomplished simply by concerted action among the major distributors, the control of all of which is centralized in New York City. Thus, in the case of Paramount, dissolution of the combination is essential not only to permit competition between the Paramount affiliates and other defendants' theatres in licensing films, but is also needed to eliminate the restraint of theatre operating competition now imposed through Paramount's control of the number and location of the theatres they operate.

As for the Fox group, the defendant National Theatres Corporation admittedly has no business function except to operate as a holding company for the various Fox theatre circuits, and link them to the Twentieth Century Fox-Fox Film Corporation, the producing and distributing member of the combination, which owns all of National's stock. The circuits which National owns are also claimed to operate——

Judge Hand: What do you want to do with them, providing all others should be held pure and untainted?

Mr. Wright: I don't think you can hold all others pure and untainted.

Judge Hand: I know you think that. Of course you think that. I am trying to see what your, what I might call, territorial or local grievances are. That is the reason I asked you this question at the beginning.

Mr. Wright: In this case you cannot effectively give the relief against grievances of a primarily local character. The purpose of the case is to attack the general monopolization——

Judge Hand: Of course.

Mr. Wright: (Continuing)—of domestic business.

Judge Hand: I know that. It is evident from your complaint and your brief and everything else, but I had asked you whether you claimed that these regional practices were in themselves bad as between——

Mr. Wright: We do.

Judge Hand: Now, wait a minute. (Continuing)—as between—well, you were just talking about Fox Film; I spoke of that because of the California situation—between Fox Film and their own affiliates?

Mr. Wright: Yes, we say that relationship is illegal per se and should be dissolved.

Judge Hand: What would you do there?

Mr. Wright: Well, the first thing that it seems to me you would obviously have to do would be to dissolve National.

Judge Hand: Forget for a minute this over all contention about divorcing theatres everywhere in the United States. What would you do about Fox if Fox were here alone?

Mr. Wright: That is what I said, the first step, as I see it, would be to dissolve National Theatres Corporation, which is the link between Twentieth Century-Fox Film and these five large circuits in which National owns all of the stock—all of National stock being owned by Twentieth Century-Fox Film. I simply wanted to point out what restraints that theatre operating——

Judge Hand: In other words, you would say, if Fox owned the whole thing, which it does not in a technical, legal sense, and there were no other defendants in the case, that they would violate the Sherman Act and should be dissolved?

Mr. Wright: As to whether or not, if there were a single corporation involved, you would reach the same result, I think there might be some doubt. That is, we do rely——

Judge Hand: You are claiming here that they are essentially one, that they act together, and yet you do not want to say, if they were one, that they would violate the law that the aggregate violates?

Mr. Wright: That is right, if the Court please. There are certain disabilities that you encounter by a multiple corporate form of business organization under the Sherman Act that you might not encounter otherwise. There may not be a rational basis for that distinction but I think it is found in the decisions of the courts.

In the General Motors case, for example, the two corporations were found to have conspired with each other to restrain trade. One was wholly-owned by the other and operated as a virtual department of the parent, and yet, for Sherman Act purposes, they were held capable of conspiring and combining with each other, and I think we do have to look at these structures as they actually exist in determining liability rather than as they might be under some other scheme of control.

The restraints on theatre operating competition placed on these Fox circuits as a result of their common ownership by National is perfectly clear from evidence that these Fox circuits, in addition to this common acquisition control, have from time to time simultaneously executed similar film licensing agreements with other defendant distributors which amount to concerted film buying, and that the effect of such combination has been to permit these circuits to virtually take over the distribution of the films of other defendants in the areas where they operate. An example of that is Exhibit 383, which consists of five simultaneous agreements between United Artists and the five principal Fox theatre circuits, being executed for the exhibitors by Spyros Skouras, president of National.

In the case of Warner, the defendant Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation concededly does the buying for the entire circuit, as is the case with Marcus Loew Booking Agency for the Loew Circuit, and RKO Film Booking Corporation for the RKO circuit.

All of these film-buying corporations are wholly owned by the respective parent corporation and are effective means by which a whole series of corporations with various degrees of affiliation with each other and with the parent companies are combined together for film-buying purposes. They operate to restrain film licensing competition on a scale far greater than the buying combinations condemned by the Crescent and Schine cases. Their continuing existence clearly cannot be justified if the law of those cases is to be applied to these defendants. In short, we submit that the law requires that each of the theatre-operating affiliates of each of these defendants must be made to stand on its own competitive feet by positive dissolution measures of the kind that have already been applied to much smaller units in the industry.

Mr. Marcus: If the Court please, Mr. Wright has pointed out the absence of competition among the theatre-operating defendants. This absence of competition is a large part of a still larger picture of a competitive rigor mortis in this industry.

The eight defendants have adopted and maintained for many years a system of distribution designed and effective to restrain competition among exhibitors and to promote regional circuit monopolies. There has been little variance between any of these defendants in the tenacity with which they have clung to this system or in their conscious use of it to promote the interests of the affiliated and independent circuits to the detriment of the smaller independent. At the time of the consent decree the theatre-operating defendants, faced with the possibility of divorcement of their theatre interests, consented to a slight, but as we shall show, quite inadequate modification of this system. Columbia, Universal and United Artists, not having theatres, have not consented to any modification of it.

This system has for its core the use of restrictive licensing provisions and the well-established business policy of these defendants to fix the status of the smaller independent and to deny him the opportunity of getting out of that status, save as shown in the Crescent, the Schine and in this case when, in response to the wishes of a circuit, they reduced that status.

We will limit our discussion of licensing restrictions to admission prices, clearance and block booking, blind selling. We have collated in our brief at pages 78 to 88 other license provisions which have been used to effect a situation in this industry well within Section 1 and Section 2 of the Sherman Act. As to those provisions, we should hope to be heard with respect to the form any injunctive relief which may be decreed in this case takes.

We note that in variety these restrictions compare with those in the Hartford-Empire and the Sugar Institute cases and, as in those cases, their variety has been a measurable factor in keeping the industry in a largely non-competitive condition.

While we shall argue the illegality of each of these three practices as such, we also take the position that each restriction is illegal as part of the general plan used by these defendants to control the industry unreasonably, and we take the further position that these eight defendants have combined to restrain trade with respect to these and other practices.

All of these defendants have knowingly used these restraints over a long period of time and much of their restrictive force has been derived from the community of their use by all of the eight distributor defendants.

As was said by the Court in the Bigelow case, recently decided:

> "Knowing participation by competitors without previous agreement in a plan, the necessary consequences of which, if carried out, is unreasonable restraint of interstate commerce, is sufficient to establish an unlawful conspiracy."

The same thought, in slightly different words, was expressed by the Court in the Goldman case:

> "Uniform participation by competitors in a particular system of doing business where each is aware of the other's activities, the effect of which is restraint of interstate commerce, is sufficient to establish an unlawful conspiracy under the statutes before us."

The scope and effect of this restrictive pattern of distribution may be pointed out by a brief reference to some of the cases decided within the past ten years.

Judge Hand: Of course, you are really claiming they are contributory infringers, aren't you?

Mr. Marcus: No, your Honor.

Judge Hand: It is the same kind of thing.

Mr. Marcus: No, your Honor. Our claim here is that they have combined to put this industry under a system of restriction so broad that the system can operate only under those restrictions.

Judge Hand: Oh, no. I don't mean your general claim. I am talking about this Bigelow quotation and that sort of thing.

Mr. Marcus: Well, the Bigelow——

Judge Hand: Universal and Columbia and United Artists.

Mr. Marcus: No, your Honor, that quotation from the Bigelow case is on the question of combination by these defendants to do two things, one, to set up a system of restrictive licensing, and, two, to combine with respect to each of the three particular restrictive provisions that I shall deal with.

In the Interstate Circuit case, all of these defendants aided an affiliated circuit in Texas and New Mexico to restrict competition of independent exhibitors and support a local monopoly by restrictive license agreements. In the Perelman case the so-called Big Five and United Artists used restrictive licensing provisions to restrict competition of other producers and competition of independent theatres in Philadelphia with affiliated theatres. In the Schine case restriction of independent competition with the Schine Circuit and support of its monopoly position in large areas in New York, Ohio, Kentucky, Delaware and Maryland were given by all these defendants through the use of restrictive licensing agreements and denying independent exhibitors an opportunity to negotiate for product which Schine desired to use or desired should not be used by his competitors.

Similarly in the Crescent case which involved a large area in the south central part of the United States, these defendants with the exception of Columbia and Universal, helped the Crescent circuit restrict competition of independent exhibitors and secure the circuit's dominance.

In the Goldman case, all of the defendants gave united support to Warner's monopoly of first run exhibition in Philadelphia by denying independent exhibitors the opportunity to negotiate for a first run status. In the Bigelow case, the theatre operating defendants aided a Paramount circuit and a Warner circuit in Chicago to restrict independent competition by keeping the independent exhibitor in a subordinate status through the use of an illegal run and clearance system.

I shall turn now to the question of fixing minimum admission prices. Admittedly all of the defendants use license forms providing for the fixing of minimum admission prices. Admittedly the minimum admission price is inserted as a term of the contract in a great many of the contracts of all of the defendants. It is immaterial whether the exhibitor or the distributor initially determines the specific minimum admission price inserted. Once inserted, it becomes a price-fixing agreement.

The defendants rely on their copyright to justify this kind of price fixing. But it is well established that neither a patent nor a copyright can justify a combination or conspiracy fixing prices whether the subject matter is or is not patented or unpatented, copyrighted or uncopyrighted. It is also well established that neither a patentee nor a copyright holder may use his patent or copyright to restrict competition in what is unpatented.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Marcus, would you say that if there were no conspiracy that the distributor might fix the minimum admission price?

Mr. Marcus: No, your Honor, and that will be another point in my argument.

Judge Bright: Well, was there any fixing of admission price?

Mr. Marcus: Yes, there is.

Judge Bright: They go to an exhibitor and they say, "We will permit you to exhibit this picture for so much providing the theatre charges so much." That is the amount that the man has been charging. Or the reverse of that. The exhibitor goes to the distributor and says, "We will purchase the right to exhibit the picture and we are willing to agree that we will charge so much." Is that price fixing?

Mr. Marcus: Well, your Honors, according to the testimony of the defendants and their argument what happens is that the distributor merely inserts the going admission price of the exhibitor or a price suggested by the exhibitor and each distributor knows that the minimum admission price rarely, if ever, varies from picture to picture.

Judge Goddard: That price fixes terms upon which he may license the feature, doesn't it?

Mr. Marcus: Yes, but there is one other element, your Honor.

Then we have a situation where each defendant, knowing that the other distributor is going to enter into a similar price-fixing agreement, enters into such an agreement, and this sort of concerted action is illegal under the Interstate Circuit case. That in that case it was charged that this sort of concerted action was carried on on the basis of regional price fixing and this one is carried on on the basis of national price fixing certainly cannot help the defendants, and under the Ethyl, Univis, and Hartford Empire cases that is an added factor of illegality.

Judge Bright: Isn't that the case where the distributor said we will not sell your film unless you make the exhibitor raise his admission price? How do you take the position that that is anywhere similar to the situation generally?

Mr. Marcus: We have the parallel situation here, your Honor, where the exhibitor invites each distributor to fix by agreement a certain minimum admission price and of course he knows the admission price of subsequent runs are also going to be fixed, and each distributor getting that invitation enters into similar agreements. It is our position that thus we have a decision similar to the Interstate Circuit case and in that case the court held——

Judge Bright: You say the exhibitor invites the distributor to fix the admission price?

Mr. Marcus: That is the position——

Judge Bright: Is there any evidence of that in this case? Isn't there evidence just to the contrary?

Mr. Marcus: Well, I should have said, your Honor, that the exhibitor invites the defendants to take the admission price that he suggests and in each case each distributor knows that he is going to get a similar invitation, and knowing that, enters into similar price fixing agreements. And we take the position that that brings the situation under the Interstate Circuit case. It was recognized in the Bigelow case where the Court said that the Interstate case "also holds that a conspiracy fixing the minimum admission prices for the exhibition of copyrighted motion picture film is illegal," and in the Schine case Judge Knight cited the Interstate Circuit case as clearly pointing to the reasons for condemning minimum admission price and clearance provisions in a film license contract, and there is no such situation in the Schine case as there was in the Interstate Circuit case.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Marcus, hasn't the copyright owner the absolute right to say on what terms his picture may be shown, such as for instance the charges to be made, in the absence of concerted action?

Mr. Marcus on behalf of Government

Mr. Marcus: We would take the position that he has no right to enter into a price fixing agreement for that purpose.

Judge Goddard: You mean he may not say how much may be charged for seeing his picture? This is in the absence of any concerted action.

Mr. Marcus: That is right. Any restrictions must be judged on the basis of the context in which it is to be found, and we say that in the context of this industry a single agreement by a single distributor would be illegal, especially of course in this industry where each distributor makes a wide series of such agreements all over the country.

On this question of combination we also assert that even if the same minimum admission price were not fixed by each defendant distributor a combination to fix minimum admission prices is illegal whether or not it is a combination to fix the same admission price or not. And this was pointed out by the Court in the Socony-Vacuum Oil Company case, 310 U.S. at page 222.

Judge Bright: Conceding your statement that a combination to fix the price is illegal, what evidence is here that there is a combination to fix prices?

Mr. Marcus: The uniform practice of the defendants. Our argument on this matter of combination is that each defendant distributor knows that the other defendant distributor is getting an invitation from the exhibitor to enter into a price fixing agreement and enters into a similar price fixing agreement.

Judge Bright: You keep calling it a price fixing agreement. Isn't it an agreement to license film upon certain terms and those terms are based upon what admission price the exhibitor says he will charge in his theatre?

Mr. Marcus: Well, your Honor, the minimum admission price is the term of the contract.

Judge Bright: I understand that. But is it a price fixing proposition?

Mr. Marcus: We say yes, once the defendants inserted it as a term of the contract. We might call the contract as a whole a license merely because it covers a great many restrictions, but if one of the restrictions covers price fixing we might also properly call it a price fixing agreement, just as we might call a license agreement a clearance fixing contract.

We call the Court's attention to the fact that if as stated by the defendants——

Judge Hand: Have you got any decisions holding such a thing as that?

Mr. Marcus: Well, your Honor, we feel that the Interstate Circuit case, the Bigelow case, the Goldman case, and also the recently decided American Tobacco case in 147 Fed. (2d) 93—that is a case we did not cite in our brief.

Judge Hand: Well, those cases had very different features, didn't they? Repression and exclusion? Were they based on the price fixing theories that you are urging now?

Mr. Marcus: Yes. They were based upon a finding of conspiracy and combination in a substantially uniform concert of action which is what we charge here.

Judge Hand: To do what? To do what?

Mr. Marcus: In the Bigelow case one of the elements of the case was to fix minimum admission price and in the Tobacco case the price fixing element was the crux of the case.

We call the Court's attention also to the fact that if as stated by the defendants they let the exhibitor fix the minimum admission price then the use of a common agent for this purpose brings them within the Masonite case.

Now we have argued in our brief and we now take the position that a single distributor may not fix minimum admission prices, and that agreements to that effect are outside the copyright privilege and within the Sherman Act. It has been suggested by counsel for Columbia in a book written by them in 1917 entitled "The Law of Motion Pictures and The Theatre", at page 481, that the rights of restrictive licensing by a copyright holder are less than those of a patentee since the copyright law gives no right of exclusive use. This distinction was again pointed out in a Symposium on Copyright Law in 1940 in a book entitled "Third Copyright Symposium" at page 285.

Our case on this point need not rest on such distinction, however. The minimum admission price is not a price fixed for the copyrighted article. It is a price fixed for an entertainment program of which the copyrighted picture is merely one part.

In the Interstate Circuit case the court said:

> "Because the patentee has power to control the price at which his licensee may sell the patented article, it does not follow that the owner of a copyright can dictate that other pictures may not be shown with the licensed film or the admission price which shall be paid for an entertainment which included features other than the particular picture licensed."

Judge Goddard: The reason for that is that that agreement attempted to regulate something beyond one copyright.

Mr. Marcus: Well, this price fixing of minimum admission prices does exactly that too, your Honor, because the program of entertainment for which you and I pay at the ticket office always covers more than the single feature licensed. It is well known that the theatre entertainment program includes such things as shorts, newsreels, and various other things.

The lack of relevance of the minimum admission price to the copyright is seen by the fact that whether the licensing contract covers one or 50 pictures, the price does not vary, except in the case of road shows.

In the case of United States v. Univis Lens Co., 316 U. S. 241—I don't believe that we cited that case in our brief—where patents on a particular lens blank were used through a license system to control the price of the finished lens, the court assumed that the patent was not fully practiced until the finishing licensee had ground and polished the blanks.

The Court said:

> "But merely because the licensee takes the final step in the manufacture of the patented product, by doing work on the blank which he has purchased from the patentee's licensee, it does not follow that the patentee can control the price at which the finished lens is sold."

So in the instant case the fact that the theatre operator in order to practice the copyright has to provide other facilities and entertainment cannot justify control by the distributors of the finished entertainment.

In the Ethyl case at page 456 the Court pointed out that a patentee could not condition his license so as to control conduct by the licensee not embraced in the patent monopoly.

This sort of price fixing present in this case is merely another form of an arrangement to control matters not within the scope of a patent or copyright condemned in Motion Picture Patents, Carbice, Mercoid and many other Supreme Court cases.

As is clear from the record this system of minimum admission price fixing is applied to all runs in order to protect the earlier account. Price fixing for this purpose is clearly illegal under the Interstate Circuit case.

As in the case of other restrictions, minimum admission price restrictions have been deliberately used to discriminate against and even to eliminate a smaller independent exhibitor, to favor his affiliated or other circuit opposition. This is noted in Judge Knight's opinion in the Schine case, in some of the Appeal Board decisions in evidence and illustrated at pages 53 to 56 of the Government's brief.

Those page references, your Honors, are page references to the brief first given to your Honors and not our printed copy, which we are offering to the Court today. The pagination differs somewhat because ours is in larger type.

Judge Bright: Are you going to substitute another brief for the one we already have?

Mr. Marcus on behalf of Government

Mr. Marcus: Yes. That brief was printed up by the defendants. We now have had ours printed by the Government Printing Office. The print is considerably larger.

Mr. Davis: It would be very embarrassing to us, your Honors, if that original brief was discarded because all of our briefs follow the pagination of the brief you have in your hands.

Judge Bright: I don't see why that should have been done. We have to get some kind of a brace to support them now.

Mr. Marcus: My page references will refer to that first brief. There were such things as the pagination of the index which the printer for the defendants took no particular care to make correct, which we have done in our brief.

Judge Hand: Well, you are going to introduce a little more confusion into the case, that is all.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors understand that all our references to the plaintiff's alleged brief refer to the brief that you have in your hand, Judge Bright. That will save some confusion.

Judge Bright: The first brief is the alleged brief, is that it?

Mr. Proskauer: Yes.

Mr. Davis: It almost makes us regret our helpful disposition in which we assumed the printing of that brief in order to expedite the Government's labors.

Mr. Marcus: We appreciate that, Mr. Davis, and we will refer as far as pages are concerned, to those briefs.

Judge Goddard: What will we gain by taking a different paged brief?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, at the time the brief was finished, we could not get a quick brief out of the Government Printing Office. We therefore turned over our typewritten brief to the defendants on the due date. They printed it, served themselves, gave a copy to your Honors. We gave a copy to the Government Printer to print on December 17th.

We did not get a page proof—could not get a page proof back until January 10th, and we got the finished brief yesterday. Now we offer it to you because it is in larger type; it is easier to read; the index has been corrected so it is more usable. If your Honors do not want to use it we certainly do not want to insist that you do, but we have had it printed up for your convenience

Judge Hand: Well, we had better not do that. You see, we have got this all worked over and marked up and everything else, and it is plain enough to read, and it has been printed and submitted, and I assume there are no glaring errors that you wish to call our attention to.

Mr. Wright: There are number of typographical errors which we have also undertaken to correct on this brief. We do not have any extra copies of the other.

Judge Bright: The trouble is that the defendants have referred to the paging of the original brief in theirs.

Mr. Wright: That presents no difficulty. You have a copy of the brief to which the pages refer.

Judge Bright: Isn't that some more work for us to find out what the new pages are?

Mr. Wright: It is offered only as a convenience. If the Court does not want it, that settles it.

Judge Bright: It is not a convenience.

Judge Hand: We do not want it.

Judge Goddard: What I might suggest, if there are any typographical errors in the first brief, I would like to know that.

Mr. Wright: There are, yes.

Judge Hand: Well, I would not like to know them unless they are important. I mean, one of the vices of any long case is correcting minutes and correcting things all the time having no importance. Now if you have got anything important here, of course we ought to know it.

Judge Goddard: I only mean important ones, of course.

Mr. Marcus: I shall now take up the question of clearance.

Mr. Marcus on behalf of Government

Judge Hand: Take up the question of what?

Mr. Marcus: Clearance. Mr. Wright has already stated that the Government's position is that clearance agreements are illegal under the Sherman Act. Generally speaking there are two types——

Judge Hand: Have you been converted too from the state of original sin only a little while ago?

Mr. Marcus: No, your Honor.

Judge Hand: You mean you are pure from the beginning?

Mr. Marcus: From the very beginning. Generally speaking, there are two types of clearance agreements used in this industry. One type consists of an agreement between an exhibitor and a distributor whereby it is agreed that another exhibitor shall be prohibited from showing pictures until the lapse of a specified time interval. The other type consists of an agreement between an exhibitor and a distributor that the former will not show a picture until a specified time after it has been exhibited by another exhibitor. On the one hand we have an agreement between A and B that C shall restrict his competition with A. On the other hand, we have an agreement between A and B that A will restrict his competition with C.

We submit that these types of agreements and combinations are clearly illegal under the Sherman Act.

Judge Bright: How are you going to take care of the problem then that C, the last man to use the picture, is not willing to pay the price for the first exhibition.

Mr. Marcus: I think there are two answers to that, your Honor. That again seems to assume that a system within the Sherman Act would not work in this industry, and we take the position that that is contrary to the premises——

Judge Bright: No. I assume that it is not a violation of the Sherman Act. Now why is it that C cannot pay the price for the first exhibition of the picture?

Mr. Marcus: We do not say he cannot.

Judge Bright: I am assuming he cannot. Would there be a violation of the Sherman Act because he sees fit to buy the pictures upon the understanding that he won't show it for 30 or 50 or 60 days later than the fellow who is willing to pay the price?

Mr. Marcus: Well, one of the principles of the Sherman Act, your Honor, is that what might be done without agreement may be illegal when done by agreement; and in my argument I refer to a case which makes that distinction.

Judge Bright: What would be the benefit of beating the devil around the bush?

Mr. Marcus: Your Honor, in the Interstate Circuit case——

Judge Bright: The Interstate Circuit case? How is that parallel to this situation? There was an exhibitor who just held up a distributor, saying, "If you don't make them charge so much we won't buy your film." How is that parallel here?

Mr. Marcus: That is quite right here. But the defendants in their joint brief, in their arguments on clearance restrictions, almost exactly parallel the argument made by the dissenting opinion in the Interstate Circuit case, and that part of the dissenting opinion dealt with clearance agreements.

Judge Bright: If they lay down with the dissenting opinion, do they get up with fleas?

Mr. Marcus: The thing is, your Honor, that that sort of argument was rejected by the majority of the court. Mr. Justice Roberts took the position that under the majority opinion in the Interstate Circuit case, the clearance agreement would be illegal.

Mr. Raftery: I could not hear you. Who took that?

Mr. Marcus: I believe it was Mr. Justice Roberts who wrote the dissenting opinion.

We may call the Court's attention to the fact that unlike the—— Judge Hand: You will have to repeat that again. It does not make sense to me. What are you claiming about the Interstate Circuit case?

Mr. Marcus: That the argument used by the defendants in their joint brief to justify the validity of clearance agreements as such parallel the arguments made by the dissenting opinion which used what was done in the industry with respect to clearance agreements as a justification for reaching the result contrary to that which was reached by the majority opinion.

Judge Hand: That may be, but the decision did not turn on any such point, did it?

Mr. Marcus: Well, I would have to say that in my opinion, no, your Honor, but the dissenting—well, just a minute, your Honor. The dissenting opinion thought that unless the majority opinion were willing to take the position that clearance agreements as such were illegal, they could not have reached the decision they did reach.

Judge Hand: This present argument you are making from the Interstate case seems to me utterly unpersuasive.

Mr. Marcus: Well, it was unpersuasive to the majority in the Interstate Circuit case, that is, the argument that was made by the three dissenting judges.

Now even if there were a copyright privilege permitting restrictive licensing, we submit the defendants are no better off. According to the defendants' testimony, the exhibitor tells each distributor what his clearance is with another distributor and asks for the same clearance from each. This invitation is accepted and thus we find substantially uniform clearances in many situations. This sort of combination in response to an exhibitor's invitation is clearly illegal under the Interstate Circuit, Bigelow and Goldman cases.

The use of a copyright by any of these defendants to set up, as in this case, a national system of clearance restrictions, goes far outside any possible copyright privilege. The national scope of licensing restrictions was, in our opinion, one of the elements in the court's decision in the Masonite, the Ethyl and the Hartford-Empire cases. In all of those cases a restrictive licensing system was used. And, of course, a copyright does not give one a license to use it to protect others from competition.

Turning to defendants' claim of long use and essentiality of clearance, we will refer the Court to the B. B. Chemical case, in 314 U.S., 495. In that case, in discussing the restrictive use of a method patent, the court said:

> "It is without significance that, as petitioner contends, it is not practicable to exploit the patent rights by granting licenses because of the preference of manufacturers and of the methods by which petitioner has found it convenient to conduct its business. The patent monopoly is not enlarged by reason of the fact that it would be more convenient to the patentee to have it so, or because he cannot avail himself of its benefits within the limits of the grant."

The argument of long use to support the use of basing points restrictive of competition was rejected by the Supreme Court in the recent cases of Corn Products Co. v. Commission, 324 U.S. 726; the Trade Commission v. Staley, 324 U.S. 746.

Clearance and minimum admission price fixing have, of course, a long history of mutual support to fix not only minimum admission prices but also the film rentals of the films licensed. There is nothing in the copyright law or in any other law which permits such price fixing arrangements. Judge Knight, in the Schine case, rightly points to the Interstate Circuit case as inconsistent with the existence of these two types of restrictive agreements in a license.

It is true that in private suits, where a particular exhibitor was simply trying to better his position in the system, a number of lower courts have assumed that the certain local clearance systems were valid in denying relief to these plaintiffs. Thus in the Westway Theatre case cited by the defendants, we find the Court upholding agreements between distributors and an exhibitor in Baltimore, giving the latter clearance over a theatre about to be built, largely on the ground that this was commonly done in the industry. A similar result occurred in Gary, Indiana, when an exhibitor——

Judge Hand: That was Judge Chesnut's case?

Mr. Marcus: That is right, the Westway case.

A similar result occurred in Gary, Indiana, when an exhibitor there complained of his subordination to the Chicago clearances of the affiliated theatre. In the consent decree there is the statement that "it is recognized that clearance, reasonable as to time and area, is essential in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures."

That statement admittedly permitted the arbitrators who heard individual clearance complaints to accept the same basic assumptions as to clearances in making their awards that the District Courts had made in hearing treble damage complaints but it did not adjudicate the validity of clearance as such.

And it is a commentary upon the ineffectiveness of the criteria of the consent decree to bring this system outside of the Sherman Act, that the arbitrators and the Appeal Board deem it necessary to apply clearances in proportion to the degree of competition in a particular situation.

As Mr. Keough testified, clearance is a euphemism for the term protection which was used prior to NRA. Protection, of course, is a more apt description of this system since it is admittedly used primarily to protect some exhibitor—according to the defendants, the one with the bigger and better theatre, against the competition of another exhibitor. This sort of protection we submit is illegal under the Interstate Circuit and Ethyl cases.

Grave doubt is cast upon a claim of essentiality of clearance by the use of day and date booking, extended runs, move-overs, and basing runs upon admission prices. We may note that Mr. Montague's recognition of clearance as a weed in the garden of distribution is hardly compatible with a recognition of its essentiality. An argument of necessity of time intervals—and I believe this was the point you were raising, Judge Bright—an argument of necessity of time intervals between runs is not an argument for clearance restrictions. As the Supreme Court said in the Sugar Institute case, 297 U.S. 553,585, with respect to the contention of the defendants that it was necessary in that industry to announce price changes before sales,—and I quote——

> "Defendants' argument on this point is a forcible one, but we need not follow it through in detail. For the question, as we have seen, is not really with respect to the practice of making price announcements in advance of sales, but as to defendants' requirements of adherence to such announcements without the deviations which open and fair competition might require or justify."

In the Ethyl, Univis Lens and Hartford-Empire cases the Supreme Court struck down an entire system of restrictive licensing despite the fact that there were aspects of that restrictive licensing system which might have stood up alone.

Under the doctrine of those cases another ground for doing away with the clearance system is its very extensive misuse to restrain competition. As is noted by the trial courts in the Crescent and Schine cases, clearances were given to circuit operators where none had existed before, exhibitors in one town who had clearance over theatres in another town found this situation reversed when a circuit acquired the latter theatre.

Judge Goddard: How many instances of that are there in the record?

Mr. Marcus: There are many instances in the findings of fact in the Crescent case, your Honor, and in the Schine case.

Judge Goddard: How about here in this record, this case?

Mr. Marcus on behalf of Government

Mr. Marcus: Well, we take it, your Honor, that your Honor is entitled and should, with respect to the national scope of these various practices, to look at the decisions of other courts involving these practices.

Judge Goddard: Yes, I agree with you, but you made a statement, and I was interested to know how it was supported by the facts. How many instances are there of clearances changed when it was taken over by an affiliate?

Mr. Marcus: If your Honor would like, I should be glad to collate the number and the specific instances as found in the findings of fact in the Crescent case——

Judge Goddard: No, I am talking about this case.

Mr. Marcus: In this case, your Honor, we did not attempt to introduce evidence with respect to individual situations.

Judge Goddard: I think there was some point made of that in the Government's brief, and I think the various defendants have supplied that information and there are very few.

Mr. Marcus: Your Honor, the arbitration decisions themselves point to that.

Mr. Proskauer: How many?

Judge Goddard: That is a little different situation. The arbitrators passed upon, as I understand it the length of clearance.

Mr. Marcus: Well, there is at least one decision which we offered in evidence which I recall, in which the arbitrators noted that—I think it was in Chicago—there had been a certain clearance, and then it had been increased.

Judge Goddard: That may have been, but I think there are very few. If there are more, I should be interested to know it. I think there are very few.

Mr. Marcus: Well, we could attempt to look through the arbitration decisions to ascertain that, but I say that on that question your Honors are clearly entitled to and should look at the Crescent and Schine cases.

Clearances inordinate in time and area were abundantly bestowed on favored circuits. We have set out at pages 78 to 85 of our brief instances——

Judge Bright: Which pages did you say?

Mr. Marcus: 78 to 85.

Judge Bright: Are these pages in your new brief or the old brief?

Mr. Marcus: The old brief. We have set out at these pages instances of clearances so long in time and area as on their face to be grossly restrictive of competition. The defendants have responded in their briefs by citing still other similar instances from the record in this case. Clearance has been a major device to promote and maintain affiliated theatre operation dominant in local areas. The arbitration decisions illustrate other instances of the misuse of clearance.

We say flatly that the primary basis of the clearance system is to protect favored exhibitors from competition without regard to respective revenue possibilities of one theatre as compared with another. The common form of clearance is one given to a theatre or theatres over a town, over specific towns, or over a geographical area and not over other specified theatres. Universal currently insures the Skouras circuit from competition by expressly giving it clearance over new theatres, and Loew has similarly protected its theatres in Metropolitan New York.

The defendants have long abandoned any attempt to determine under any public interest criteria the reasonableness of any particular clearance. For the most part, they take a clearance as they find it, as stated by Mr. Montague, except when persuaded by a circuit to grant a clearance detrimental to a smaller competitor or when forced by court or arbitration action to reduce a particular clearance. To illustrate, I should like to read a clearance Fox was giving an exhibitor in Chester, Pennsylvania, in the 1943-44 season. This is the clearance:

"The only run for features and shorts, excepting News, the Exhibitor is entitled to pursuant to this contract is first run Chester, Pennsylvania, with the usual protection and clearance granted to first run exhibitors in said City. Such clearance or protection, however, shall be subject to any change or modification made by any Local Clearance and Zoning Board having jurisdiction thereof in accordance with the 'Code of Fair Competition for the Motion Picture Industry' as approved on November 27, 1933 by President Roosevelt."

Mr. Caskey: What is that?

Mr. Raftery: What exhibit is that?

Mr. Marcus: 42.

We submit that clearance restrictions should be held invalid both because of their basic illegality and their extensive misuse.

Judge Bright: Do I understand you that any clearance provision in any contract is a violation of the Sherman Act?

Mr. Marcus: We take that position in the context of this industry, yes.

Judge Bright: By an individual or a group?

Mr. Marcus: That is right, and your Honor must not forget that when we talk about clearance agreements, we are not talking about a clearance agreement between Loew's and some specific exhibitor in New York; we are talking about clearances by Loew with exhibitors all over the country, setting up a restrictive time interval system.

I shall turn now to the question of block booking and blind selling. Of the defendants, only Columbia and Universal are presently selling or licensing pictures in large blocks without previous trade showings. The other defendants have been able, according to the testimony in this case, to get along well under a contrary system and we hardly think these two defendants can in good faith assert inability to do likewise.

Since there has been no adjudication against any of these defendants of the illegality of this system of distribution, the problem is significant with respect to all of them. The effect of this system, of course, is to compel many exhibitors to take most or none of the pictures licensed. We submit that this is the sort of tying agreement condemned in a long line of cases. Its use as a means of mutual enforcement of the value of different copyrights is clearly improper under the Ethyl case, where the Court held that the monopoly power or one patent could not be used to expand the monopoly power of another patent. By itself, the monopoly power of a particular copyrighted picture may be slight, depending upon its drawing power. If its value is slight, it has scant chance of monopolizing the playing time or the more profitable part of the playing time of any exhibitor. But when it and others like it become the tail to the kite of the more desirable pictures, we have the kind of situation the Court in the Ethyl case condemned.

It is a device, as shown in the Schine and Crescent cases, readily susceptible to use as a means of promoting a favored circuit monopoly of exhibitions. Its use compels an exhibitor to take the bad with the good, to the detriment of the movie-going public. When coupled with, as it is, minimum admission price restrictions, it becomes a device to control admission prices through the group strength of many copyrights.

For all of these reasons, it is submitted that block booking and blind selling should be held invalid. We believe that the—— Judge Hand: What about the provision in the consent decree about the limited number?

Mr. Marcus: Five? Well.——

Judge Hand: Is that too many? Is everything too many above one?

Mr. Marcus: That provision, your Honor, has expired.

The Court: No, no, no. I am not talking about whether it has expired or has not expired. I am talking about your doctrine.

Mr. Marcus on behalf of Government

Mr. Marcus: I think, your Honor, whether or not selling five pictures together might be a violation of the Sherman Act does not reflect upon whether selling an entire season's product is invalid under the Sherman Act. There are——

Judge Hand: Very likely it does not. I merely asked you another question. If you cannot answer it, all right. I don't blame you. This is a very confused subject. You ought not to be as much confused as I generally am.

Mr. Marcus: Your Honor, I do not think that question can be answered without seeing how selling in blocks of five is used in this industry to control competition. I should say that as far as selling a season's product, on this basis it clearly does control and restrict competition unreasonably.

We believe that the Famous-Lasky case——

Judge Hand: Apparently they conceded that a great many of them did, or, at least, Judge Goddard held that and signed the consent decree to that effect.

Mr. Marcus: The consent decree expressly states nothing in it shall be construed as a finding.

Judge Hand: Oh, yes, that's right. It is interlocutory.

Mr. Proskauer: None of us is selling a season's product anymore—none of the five.

Mr. Marcus: Well, some of the defendant distributors are selling in blocks larger than five. Loew has sold, on several occasions, blocks larger than five.

We believe that the Famous-Lasky case in 57 Fed. (2d) 152 went off on the ground that, under the circumstances of that case, block booking was not conducive of a monopoly by the defendant. We think, moreover, that its language with respect to tying agreements is not supported by later Supreme Court cases.

In closing, we may point out to the Court that the scope and persistence of restrictive licensing has brought about a condition where both distributors and exhibitors bargain more over the value of a restriction than over the value of a copyrighted film.

We submit to the Court that judgment in this case, to be effective must include provisions enjoining all of these defendant distributors from employing restrictive trade practices, in addition to the divestiture of the producer exhibitor combinations.

Judge Hand: We will adjourn now until 2.15.

(Recess to 2.15 p.m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANT LOEW'S

Mr. Davis: If the Court please, I open on behalf of the defendant Loew's, Inc.

No doubt some of the things which I have to say will be of common interest to all of the defendants in the case just as in our briefs. Your Honors have observed that we have undertaken to file two briefs on behalf of all the defendants, one of them dealing with the Consent Decree and the arbitrations under it, the other dealing with certain general principles which we think are applicable throughout; and in addition each one of us have filed a brief in which we undertake to expound our position as we see it vis-a-vis the proof in the case.

The arguments to which we have listened this morning from my brothers Wright and Marcus have left me in some doubt as to the exact scope and course of the argument which I thought necessary to be made. I am disposed to discard no little amount of detail which I expected to invite the Court's attention to and devote myself rather to the general principles of law which seem to us to be decisive.

It must be clear to your Honors that this is quite a unique case in the history of cases under the Sherman law. It is the most ambitions antitrust case so far as I know that has ever been presented to any court—ambitious because it has as its confessed purpose the complete readjustment and change of the economic structure of an entire industry. In so far as I know no case has ever come forward with any such ambitious scope as that. It is unique because I think it may fairly be said that it is the most amorphous antitrust case ever presented. It is a case in which the lines of definition of the complaint are more indistinct that in any other case that I can recall and in which the logical connection between the facts in evidence and the ultimate conclusion the Government seeks to draw is more vague and imperfect. It is unique I think among antitrust cases because it is the most profoundly critical antitrust case that I can remember.

The complaint as it emerges from the briefs and arguments of Government's counsel is with utter frankness addressed to the industry as a whole represented in the person of these eight defendants and addressed to the entire body of practice which that industry has built up. I did not realize until I listened to my learned friends how many things could be wrong with a single industry.

Some of these companies, perhaps not all, choose to conduct their activities in a corporate form, having a parent corporation, and instead of mere departmental divisions, subsidiary corporations wholly owned through which they conduct their consolidated corporate enterprise. That is a very familiar phenomenon resorted to for many reasons, convenience, and of bookkeeping, and where the corporation is indulging in the ownership of real estate is extremely common, so that the legal title may be vested in an owner of residence in the same state in which the reality is situated for reasons of local legislation and of local taxation.

Now, that we are told is all wrong. That we are solemnly told by counsel for the Government is a combination, a conspiracy between the parent corporation and its subsidiaries which is obnoxious to the Sherman law. They may abandon these hundred per cent subsidiaries; they may draw back all the titles into the body of the parent, that is all right. We are solemnly told that now to conduct a corporate enterprise through a parent corporation with corporate subsidiaries is obnoxious to the Sherman law as a combination between them.

We are told again that integration is an offense per se; that it is no longer legal for the manufacturer to pursue his product all the way from the raw material to the manufacture, to the distribution, to the sale at wholesale or retail through facilities of his own creation into the hands of the ultimate consumer. Therefore any such integration as appears with each one of these defendants, except the pretermitted three, that integration is in itself an offense against the Sherman law.

We are told that it is an offense for independent manufacturers to sell or license their product to others who are engaged in the same business, and that whenever these corporations license their films one to another, that thereby there is a combination in restraint of trade, and that that practice ought to be abandoned.

Now, I observed that when the question was bluntly put to Government counsel, "Do you maintain that these defendants should exhibit their films in their own theatres but should not license them for exhibition in the theatre of any other?"—I observed that counsel approached the answer to that question with great temerity, and well he might. For how it can be made an offense under the Sherman law for the owner of property to sell it to somebody else simply because that other person is in the same business, staggers one's legal imagination. But that is wrong.

They say that the fixation of admission prices in a license contract is a fixation of prices such as denounced by the Trenton Potteries and other cases, and that is wrong.

They say that the system of runs is wrong because, instead of negotiating with the licensee for the exhibition at a fixed time and place, these companies ought to put their films on the auction block and on such a day have an Irish come-all-ye and invite all prospective users to submit competitive bids and, therefore, that the system of runs is wrong.

They say the system of clearance is wrong, and I was both interested and relieved to have counsel for the Government make a direct answer as to the Government's position on that question because up to this time there has been some hesitation about that—there is some hesitation about that in the Government's brief. In the Government's brief they intimate that they thought at one time it was right, when the consent decree was entered, but that perhaps in the light of further knowledge they may then have been wrong. Not an admission that they were wrong but a concession of that possibility. This morning my brother Wright has answered affirmatively that all clearance in any contract by a single distributor is per se restraint of trade in a violation of the Sherman law.

We are told that cross-licensing is wrong and, by cross-licensing, and I am repeating myself for a moment, the licensing of films by one to another. When that criticism first appeared it was a criticism of cross-licensing. Then counsel for the Government invented a newer, and in their opinion no doubt a better phrase, diagonal license, whatever that may mean. And now this morning the same topic has appeared under the title of cross use of each other's theatres.

I remember in Alice in Wonderland Humpty-Dumpty says, "When I use a word, it means just what I want it to mean." And Alice says, "Well, how can you make one word mean so many different things?" And Humpty-Dumpty says; "Well, it means what I want it to mean. The only question is, who is to be master?"

I don't know what mastery the Government gets out of cross-licensing, diagonal licensing, cross use. Simply means that they are selling one to the other the commodity that they respectively own. But that is wrong.

Then we thought that the system of arbitration affirmatively commended in the Government's brief, for in its brief the Government speaks of it in terms that narrowly approach eulogy; it commends the impartiality of the arbitrators; commends the diligence with which they have discharged their task, yet admits that some beneficial results have been achieved; and one might think that on the whole the system of arbitration was to go unscathed of criticism here, especially so when your Honors recall that that system of arbitration was not invented by the defendants in this case to avoid divorcement of their theatres, as my brother Wright intimated this morning, as a means of escaping on our part from a worser fate. It was prayed for by the Government in its amended and supplemental complaint. It prayed that the Court might set up just such a system of arbitration as it did. There was finally issued the court decree on the prayer of the Government and the assent of the defendants. And it is a little disappointing to have the Government say this morning that the arbitration system is bad and probably exceeded the power of the court at the time it was created and decreed.

Now, that is a rather sweeping indictment, not only of these defendants, but of an entire industry, and I repeat that I do not recall in any previous antitrust proceeding so general, so sweeping, so ambitious an effort to recreate—the language of my learned friend—to recreate the entire economic structure of one of the principal industries in this country.

I can conceive of that sort of an argument being addressed to a congressional committee by some hot reformer. I suppose within the limits of the Constitution there are things that the Congress can decree. I am not as certain about the limits of its power as I once was and I would be slow to say that Congress might not do some things which are along the line that my brother Wright suggests. But this is a court of justice where we are proceeding upon a charge made, a defense interposed, and proof taken, and we may have what theories we please about what is economically sound and unsound and what commercially is wise and unwise, but the whole question is what is the charge and what is the proof?

Mr. Davis on behalf of Defendant Loew's

Now my brother Wright was kind enough to state on our behalf certain positions which he conceived that we had taken. I made a note of them at the time.

He suggests that our position is that what we have done, if done under sound business judgment, is thereby vindicated face to face with the Sherman law. He suggests that we hold that the consent decree is an immunity cloak to us against any violations of the Sherman law. I was particularly interested in the Government's brief to read on page 5—and I read it for the purpose of comment only—after stating certain principles of law about which there can be no great dispute he endeavors to put us in the wrong from the beginning by saying, "The legal propositions relied upon by the defendants may be roughly stated as converse of the foregoing propositions"—which would mean the converse of everything that has been decided under the Sherman Act with perhaps the following addition—"a use of competitive restraint by any business organization or combination of business organizations which enhances their ability to serve the public by increasing their financial strength and stability may justify a court in approving such restraints as reasonable even though they would otherwise be regarded as unreasonable and therefore violative of the Act."

In other words, proof that a certain practice or a contract or a combination or a conspiracy improves the financial strength and stability of the participants is according to what my brother Wright ascribes to us a defense against a violation of the Sherman law.

Now I shan't claim for myself or my colleagues here at the table any profound legal learning. We are all in our modest way trying to do what we can to help our clients, simple country boys, if you choose, trying to make a living. But there isn't any man at this table so foolish as to assert any of the propositions which my brother Wright has ascribed to us, and I must put that away as beyond contemplation.

He ascribes to us the proposition that habitual use of an illegal practice may come to sanction it,—sort of a statute of limitations or estoppel by time against the Government.

Let me state our conception of the law of this case. There is no dispute about it, there can be no dispute about it for so far as I know there isn't a legal principle necessary for the decision of this case that has the slightest novelty or which is not so axiomatic that it needs no citation for its support.

Eight corporations, wholly diverse and separate, as shown by the record, without any organizational contact, without any common ownership, without any common management, are called into court under what charge? Read the amended complaint. First that they are parties to a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade, violation of Section 1 of the Sherman law; and second, that they are parties to a monopoly, to an attempt to monopolize, and to a conspiracy to monopolize in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman law.

Now those are the things we are charged with.

The gravamen of the offense under Section 1 of the Sherman law is a partnership in crime, some form of deliberately concerted action, some contract, combination or conspiracy, some agreement shown between the persons accused to effect the restraint complained of. Lacking proof of such an agreement the charge absolutely fails.

Throughout my brother Wright's brief there runs the word "collectively", a recognition on the part of the Government that collective and concerted action was necessary to support their complaint.

And if you take away that one word "collectively" from the Government's brief, there is nothing left of any substance whatever.

Now of course the existence or non-existence of such a conspiracy can be shown either by direct evidence, by such a written contract as my friend alludes to, or by some of the inter-office correspondence on which prosecutors under the Sherman Law have advantaged for so long—to such an extent, indeed, that some people have said that what American business needed is more illiterate business men. But it may be so proven. It may be proven as well by circumstances like any other fact. But if the proof is circumstantial, it must be something more than raise a mere suspicion. It must be inconsistent with innocence and consistent only with guilt; for this is a highly penal statute; and whether the Government is proceeding on the criminal or the civil side of the court, presumption of innocence attends the defendants throughout, and the burden of rebutting that presumption is and must remain upon the Government. And where the effort is to prove a combination or conspiracy by circumstances, mere uniformity or similarity in matters lawful in themselves, and least of all the type of well established and recognized trade practices common to the industry as a whole, does not raise an inference of a combination or conspiracy in violation of the Act. And, of course, where the combination or conspiracy is shown, there must be some unreasonable restraint.

Now we do not press that doctrine as far as my friend thinks we do. We do not say that reasonableness or unreasonableness is to be determined by the profitable or unprofitable character of the restraint resorted to, but there must be some showing of public injury which renders the restraint unreasonable. For concerted action may as well be innocent as wicked, and what the Act is primarily aimed at is destruction of competition in trade to the injury of the public.

Of course there are many cases, some of which my friends have alluded to, where certain practices manifestly injurious have been denounced. Price fixing; we agree that is bad. Concerted curtailment of production; we agree that is bad. Division of markets; we agree that is bad. The destruction or exclusion of competitors deliberately resorted to are already recognized as ways to the forbidden end. And I challenge my friends for the Government in all this mass of documents to point to one single document that utilizes any of those forbidden means.

Section 2 of the Sherman law under which we are also called to answer, forbids any monopolizing, attempts to monopolize or conspiracy or combination to monopolize.

Now it has been recognized by all the decisions that there is some overlap betwen the field of the first and second sections of the Sherman law. The most apparent perhaps is that monopoly is ordinarily the end of which the restraint of trade is the mere means. But when the Government charged a combination or conspiracy to monopolize, it must prove it in the same fashion as they proceed to prove a combination or conspiracy under Section 1. And I call attention to a distinction, a distinction which in some aspects of this case has not been observed or commented on, between the use of the word "monopoly" as a term in law, and the use of the term "monopoly" in its vulgar and common employment. Commonly employed, it is frequently used as a synonym for solitude; but monopoly in law is not solitude alone. It is the intent and the power and the purpose to exclude others.

A man who has the only theatre in a city or a town or a village is no monopolist. The only manufacturer producing certain commodities is not, per se, a monopolist, even though they both stand alone in their respective fields. But have they the power and the desire and the purpose to exclude others from entering that field? Or have they achieved that solitude by the destruction of others who stood in their path? That is monopoly in the legal sense.

Now of course it is highly competent, when you are investigating a monopoly, to consider the share of the total trade which the monopolist has absorbed to himself; but it is his share of the total that is important; it is his proportion of the field that he has grossed that is critical. What others may have, his rivals, cannot be added to his in order to build up a wholly fictitious picture of engrossment, which is exactly what our friends have attempted here. Monopoly cannot be built up by mere mathematical addition. One and one make two, and two and two make four, and under certain circumstances that is a highly interesting mathematical phenomenon. But you cant' take my business and add it it to the business of a half dozen rivals and say that as a group we have 70, 80, 90 per cent of all the business done, and call us a monopoly.

So that when in the Government's brief and in argument they allude to the fact that these five culprits collectively or as a group produce 70 per cent of the pictures produced, or more perhaps; 70 per cent of the revenue derived, and, ergo, they have achieved a monopoly, that is not enough unless then can prove that we have shared a common purpose, pursued a common end, and reached it by concerted action.

I challenge my friend to point to anything in this record that will support that proposition. I challenge any showing of a financial interest; any proof of a combination or conspiracy; and in its absence, all this multiplicity of what I might call adding machine testimony, has no significance in this case whatever. You might as well have filed the Dow Jones report of averages so far as illuminating this controversy.

Now, so much for the Sherman law. I hope I have made the position of the defendants here too plain to be susceptible of misrepresentation or of misunderstanding; and if that is not the law of the Sherman Act, if that is not what can be distilled from all of the decisions, then I confess my inability. And I do not find in the Interstate case and the Crescent case and the Schine case and the Bigelow case, and the Goldman case, and these other cases on which my friends so constantly rely—I do not find any doctrine different from that at all.

Let us talk about copyrights. Of course the monopoly of a copyright is one created by law. It is a designed and purposeful legal monopoly, and like patents, believed to be created under the Constitution in the public interest. It gives to the owner of a copyrighted book, picture, drama, or musical composition, the right to exclude all others from using, selling, reproducing, exhibiting or imitating without his consent. Except for that right to exclude it does not, as I understand the copyright law, enlarge the rights which are already inherent in the owner of a copyrighted article.

Mr. Davis on behalf of Defendant Loew's

I have not, like some of my learned friends here, written any books on the subject that can be quoted either for or against me, but that is my conception of the Copyright Law, and any author is at liberty to criticise me. All the Copyright Law does, is not to enlarge those rights which are inherent in an owner by virtue of his act of creation, but to protect those rights from invasion by others. He may exact for his consent to such an invasion a price fixed between himself and the licensee by any measurement he chooses. I lay that down as fundamental. It is part of the right of an owner. Of course, he cannot lay down as a measurement the number of murders committed, but any measurement not contrary to public policy is within his absolute right to adopt. It may be a flat price in dollars. That is within his rights. If it is a per diem picture he may charge so much per diem for each day of its exhibition, utterly regardless of the box office receipts. If it is shown at a theatre, if he chooses to, he can charge so much per capita for every person who passes the ticket window regardless of the price of the tickets. He can even count the traditional and familiar red-headed persons who pass in or out and charge so much per auburn-haired person. I don't like to leave the red-headed person out because we never do in stating a summary of this kind. It may be a percentage of either the gross or the net receipts on that particular exhibition, or his measure may be a percentage of the over-all income of the licensee. And if it is either of the latter, the copyright owner, when he names his percentage, and in order to protect his anticipated revenue and return, may inquire of the theatre owner what are his minimum admission prices out of which receipts are to grow, and may agree with the theatre owner as a part of this contract of license that during the life of the exhibition, such prices shall be maintained.

Now, that is what these people have done. They have repeatedly said in their license contracts, during the exhibition of the licensed article we shall receive such a percentage, and that we may know in advance what we can expect to receive and may be protected in having that expectation realized, you shall charge not less, during this exhibition, than the prices you are charging at your theatre.

Judge Hand: The Government, as I understand it, says that irrespective of combination, irrespective of anything, if that was done by a single man, it would violate the Sherman Act. You understand that, don't you?

Mr. Davis: I understood the Government to say that, and I don't mind saying, your Honor, that I gasped as I heard it.

The Court: Well, they did not get that far before, and they have evidently had a conversion, and the thing has been progressive. As Herr Klein said, "Nothing ever is. Everything becomes."

Mr. Davis: I am not sure that I would call the Government's attitude conversion. Facilis descensus averni. Since having started down this slope, they do not know just where to put their feet and stop.

Judge Hand: I was having a bit of a controversy with my brother-in-law as to whether it shouldn't be Averni, and he has gone back to the 14th Century and found statements in which it was Averno then.

Mr. Davis: All I have to say to your Honor, in your defense and mine, is that there was some terribly bad Latin put out in the medieval years.

On the copyright factor of this thing, the copyright aspect, enters in just here: I repeat that the owner has a perfect right to measure his compensation by any measurement he chooses to adopt, that is not in violation of public policy. We all know there are certain contracts that per se violate public policy and cannot be entered into, restraint of marriage, contracts of felony and whatever, but as long as he stays out of those recognized limits, he is the master of his own measurement.

These contracts have this peculiarity. Under these contracts the motion picture producer remains at all times the owner of the copyrighted article and of the rolls of film by which it is to be reproduced. That he never parts with. The relations between him and the exhibitor are those of licensor and licensee, so far as the copyright article is concerned, and bailor and bailee, for use so far as the films are concerned.

The naming of the admission price to the theatre is not fixing a price for resale of the article. This occurs where a copyrighted book, for instance, is sold outright for a named price to the book seller and freed to the channels of trade. There the original copyright owner has parted with all interest in the article, he has received his reward, it has entered the channels of trade, and his dominion over it and the price to be received for it is entirely gone. That is the Bobbs-Merrill case. In this case the copyrighted article never enters the channels of trade and the owner never parts with its dominion.

It may be admitted that where the copyrighted article is sold outright a resale price fixed by the original vendor who has parted with it cannot be imposed. But where the vendor or the licensor retains the full license and control and merely permits a showing for a return upon compensatory terms it is entirely different. It is quite like the case where the owner of real estate leases his building for a specified time and specified use and takes by way of rental certain percentage of the rents which his tenant collects for the use of the building, with a covenant that no leases shall be made at less than so much per square foot. There is no price fixing about that except that he gets his revenue out of the profits earned on the use of the leased or licensed article.

Well, let's come to integration. The Government tells us that the integrated structure of this industry—and this really is its principal complaint; indeed the Government's brief opens with the—shall I say somewhat confident statement that the only thing the Court need be concerned with here is relief—and when I saw all these exhibits going in I thought that was probably true—but it must be assumed from the Government's brief that the offense has been proven, guilt has been established and that the defendants here are on their hands and knees awaiting the final sentence, and that all that is important here is relief and all the relief that is important is to divorce these people from their theatres.

Mr. Davis on behalf of Defendant Loew's

May I say in passing before I go down to a little further disquisition on the law that I wonder if the magnitude of that operation has ever occurred to the learned counsel for the Government. My client has theatres of a book value of—I am not sure about the figures—$60,000,000—of that order. My friends have clients who are equally fortunate in the possession of considerable amount of real estate. There are some—what is it?—4000 or 4500 affiliated theatres. Well, whatever it is—several thousand theatres owned by these corporations, of superior character most of them, so much so that I think nobody who listens to this testimony here would dispute, the largest, the best theatres in the country; and the Court is to order them to be sold, they are to be divorced. I supposed sold. Certainly the Court is not going to order them to be burned even in the pursuit of so righteous a purpose as the vindication of the Sherman law. Sold to whom? Are they to be sold theatre by theatre and town by town? Are they to be closed until some local speculator comes and is willing to take it over?

I have assumed that the Government would recoil from the idea of having them sold in large blocks to any syndicated operation for fear that they might be building up a worse monopoly than the one they have successfully destroyed. Who is to buy them? When are they to be sold? How long must they be closed before a prospective purchaser appeared? What is to happen to the industry in the meantime? Who is to rent them? Who is to exhibit in them? I wonder as a practical matter—and I assume we all claim to be practical men whether we are or not—I wonder whether the learned counsel for the Government have appreciated the magnitude of the surgical operation for which they are so loudly clamoring.

Now I take it that the common law right—I go back to the law—of any manufacturer, I care not in what line it may be—to follow his article all the way from the assembling of the raw material through the intervening stages of manufacture, distribution and sale, whether wholesale or retail, whether under the roofs of another or under his own, to the hand of the ultimate consumer has not been denied at any time. And for myself, again with my reservations as to the present limitations of the Constitution, I do not think it to be constitutionally deniable. I can imagine no statute that would cut off that right without interfering with the Fifth Amendment if it still survives.

Now the fact that a successful integration may give the integrated enterprise an economic advantage over rivals who have not chosen to follow a similar course—and that is the gravamen of the Government's complaint—is nothing to its discredit in law or in morals. The free competition which the Sherman law was enacted to preserve contemplates exactly that result. Competition means the struggle of one to obtain what another equally desires. It is intended by the underlying logic of the Sherman law that the battle shall be to the strong and the race shall be to the swift, and success is not penalized by it. Nor are men robbed by it by the methods and means to obtain that success, and it does not seek to bring about a dead level of economic or financial equality. If these defendants find it to their profit to produce, to distribute and to exhibit in their own theatres—a phrase which popped up earlier in this case—at exorbitant profits, that is a matter of the most entire inconsequence so far as the Sherman law is concerned. I think we have shown that our profits are not exorbitant. I think all of us will admit that we wish they were more. But whether more or less is a matter of entire inconsequence here.

Now so much for integration. That is our position about it, and we challenge the Government to put in its surgical knife at the point it wants and dismember the living body of this industry.

I want to say something about uniform trade practices. It was ascribed to us by my brother Wright this morning the conception that practices long continued acquired a certain measure of sanction and that we rely upon the habits of the industry for our defense. I repudiate that suggestion. A practice which of itself is a violation of law does not get any better by repetition. In fact, the burden of guilt may only pile a little higher. But uniform trade practices without more—without more, I repeat, are no proof whatever of conspiracy or combination. Every line of business of which I have any knowledge evolves certain methods peculiar to itself by which it may be most profitably carried on. I know of no exception; not even the law. They evolve, as has been the case here, a glossary of terms peculiar to themselves. And where a certain practice initiated by one proves useful it is sure to find imitators, and these may appear in such numbers as to make the practice universal. That is a very, very common phenomenon. In this industry such are the practices of runs, clearances, percentage contracts; minimum admission prices, and such too is the general over-all similarity—not identity, but similarity of licensing contracts, similarity which in certain businesses like insurance is compelled by law.

One other point which I emphasized in opening the case and desire to emphasize at its close in view of some remark by my brother Marcus in which he asserted that the Court would take cognizance of violations instanced by the Interstate Circuit, Crescent, the Schine, the Goldman and other cases, and of the arbiter awards. I wish to emphasize again that absent proof of conspiracy, isolated cases, especially where they have been adjudicated and remedy has been applied, contracts, instances are inadmissible absent conspiracy against third persons not parties to the particular transaction. I insist upon that now, I insisted upon it in opening, and I wish my client be judged only by so much of the proof as is addressed to its alleged misconduct.

I am trying, your Honors, to ration myself.

(To Mr. Proskauer): Are you getting impatient?

Mr. Proskauer: Never when I listen to you.

Mr. Davis: Thank you. That is very handsome.

Well, I shall hurry.

Now, tested by these legal principles—and I offer them for criticism or dispute—tested by what I claim to be these thoroughly tested legal principles, axiomatic in character, how does my particular client stand here?

We began the case with a charge of a monopoly of production. In the light of the proof of the manner in which production was carried on, and the freedom to whomsoever willed to enter into that particular activity, the Government withdrew that charge and admitted that it no longer charged any effort to monopolize the production of motion picture features.

We were left with distribution and exhibition. How does my defendant Loew stand on the question of distribution? Have we monopolized it? Have we restrained it? We produced 33 features last year and six specials. We distributed them freely over the country. We showed them in roughly all of the theatres of the country. We sold them under license contracts which contained the features which are now complained of; and if those features were illegal, we as to each individual contract restrained trade.

The testimony of Mr. Rodgers was that in one season we made about 180,000 such contracts—or maybe it was in less than a season, I am not sure—and if guilty, let it be said we were guilty that year 180,000 times, which would seem to be a burden of guilt enough to sink any defense.

Now, what did we do that was wrong? That is what we want to know.

Said my friend he would favor selling these films competitively. That is to say, at public auction. Is it conceivable that this industry could do that? Here are 18,076 theatres in the United States. They make an average of 300 to 350 films of each feature which rotate in sequence the country over. Could they produce if they wanted to 18,076 films, rolls, reels, at one time, and send them the country over to every theatre? In the first place, it would be folly, and in the second place it would be an economic impossibility. There is not a company, no matter how prosperous, in the business that could possibly do it. If that be true, they have got to be shown somewhere, some place before they are shown somewhere else. You can't perform on these films the miracle of the loaves and fishes and have 300 films simultaneously serve 18,076 theatres. And if you have got to show them some place before you show them elsewhere, obviously you have got to select those places, and you have got to negotiate with the proprietor of those theatres the terms on which he shall have this privilege of exhibition.

Now, we put on the stand the witness Rodgers, and Loew's Exhibit L-13, a list of all the first-run theatres in the critical 92 cities. He gave the reasons why he showed his films first run in this theatre and that and every one of them. 36 of them were cities in which Loew itself had the first run. The others were divided between affiliated and independent theatres. The evidence shows that in some cases where there were affiliated theatres he showed first runs in independents, and vice versa. He gave clearance.

Now, it amazes me that anybody should misunderstand the legal foundation of clearance. I do not think it draws wholly from the Copyright Law. I think it is a sample—not just the word I want—an incident of the oldest form of commercial restraint that the books contain, which neither the Sherman Law nor any other law has ever denounced. It is elementary; it is Hornbook law that the vendor selling a piece of property in order to protect the thing his vendee has bought may disable himself for a reasonable time and in a reasonable area from competing himself or putting anybody else in competition with him. I sell a grocery store and I contract with my vendee that I won't go into the grocery business in that town for a certain period of time. The oldest form of restraint that I can remember in the commercial law, bad only—bad only when it is unlimited in space and unlimited in time.

Now, what do they do? They license a theatre for compensation from the exhibitor at a certain place, at a certain time for a certain duration, and they say to the person who has purchased that privilege, "We will protect you"—I like the word "protection" better than I do "clearance" myself; I do not shrink from it at all—they say to their licensee,

"We will protect you the enjoyment of this privilege by not putting any person in competition with you for a specified time in a specified area." I do not care whether it is a copyright or what it is; it is a familiar example of a familiar process sanctioned by every court that ever sat in the Anglo-Saxon world, and, so far as I know, it may be wider than that. Under every system of law of which I have any knowledge, it has always been held dishonorable to sell property with one hand and destroy its value with the other. That is what clearance is, and that is all it is.

Now, because clearance created a great deal of ill feeling among exhibitors, jealousy and malice being human passions which, unfortunately, have not yet been exercised, and because some were envious of another, a great deal of controversy arose about it. We said to the Court, "Relieve us of the burden of this controversy; give these people a cheap and inexpensive form in which they may give vent to whatever injury they think they may have;" and the Court set up the arbitration machinery accordingly, not to relieve us from the danger of divorce, not to exempt us from the command of the Sherman law, but to bring about, as far as the Court on its side and we on ours could do, a condition of peace and prompt remedy in the industry.

Now, we have used clearance; we still use clearance, and if that be treason or guilt under the Sherman Law, then counsel for the Government must make the most of it.

We have used minimum admission prices. I have already referred to that and won't repeat it.

We have resorted to percentage contracts as a basis for measuring the return due us for our consent to exhibition. And if that be treason, make the most of it.

What else have we done in distribution? Have we adopted any fixed pattern—that is a favorite word with the Government—have we adopted any fixed pattern of patronage with our co-defendants or they with us? Have we conditioned the licensing of our films in any one theatre upon a contravening promise on their part to license us? Have we favored one over the other? The record is utterly barren of anything of that sort. Indeed—and I am not going to take the time for statistics—it will appear that so far as the alleged conspirators are concerned, we have gotten more money year by year out of the independent exhibitor than we have out of any one of them. And the only way in which our takings from them can be made formidable is by the process of addition, on which the Government relies to establish its monoply.

Let me hurry on. Have we monopolized or restrained exhibition? That is the third branch of the industry. What has Loew's done in that respect? How have we monopolized and how have we restrained? We operate 131 theatres, 64 of them in the City of New York, the others scattered widely over the country, and all those outside of New York I believe are first-run theatres where we exhibit our own films first. We had in 1935 128 theatres; in 1940, I think it was, we had 132. We are now operating in this year of grace 131. So that in that period of time, if monopolizing theatres means reaching out and buying them, we have certainly neglected our opportunities; for in the same period theatres in the United States have multiplied from 13,000 to over 18,000. If we were monopolizing theatres, why, weren't we a part of that Oklahoma rush?

We show our own films first run in our own theatres. 33 films and 6 specials are not enough to keep a first-run theatre going. You can keep grinding them out day after day, but the public, unfortunately, has other notions about it. And after a film has run so long they ask a change of diet, and the wise theatre owner must provide it. We have not enough of our own films to keep our theatres going. I rather gather from an answer my friend made to the Court this morning that his position was that if we showed only our own films in our own theatres, there was not anything wrong about it. I suppose the necessary and logical consequence of that is that when our own films run dry we shall close our theatre until we get another film from the same source.

Judge Hand: Well, he would let you use the independents until you got an unlawful combination of them.

Mr. Davis: I suppose we would go down the same slippery slope if we tried to sell our films with them, but that is pretty nearly what we have done.

If your Honors will turn to Appendix 1 of this brief, talking about monopolies in exhibition——

Judge Bright: Which brief?

Mr. Davis: Loew's individual brief.

Judge Bright: What page?

Mr. Davis: The first appendix. It is on page—well, it is page 51, really. This is the place where we edged up. After we finished our brief, we edged up on the court a little bit in some appendices, not an unfamiliar process.

I just want to indicate the character of that, and I shan't take the Court the whole journey through. That is intended to show, so far from monopolizing exhibition by engrossing the film supply, we show it in these cities where we have first-run theatres, 36 in all, our own film in our own theatre; we show it also in Akron, for instance, 19 films of the United Artists, 16 or half of 16 are Paramount; at the same time, in the same place, independent theatres competing with us were showing Fox, RKO, Warner, Universal, Paramount and Columbia. Curious conduct on the part of members of a conspiracy! A great lack of that consideration for one another which you might expect.

If you will go down every one of these cities, you will find that in no one of them did we absorb the film supply. You will find that in every one of them we had active first-run competitors who were showing the films of our brethren in this fraternal organization.

All I ask the Court to do, in the light of that statement, is to give to the appendices of our brief a moment's consideration.

I have taken, if your Honors please, more time, and under some adverse circumstances, more time than I promised my brethren. It is a fascinating subject and the temptation to verbosity is, indeed, extreme, but I know I am supported by those——

Mr. Proskauer: Of really equal verbosity.

Mr. Davis: Yes, I will admit, who are equally verbose, and therefore I subside.

ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANT PARAMOUNT

Mr. Seymour: May it please the Court, on behalf of the Paramount defendants, the charges against them are first, that they have followed the general industry practices which Mr. Davis has referred to; second, apparently that they constitute some kind of illegal combination themselves; third, that they are a party to some kind of illegal combination with the other defendants. And then, because they have interests in some theatres in small towns, many of them in the South, it is said that they have local theatre monopolies. And finally, there is a blanket attack in the brief about so-called discriminations, and Paramount is said to practice some of them.

I want first to say just a little more about these industry practices. Mr. Davis has covered them pretty generally but I would just like to add a few words about them and then pass to the particular charge against Paramount.

We have shown in this case that the practice of licensing motion pictures on run and with clearance is old in the industry, not for the purpose of showing that it has been done so long it would be a shame to change it, but for the purpose of showing it dates back before anybody had any interest in theatres—before any producer-distributor had any interest in theatres, and that has been proved beyond any dispute. It is perfectly apparent that from the very beginning of the industry, prior to the time when Paramount, which was the first to acquire an interest in theatres, had any theatres or interest in theatres, pictures were licensed on run and with clearance, and I cannot quite understand how Mr. Wright passes that off by saying that the contracts in evidence which refer to protection or clearance have that provision typewritten in.

Mr. Wright: Have you got them there?

Mr. Seymour on behalf of Defendant Paramount

Mr. Seymour: They are in evidence. They show that they were used in 1917 and 1918, and there is evidence that the other practices, percentage licenses, and specifying a minimum admission price, are very old. Now their antiquity does not give any protection if they are illegal, but they do show that they do not have any relationship to the question of affiliation and therefore they must be judged on their merits.

Furthermore, there isn't any possible dispute on this record that those practices are followed by every distributor in the industry; that all motion pictures are licensed on run and with clearance, most of them or many of them on a percentage, and in almost every case a minimum admission price is fixed, and that applies not only to distributors who are defendants in this case, but to distributors who are not defendants in this case, and that such terms are included in licenses with all exhibitors, whether they are affiliated or independent. Therefore, that whole question of trade practice is utterly unrelated to the question of affiliation or interest in theatres or to the relief which the Government asks.

I will just say a word about each of those practices if I may. As to run, your Honors know from what has been said here today and from the evidence that all distributors make a relatively limited number of prints, due to serve from five to fifteen thousand theatres, which are the customers of those pictures. Prints are expensive. The majority of exhibitors pay rentals on any particular picture which are less than the cost of a single print. Now, not only is it essential to distribute on run from the distributor's point of view in order to get the largest revenue and to make some profit on the increasingly expensive pictures which are being produced, but it also enables the pictures to be exhibited at different times, at different admission prices, so that the most expensive picture produced is eventually available to the public at a nominal admission price, a thing which could not be done without the practice of licensing on successive runs.

Clearance is nothing more than an agreement corollary to an agreement for an exclusive run, assuring the exhibitor against competition in the immediate area for a limited period of time. It is perfectly plain from the evidence that clearance is stated in all kinds of different ways, depending on local conditions, local past practice and so on. There is no pattern of clearance over the country. And while it is true, as has been suggested, that where distributor A and distributor B deal with exhibitor X, at different times on different pictures, X tends to have the same run and the same clearance, it is perfectly evident in this case that that is the result of individual negotiation and competitive conditions and not a result of agreement between the distributors and, indeed, there is no claim to the contrary.

It is suggested, although it was not emphasized in argument, that somehow this clearance practice is used favorably to affiliated theatres and unfavorably to independent theatres. There is nothing in that at all. Clearance arose before there was any affiliation. The evidence of the clearance terms in this record showing the terms on which the distributors have licensed pictures to both affiliated and independent theatres, shows no pattern of granting longer clearance or more favorable clearance to affiliated theatres than independents. The one thing that is shown is this: it is a universal practice indiscriminately used in dealing with the various exhibitors in various areas, so that any claim of discrimination in clearance is perfectly empty on this record.

What is the purpose both of run and clearance from the exhibitor's point of view? It assures him an exclusive right for a limited time to exhibit the picture on a particular run. It enables him safely to agree to pay the distributor the rental which is the subject matter of the negotiations, and from the exhibitor's point of view, that is the reason he is able to agree to do it because he knows that for a limited time he will be the only exhibitor in the particular area free to exhibit the picture and he won't have to worry about his customers waiting for another theatre, which is going to play right after him, without a period of clearance, and from the distributor's point of view it is the way he is able to get the largest reward for the license which he makes.

It is suggested, although it was not emphasized on argument, that somehow clearance terms prejudice subsequent runs. I think that was cleared up entirely during the trial. It is perfectly apparent that each theatre knows what the clearance terms are in favor of the prior run theatre. Notices of availability come to the later run, and the later run is able to book its pictures. No possible claim can be made that there is any prejudice; that any theatre has been without pictures.

The Government argues in its brief that there is some kind of control in favor of the earlier run. It is perfectly apparent—that is another way of saying the same thing—it is perfectly apparent that control rests not in the exhibitor but in the distributor who, in order to get the largest possible reward, agrees to these terms with the prior run exhibitor in order to assure payment of the film rental.

It seems a distortion of the relationship to say that there is some kind of control, but whether you choose to view it that way or not, the subsequent run exhibitor is not prejudiced by the system which he has agreed to, and which he gets the benefit of over the later run.

Judge Hand: What is the real claim of prejudice? So far as the subsequent people go, what is the real claim of prejudice in this clearance? It is urged to be one of delay, isn't it?

Mr. Seymour: Everybody——

Judge Hand: Of course, they get it.

Mr. Seymour: Every subsequent run theatre wants less clearance, more over his competitor and less over himself, and that is what the arbitrations have been about.

Mr. Wright: Since it is our claim, may I state it briefly, your Honor.

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Wright: With respect to admission price fixing, it is simply this, that the subsequent run exhibitor has no protection whatsoever of his position by virtue of his contract that the admission price be fixed, and this record shows that the Paramount partners say they fix their own admission prices, and when one of them who has a prior run over a competing subsequent independent chooses to cut his price down to the same price as the independent and maintain his priority, there is nothing in the subsequent run contract with the distributor that protects him from that kind of unfair competition.

Mr. Seymour: That is a canard which has been completely destroyed in our brief, and it is a distortion. I feel certain that Mr. Wright could not have read the record himself or he would not have said such a thing. He had two witnesses here who testified under my examination, Messrs. Mullin and Friedl, that they determined the admission prices in the theatres that they were operating, and in which Paramount had an interest, and that those were the prices that went into the contracts with distributors, and we had other testimony which clearly esablished that it was a universal practice in this industry for the exhibitor to determine the price. What Mr. Wright is referring to, when referring to Paramount partners, is that they said that they fixed the price that went into the contract, and therefore that they are in a different position than other exhibitors, and that is not so at all.

What does Mr. Wright say in his argument to your Honors ought to be the system as to first run and clearance? If I followed him, what he said is this: run and clearance are illegal if a matter of agreement, even between a single distributor and a single exhibitor, leaving aside any claim of combination; that what ought to happen is this: your Honors ought to throw the consent decree out the window and enjoin any agreement by which exclusive runs are granted or by which clearance is granted and let the industry run on this wholesome basis, that distributor A goes to a theatre which cost three million dollars, a first-run theatre, and says to the exhibitor, "We would like to license our picture to you for a rental of one hundred thousand dollars." And the exhibitor says, "Well, what about my run? Do I get first-run, exclusive first-run? And do I get clearance over houses charging a lower admission price, or over houses in the neighborhood?" And the distributor says, "We can't talk about that." And the exhibitor says, "Well, we always used to talk about it. For twenty years it was part of my agreement, and in 1940 the Government said that was all right, and consented to a consent decree signed by Judge Goddard, and now you say you can't talk about it," to which the distributor would have to reply, "Mr. Wright doesn't like it any more," and the exhibitor would say, "Well, how can I agree to pay you a hundred thousand dollars without knowing, and without your commitment that you won't go across the street right away and license the same picture for $50,000 to my competitor and have him start exhibiting it at ten cents on the day I start?" And the distributor says, has to say to him, according to Mr. Wright, "Don't worry about that. Don't worry about that, you know me pal!" That is the way Mr. Wright suggests this business should be done, that the distributor alone must do it; that it cannot be done as a matter of agreement; that although it is an essential part of the negotiations of the rental terms that the exhibitor should have some assurance that what he is licensing will not be immediately destroyed or cut down in value, still the Sherman Act forbids that kind of essential requirement.

And quite aside from the fact that we contend, and I think the Court will find, that Mr. Wright now takes a different view than the Attorney General and the Court did in 1940, that can hardly justify disregard of the recognition of these practices in the consent decree. They are plainly lawful. There is nothing in the Sherman Act which interferes with the ancient, as Mr. Davis said, the ancient practice of granting a negative covenant, reasonable in time and area, to protect against destruction. There is no more reason why there cannot be a negative covenant in connection with the licensing of a copyrighted motion picture than there is with other personal property or real property, in connection with which it has been recognized.

Judge Bright: You say we cannot change the consent decree in any of its particulars?

Mr. Seymour: Oh, no. If I said that, I went too far. What I meant to say, as we argue in our joint brief, on the consent decree, is that, of course, the Court has reserved power under the consent decree to make changes to effectuate its purpose, but the consent decree stands as recognition of an appropriate way to deal with many of these matters, approved by the court and by the Government, and it would take an extraordinary showing to induce the court to disregard the effect of that. That is but an application to this consent decree of the principles indicated in the Chrysler case and the Radio case, which we presented on our joint brief, and I did not mean the court was without power to change it, because, of course, the court has power, but there is an extraordinary showing required, more than that Mr. Wright has changed his mind.

I shall leave run and clearance and pass to two other matters which have been the subject of comment in the field of trade practice. The first is percentage contracts. It is perfectly plain that many pictures are licensed by all distributors on percentage contracts with all exhibitors. In other words, whether an exhibitor is affiliated or independent has no effect on whether a particular distributor will try to license on percentage. Distributors consider that percentage contracts give them a reward, directly keyed to box office receipts, giving them a higher reward on good pictures and giving the exhibitor some little protection on pictures which are disappointing at the box office.

Now what does the Government say about that? As I understand it, the Government does not challenge the fact that a picture may be licensed on a percentage basis. What it says is that the licensor and the licensee then become partners and accordingly that where one of these distributors licenses a picture to a theatre in which another distributor is interested, they become partners and therefore they are partners in suppressing competition or somehow in dealing with competition at the licensee's place of business.

Now that seems to us to be most extraordinary new law.

It is quite clear that where property is licensed or rented on the basis of compensation not in a flat cash amount but for compensation based upon his share in the profits as a fair method of measuring it, the licensor or lessor and the lessee do not become partners. It has been settled for years in this State and in the Supreme Court, if the license or the rental or the share in profits is paid in reward for use of property rather than as a part of a relationship between the parties not related to the use of property there is no partnership relation created.

So that that attack or that claim that these people are all partners with each other, including all the independent exhibitors who are in the business, would strike most of the exhibitors as being a very odd new form of law. And I daresay that when Columbia licensed a picture to the Music Hall if it went out as a partner of the Music Hall and ordered a new pipe organ for the Music Hall, as it would be entitled to do as a partner, some question might be raised by the seller as to its capacity to commit the Music Hall on that basis. Not that the present organ is not entirely adequate.

Now on minimum admission prices, that has been adverted to, and I want to make only a couple of comments about it.

It is perfectly clear in this case that the amount gets into the contract because it is the exhibitor's admission price. He determines the admission price. It goes into the contract, and the effect of the contract is merely that on the limited number of pictures involved he will not lower his admission price during the period of the license, being quite free to do it afterward or to raise it during the period. It is also perfectly clear that where a particular exhibitor licenses from five or six distributors, he does not have a different admission price for each distributor; so the price tends to be the same. Now that is how the exhibitor's price is brought about, not because of any arrangement between the distributors.

Now what interest does the distributor have in admission prices? Obviously he has a direct interest in seeing that the total intake is not reduced by a reduction in the admission price after it has been agreed upon, and where there is a flat rental the distributor has an interest in not having him defeat his ability to pay the flat rental.

Furthermore, as the evidence shows, if the prior run exhibitor should reduce his price it would affect the distributor's ability to get high rentals from subsequent-run exhibitors. So that there is a direct interest by the distributor in that admission price.

Now it is a far cry, so far a cry that the gap can't be leaped by the Government, between a provision of that kind, having a direct relationship to the interest of the property owner and copyright proprietor, in getting the full reward for his license, and the typical price-fixing cases we are all familiar with.

Judge Bright: As I understand him, he says that the price fixing situation is present under those circumstances because you as a distributor charge, say, 40 per cent of the gross and the gross is earned by more entertainment than your feature. Therefore, you are fixing the price that he shall charge on other products than your own.

Mr. Seymour: I want to pass to that argument. I understood the Government to contend that aside from that argument the minimum admission price arrangement was illegal because it fell within the ban of the standard price fixing cases.

I want first to say that obviously it does not involve price fixing in the sense that was involved in the typical price fixing cases that the Supreme Court has had. Obviously it does not have any relationship to the Interstate case or the Masonite case as we point out in our brief, and I shall not go into that now.

Now their final argument is the one your Honor mentions. It is in effect, that where the distributor licenses a feature picture to a particular motion picture theatre, with a provision in the agreement that during the existence of that license the theatre shall not charge less than 40 cents admission price, that arrangement is illegal because the distributor knows that the exhibitor may show shorts with the picture, or may play a pipe organ in the theatre, certainly will heat the theatre, and perhaps may have a double feature or may have a comic, an animated cartoon, with the picture.

Now first you notice that there is absolutely no tying-in in any of these licenses that have been referred to, that is, there isn't any requirement in any of these licenses that there shall be exhibited with the feature licensed something else. There is no relationship to what else the exhibitor shall do. The exhibitor is free to show the feature licensed, to exhibit cartoons, to spray his theatre with perfume, to play a pipe organ, to have newsreels or what he wants. So there is none of that typical tying-in which involves an attempt to use the price restriction to control something that is not a subject of the copyright.

Now if the Government is right about it—in other words, if the copyright proprietor having a percentage interest cannot assure that his percentage will be as high as he thought it would be when he dealt with the thing, that means this: that a copyright proprietor could fix a minimum admission price where he knew that the exhibitor was going to show in an open air theatre on a lawn during a time when it would be impossible for him to provide other entertainment, that is, if he was not going to heat the theatre, if he was not going to provide any music, if he was not going to provide any shorts, if he was not going to provide any cartoons, if he was not going to provide any stage show, it would be all right. Once the exhibitor in the exercise of his own untrammelled choice chose to put something else in to get the public to come in and pay money into his box office the copyright proprietor's right would be gone.

Now that seems to us nonsense in the absence of any attempt to tie-in the two, and we don't think that tying-in cases can possibly have the effect of denying the copyright owner a legitimate right where renting does not have anything to do with something else that is added.

Judge Hand: Is this an old contention in this line of litigation?

Mr. Seymour: In the Interstate case the Government made this argument with respect to minimum admission price and the Supreme Court said that it found it unnecessary to pass on the argument, and assumed for the purpose of its discussion that a single distributor could do certain things, which I think indicates that the Court did not pass on it and certainly had no conviction on it, and your Honors are familiar with the Westway case and the Gary case.

Judge Hand: Yes. They really affirmed Judge Chesnut's opinion.

Mr. Seymour: In the Fourth Circuit in the Westway case.

Judge Hand: It was just a little per curiam.

Mr. Seymour: Yes, it was affirmed on Judge Chesnut's opinion in the Westway case.

Now, I should like to pass to the separate phase of the case in so far as it concerns Paramount. Paramount does follow in distributing its pictures these trade practices as every other distributor does. We believe they are lawful; we believe they have nothing to do with affiliation. Now, laying aside that aspect of the case, I want to deal with the phases of the case which concern Paramount particularly. First the Government argues that there is some kind of an illegal combination of Paramount alone. Your Honor asked about Fox this morning, and the Government said, "Well, we say Fox is an illegal combination even though nobody else is involved"; and I assume they would say the same thing about Paramount. The corporate structures are quite different, but I say they would say the same thing.

Now, why would they? If I understand the Government's point about these companies individually which is made in their brief, it is that—and I think the argument is put this way—first, the ownership of theatres or an interest in theatres tends to subsidize poor pictures; and, second, the ownership of an interest in theatres provides an opportunity for violating the law—that there is a kind of a tentacle out there which might twist you with somebody else into violating law, and that it somehow subsidizes bad pictures.

Now, we have covered that matter in the joint brief. I do not believe there is any separate charge against each defendant except in those general terms. There is no evidence in this case whatever that the ownership of theatres is used to subsidize bad pictures. What is perfectly evident in this case is that every producer, every distributor, whether having a theatre interest or not, tries to make the best pictures he can. He is interested in getting the biggest box-office returns he can. He is trying to make money. Now, in the field of public taste, which is uncertain, where tastes change, where you can't tell when you make a picture precisely what conditions will be six months later,—obviously some pictures will be greater box office attractions than others. Some pictures, although considered to be greater artistic successes than others, will be poorer box office attractions.

Now, there is just no basis, I think, for the suggestion that these things tend to subsidize bad pictures. But what if they do? Why isn't a producer, having a lawful right to own theatres, at liberty to make mistakes as well as to be right consistently? Indeed, I do not know that the Sherman Act requires that people be more right in this field than in others.

And on this theory that it provides a kind of an opportunity for yielding to temptation and that your Honors ought to take that away, I would suppose that there were doctrines about temptation that antedated the Sherman Act, and that we have not yet found any way, by injunction or otherwise, to make people avoid temptation. And all the Sherman Act does is to provide relief where temptation has been yielded to in the area in which it deals. So I do not think that we need to spend any time on this charge of separate illegality which, if I understand it, is the way I have stated it to be.

Now, what is the charge——

Judge Hand: I thought in their argument he claimed, in answer to my question, that they had an unlawful combination with their own subsidiaries——

Mr. Seymour: I think he does claim it, and I——

Judge Hand: —and that that might result in monopolization or restraint in a given town and at least create a local situation. Then I said to him, "How are they any worse with subsidiaries as regards the Sherman Act than if they stood as one big corporation alone?" And his answer was, "Well, I suppose the answer that the Supreme Court has given in some of these tax cases, if they did set up a corporate structure like that, they were bound by it in all the presumptive inequities that might be perpetrated if it was more real."

In addition to that, of course, there are cases where their interest is not very large in these subsidiaries, these so-called affiliates where they doubtless could have an unlawful combination.

Mr. Seymour: Well, let us see just where that comes out. I think I understand what your Honor says, but I am not sure that I understand quite what the basis of the Government's answers to your Honor's questions was.

Judge Hand: Well, I don't either.

Mr. Seymour: First I was dealing with a charge in the brief as to why each of these groups is an unlawful combination itself, and that charge is based, as I understand it, on the claim that there is some kind of subsidy of poor pictures and some kind of a temptation to deal——

Judge Hand: That is one of them. But that does not touch this thing we have been talking about.

Mr. Seymour: Now, I understood your Honor this morning when you asked Mr. Wright——

Mr. Wright: May I make a one-sentence statement?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Wright: That combination as such that Mr. Seymour is representing has both the power to exclude theatre operating competitors and the power to exclude distributors from playing time in its theatres, which is the result of combination and is illegal in itself.

Mr. Seymour: If I understand that—I don't believe I do understand it. I think what it means is that if I owned a theatre, I can say to a particular distributor, I will not license your pictures, and that is illegal. Now, that is the ordinary consequence of the ownership of property.

Judge Bright: I did not quite understand your statement now.

Mr. Seymour: Mr. Wright said, if I understood him, that this individual illegal combination that he is talking about, to which we are now addressing ourselves, has a capacity to exclude exhibitors and to exclude distributors. In other words——

Judge Bright: From your theatres?

Mr. Seymour: From the theatres in which Paramount has an interest.

Judge Bright: How would that be a violation of the Sherman Act? They have a right to show what they wish in their own theatres, don't they?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, it is not just a question of their own theatres; it is a question of a multi-corporate organization—most of these corporations, each is a large circuit of theatres. The interest that the parent company holds in those corporations varies from 12 to 100 per cent. Most of them are 50 per cent or more. Now, the assembling and collecting of those corporations under common control does have competitive consequences which we say are sufficiently severe to make the combination an illegal one as such; and among those consequences are the power to exclude arbitrarily theatre operators from the areas in which they operate and to exclude arbitrarily the films distributed by other distributors from these affiliated theatres; that is, theatres which are merely affiliated as distinguished from those which may be actually owned by the parent corporation.

Judge Bright: Do I understand you to charge them with the mere existence of the power to exclude and not the exercise of it still constitutes a violation?

Mr. Wright: We would argue that, but we do not have to on this record because we say that the record amply demonstrates the exercise and abuse of the power.

Judge Hand: Well, you see, I think this bears out what I said about his contention.

Mr. Seymour: I am glad your Honor asked it because it is getting more extreme all the time, and the more extreme it gets, the more absurd it seems.

Judge Hand: Well, he is going from strength to strength. Go ahead.

Mr. Seymour: Well, he is going from one place to another. Whether those are both strength, I don't know.

Judge Bright: Well, there would be some merit in his contention if he has proof of actual exclusions.

Mr. Seymour: There is no such proof, as your Honor knows.

Judge Bright: He says he has.

Mr. Seymour: As I understand it, what he says is he has proved a national combination. Now, that we are not talking about——

Judge Bright: We are talking about individuals.

Mr. Seymour: Well, what he says in addition to that, "I do not have to argue but I would be willing to"—having courage on all fronts, as we would expect—"I would be willing to argue that Paramount"—if I understand him—"Paramount is an illegal combination with the various theatre operating companies in which it has an interest because those theatre operating companies could refuse to buy pictures if they wanted to, and because they could, if they wanted to, exclude some other exhibitor coming into their area."

Mr. Seymour on behalf of Defendant Paramount

Now, I do not believe it will be contended——

Judge Bright: Some other distributor I think he said.

Mr. Seymour: He said both distributor and exhibitor. I will take it either way because there is no proof of either. In other words, what he says, as I understand it, is that the ownership of these theatre interests, because the operators of those theatres, all local operators, could refuse to buy, the whole combination is illegal.

Now, I think he is confusing, although I am not an expert in what he is confusing—I am prepared to say it is a good many things—but I think in this record he is confusing the kind of a corporate structure which might give rise under proper circumstances to a claim of illegality and one which might not. It is plain that where a company has a subsidiary and there is an unlawful agreement, you can have an unlawful agreement under the Sherman Act because they are two different entities; whereas if you had only one you could not have an unlawful agreement among itself.

Now, if that is what he is talking about we are in accord. It is perfectly plain that you have to have two entities to have an agreement between two entities; but it is also plain that if you have got one entity with a monopoly acquired under circumstances and with the intent to monopolize, that you can have a Sherman Act violation. That was the distinction I think he was talking about this morning.

Now, let me address myself to the charge he now says he makes, and that is that Paramount along with those theatre operating companies in which it has an interest, varying from 12½ to 100 per cent, is in itself an illegal combination. The evidence shows that those theatre interests were acquired beginning in 1919 to block the destruction of Paramount as a competitive element in this industry. At that time there was a combination of the most powerful exhibitors and many of the smaller exhibitors in this country to destroy Paramount, to steal away its stars, to steal away its market and boycott its product, and that is the way Paramount began to acquire its interest in theatres. It has acquired subsequent interests for the purpose of protecting the outlet for its product. Many of those subsequent interests were acquired in competition with other distributors. There is not a word of proof in this case that the purpose of acquiring any of these theatre interests was unlawful in any aspect. There is not a word of testimony in this case that in fact any one of these theatre companies or any one of its theatres has been operated in such a way as to unlawfully exclude anybody. The fact is, as the record shows, that in these theatres Paramount pictures are shown; that the pictures of other distributors are shown. Sometimes they cannot get the pictures they want because other distributors license them elsewhere; just as any one of these theatres could refuse to put in salt water taffy if they did not want to, we can, of course, say, "We do not need your pictures," to a particular distributor. But I am entirely at a loss on this record to know on what possible basis it can be suggested that there is any unlawful combination involved in the Paramount structure. There is no proof of unlawful exclusion; there is hardly a claim of unlawful exclusion, of distributor or exhibitor.

Now, there is one phase of that which still is quite consistent with what I have said. That I will have to develop tomorrow, and that is the claim that there are a few small towns in which Paramount owns an interest in the one or two theatres of the town. If that is what Mr. Wright is talking about we can dispose of it very promptly.

Now, your Honor wants to leave, I think. Shall we stop now?

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, we have these digests prepared. I do not know whether you want them overnight or not. If you do I will hand them up; if not, I will let them go until tomorrow.

Judge Hand: Very well.

Mr. Seymour on behalf of Defendant Paramount

New York, January 16, 1946;
10.30 o'clock a. m.

Trial resumed.

Mr. Seymour: May it please the Court, yesterday when I referred to the fact that run and clearance had been used in the industry before any defendant had any interest in theatres, I should have mentioned the fact that the Government alleges in the amended complaint, in paragraph 114, that run and clearance came into the industry in 1915 and 1916, which is before any defendant had an interest in theatres.

At the close yesterday we were discussing the claim that Paramount, for example, individually was an illegal combination or that there was an illegal agreement among the Paramount defendants, and it was not quite clear what the Government's claim was. I think that consideration of the complaint in this regard, in the light of the Government's answers to further interrogatories clarifies the situation. The complaint, paragraphs 170 to 177, alleged the individually illegal combination of the several defendants with theatre interests, and, for example, alleged that they restricted production. Now, of course, that claim is out of the case. We addressed, last spring, an interrogatory to the Government, No. 43, asking what they expected to prove with respect to this claim of illegal combination individually, and their answer was, "Plaintiff states that it does not expect to show that specific independent producers or distributors were prevented from competing with any specific defendant or alleged combination of defendants. Plaintiff will argue that such prevention is a necessary consequence of the mere existence of the combinations referred to in paragraph 170 of the petition."

I take that to mean that in so far as distribution is concerned the contention is that, where Paramount owns an interest in theatres, since those theatres exhibit Paramount pictures, and, to some extent, the pictures of other distributors, to that extent they disable themselves from exhibiting pictures of other distributors, and to that extent exclude. In other words, that the ownership of theatres in itself is illegal, a contention with which Mr. Davis dealt yesterday and which I do not think needs to detain us today.

The remaining part of that complaint, I think, relates to the so-called claim of individual theatre monopolies where a defendant owns all the theatres in a particular town. That I shall deal with in a few moments.

Now, it is perfectly clear that the Paramount defendants have and can acquire no monopoly of production, distribution or exhibition.

Judge Hand: Is this a quotation from the answer to the interrogatories in your brief?

Mr. Seymour: It is not in our brief because the question did not arise as to what the claim was until yesterday; but it is on file and it will be in the stenographic transcript.

Judge Hand: I see. Well, it will be in these minutes of this argument.

Mr. Seymour: Yes.

Now, the Government rather reluctantly but definitely withdrew its claim of any monopoly in production, and we do not need to spend any time on that; but the testimony which eventually forced the Government to that concession is still important because it shows that really there is no restriction on distribution in this country; that any picture produced gets distributed, and profitably distributed; so not only is there no monopoly of production but obviously there is no monopoly of distribution.

Now, it is perfectly apparent that anybody who wants to embark his capital on creating a distributing organization with the exchanges and the salesmen, and so on that has to be provided, can do so. There is no restriction on doing so. The evidence shows that distributors who have not any interest in theatres including distributors who are not defendants in this case, have prospered during the very period of alleged combination and conspiracy.

Mr. Seymour on behalf of Defendant Paramount

Paramount has no monopoly of exhibition. Paramount has an interest in 1550 theatres, which is somewhat under 9 per cent of the total theatres in the United States. Of that number it has an interest amounting to over 51 per cent in companies which own or operate 500 theatres; so that its total interest in companies which it can be said to control involves approximately 3 per cent of the total theatres in the United States. And again I shall lay aside the claim of local monopoly, which I shall come to in a moment. So that really the case here comes to the vague claim of combination between the defendants, and I should like to analyze that a little more. Mr. Davis dealt with it effectively yesterday.

The Government's claim in that respect has been variously stated to arise out of cross licensing, diagonal licensing, and now I think Mr. Wright expresses it in terms of cross use. Now, the cross licensing theory which the Government had originally, apparently, was that where Paramount licensed pictures to a theatre in which Warner had an interest, and, in a different licensing transaction at a different time, Warner licensed pictures to a theatre in which Paramount had an interest, those transactions were so related that they amounted to cross licensing.

Now, the evidence in this case generally completely destroys any such claim and shows that there is no relationship between the transactions; and I am going to deal with the specific Paramount evidence on that score in a moment. The diagonal licensing claim which is now used in the Government's brief as sort of a substitute for cross licensing seems to be this: that where Paramount licenses a Warner theatre, say, in Camden, New Jersey, Paramount acting as a distributor licensing to the Warner theatre which is an exhibitor, that that, in effect, creates two horizontal agreements, one between Paramount as a distributor and Warner as a distributor and the other between Paramount as an exhibitor and Warner as an exhibitor, having in mind the fact that in Camden, New Jersey, there is no theatre in which Paramount has an interest.

Now we think that is a wholly fanciful theory. Such a transaction is simply between Paramount as distributor and Warner as exhibitor. It does not relate to any other transaction. There is no agreement between the two parties at the distribution level as the evidence shows, and to say that it is an agreement between the Warner Theatre in Camden and a theatre separately and autonomously operated in which Paramount has an interest, say, in Minneapolis, is simply it seems to us perposterous. Certainly that is not the consequence of that transaction.

To think of an analogy, although books are sold and not licensed, it would be as sensible to argue that where Scribner's books are sold in the Putnam book store that there is an agreement between Putnam and Scribner as publishers and also an agreement between the Scribner and Putnam book stores. It seems to us that that is not so. The parties are simply dealing at different levels and unless there is an illegality in that restraint nothing can be made of it. And what the Government attempts to do is to take all these agreements, describing them as cross-licenses or diagonal licenses, and add them together and say that out of that you get some kind of combination. We say you can't do that.

As far as Paramount is concerned you can't consider it even diagonally as an illegal agreement because as the evidence shows incontrovertibly——

Judge Hand: Now I never understood really what that word "diagonal" meant. It seems to me that it is a great vice that is very common now in all kinds of arguments—I guess it always has been—of using all kinds of figures of speech which people love. Half the time they don't understand them themselves and nobody else can. They are picturesque.

Mr. Seymour: It is hard to understand, but as I get it from the Government's presentation in its brief it says that where Paramount at this level as a distributor licenses to Warner at this level as an exhibitor, that that is diagonal licensing. It is in that sense that they add them all together and say that we have a combination. Even if the theory had any substance it couldn't possibly be applied to transactions involving theatres in which Paramount has an interest.

Your Honors will recall that the evidence shows that in 1932 Paramount gave up centralized operation of its theatre interests; that from 1932 on, all the theatres in which Paramount has an interest except for the Paramount Theatre in New York and the Newman Theatre in Kansas City, as to which no special point is made, are operated locally by separate companies in which Paramount has varying interests from 12½ to 100 per cent. Those companies have had headquarters in the areas where the theatres are operating. They are in charge of local operators. The local operator in the case of a 100-per-cent-owned company has a contract giving him the right to decide such questions as film licenses and all questions of operating policy, and his reward is in part based on the profit of the theatre operations. Where Paramount does not have a 100 per cent interest, where it has 50 per cent or some lesser amount, the theatres are operated by the stockholders on the ground who also have a right to operate autonomously and who look to their stockholding for their profit.

Now the importance of that is, when you take into account the further testimony that there is no relationship whatever between the separate licensing transactions of those companies and the licensing transactions of Paramount through its distribution department, the importance of that is that you could not even consider any transaction in which one of those theatres is involved as anyhow related to any transaction in which Paramount acts as a distributor. It is perfectly apparent that those companies are operated in a genuine sense independently of any control by Paramount, so far as film licensing is concerned and therefore in none of those theatres can Paramount be regarded as an exhibitor. So that when Warner, for example, licenses a picture to one of those theatre-operating companies for exhibition in one of those theatres, it is not a license to Paramount, and in that sense there is no diagonal quality in it even if it makes any sense in any context. It is perfectly apparent that since those local operators depend for their compensation upon the profitable operation of those particular theatres that there could not be any relationship between what Paramount gets as a distributor from a Warner theatre or a Loew theatre and what they pay. In other words, they are in a position where it would be impossible to have any relationship between those things without hurting the interests of the local operators, which they wouldn't stand for, and would not have to under their contracts.

Now that, I think, so far as Paramount is concerned, completely destroys any of these fancy theories of cross-licensing or diagonal licensing, aside from the general testimony that there isn't any such thing and there isn't any conditioning of licensing. Indeed that is pretty explicitly admitted in the Government's brief. And the statistics referred to in the briefs show there is no relationship between the film rentals paid to the various defendants as distributors by the various theatres in which they are interested.

So that I think the theory which the Government operates upon is completely destroyed by the evidence in this record as far as any such claim is concerned.

Now the Government's claim, as Mr. Davis pointed out yesterday—and I won't dwell on it—is really made up on just a mathematical basis aside from this empty theory of cross licensing. The Government simply adds up the total amounts paid by all theatres in which all defendants have an interest and arrives at some percentage which it says shows combination. And that is done by saying that they collectively received certain amounts and that they have a monopoly position. You can't by mathematics create collective action and you can't by mathematics create a monopoly position. And we have analyzed those figures in our brief.

It is apparent that the Government takes a figure of 70 per cent and calls it 70 per cent of different things every time it describes it, and whatever the errors are in that calculation, and however illusory the calculation is, the basic fallacy is that it attempts to add together the wholly separate operations of five active competitors and attempts to get your Honors to say from that, that there is an illegal combination. And in the absence of agreement or concert of action, it is perfectly evident that those statistics and those mathematical aggregations are simply irrelevant to the charge.

Perhaps there is a claim, although certainly it is not explicated or made clear, that you should conclude that there was some kind of combination because of some pattern of conduct among these defendants. It is suggested as to that pattern that the defendants favor each other's theatres over independents. If that were so, if you had a pattern where in every case the defendants always favored each other's theatres, and if the favoritism was illegal, you might have some pattern which would be significant, but the evidence in this case completely refutes any such thing, and I will deal with it as far as Paramount is concerned.

I may say that this pattern that the Government refers to is set forth with respect to the 92 larger cities in the country, selected simply because they have populations of over a hundred thousand and not because they are really any separate market, as they are not, so the question is, does that pattern appear there? What the record shows, as far as Paramount is concerned, is this: Paramount has interests in 47 large theatres in those 92 cities. In those theatres Paramount pictures are exhibited. In many of them pictures of other distributors are also exhibited, since normally a theatre needs more than the product of any one distributor in order to operate the year around. The evidence shows that in each case the quality of those theatres is such that they are the natural choice as a matter of sensible customer selection for those who license them. Surely the fact that Paramount licenses its own pictures to theatres in which it has an interest does not show any favoritism to other distributors. It shows that the theatres have been operated precisely as one would expect, primarily for the purpose of giving an opportunity to show Paramount pictures.

Let us look beyond those theatres to the remaining 45 cities out of the 92. What we find there is that in the remaining 45 cities Paramount sometimes licenses its pictures on first run to theatres affiliated with other defendants and sometimes to independent theatres. In many of those cities there are competitive theatres on first run, in all there are other runs, but the evidence clearly shows why each one of those theatres was chosen, and it clearly shows that Paramount was merely exercising its judgment to get the theatre which would provide the highest revenue. But the significant thing is that in fifteen of those cities Paramount licenses independent theatres first run. And the evidence shows why it chooses those, that in those cities Paramount considers that those theatres are the best outlets for its product. And in eleven of those cities there are affiliated theatres.

In addition, Paramount splits its product in five cities between independent and affiliated theatres. I think it plain that if there were anything in this theory of pattern, that consistently defendants favor each other's theatres, choose each other's theatres, solely because they are affiliated, you would not find any case of selection of an independent theatre over an affiliated theatre, and yet in Paramount's case you do find it in a significant number of cases.

I won't burden the Court with the detail of that evidence but I think it is perfectly plain from the evidence that we produced, and indeed, from the evidence that each defendant produced, that the selection of theatre outlets for first-run, other than theatres in which the particular distributor is interested, bore no relationship to affiliation, that is, it was not based on affiliation; that it was based upon the individual exercise of business judgment by the particular distributor as to the best outlet, and the fact that in many cases the best outlet in a particular place was an affiliated theatre was due not to the fact that it was affiliated but to the fact that the particular defendant had chosen to have interests in the best theatre or the theatre comparable to the best theatre in the town, which is no violation of the Sherman Act.

It is suggested that there is something odd about the fact that there is relative stability of accounts in this business. The evidence explains why that is. The evidence explains, in Paramount's case and in the case of other defendants, that where they have a satisfactory account, the tendency is to stay with that account; that it is preferable to continue a satisfactory business relationship than to change it. In the Paramount case there is testimony that if they were to change it for temporary advantage and then the new account were found to be unsatisfactory and the old account had filled its time with another distributor's product, the net result would be very unsatisfactory from Paramount's point of view.

It is apparent from the evidence that there is active competition between distributors for an opportunity to show their pictures. The figures on individual pictures show that some pictures are shown in five thousand theatres, some in ten, some in fifteen, reflecting the fact that sometimes a distributor does better and sometimes poorly in the attempt to get licenses for his pictures in a large number of theatres. But it is true, undoubtedly, that there is a tendency in this business, both with an independent account and with an affiliated account, not to go running around trying to see if you can do a little better on this picture or that. And the Government theory that these pictures could be licensed effectively by mere auction block technique, so that the largest theatres would get the product anyhow by bidding the highest prices, is simply a suggestion of introducing chaos into a business that has served the public pretty well as it is.

Now, the Government has referred to so-called pools, and I want to say a word about them. The evidence shows that now, or at least until recently, in eight localities in the United States, Paramount had operating agreements; that is, theatres in which Paramount had an interest had entered into local operating agreements with theatres of some other defendant. Now, the evidence is clear and undisputed that those operating agreements were originally made during the depression; that they were made to effect operating economies; that they did not result in advanced admission prices. Indeed, the evidence in at least one case is that it resulted in a decrease in admission prices; and there is evidence further that the arrangement did not reduce the total number of films used by the theatres. So that all you have is a local situation with several particular theatres based upon local conditions which were deemed to effect local economies.

Now, the Government, if I understand it correctly, does not make any particular request for relief with respect to such local situations. What it says is that they show a general intent to conspire and agree and combine among these defendants.

Now, plainly it could not make any request for relief, it seems to me, on this record as to any particular local situation of that kind, because there has been absolutely no showing that the local arrangement had any effect on interstate commerce. The number of films was not reduced, and there is no showing that public or other disadvantage arose. But from the point of view of intent generally, it seems to me perfectly apparent that those local situations show nothing about intent generally. What they show is that there was a decision during the depression in that locality with respect to the particular theatres involved to make an operating agreement. The very contrast between the number of localities where there are such operating agreements and the large number where theatres affiliated with different defendants are in active competition and not subject to an operating agreement shows that there was no intent generally to eliminate competition between them.

Judge Bright: Do you make a distinction between operating agreement and pooling agreement?

Mr. Seymour: I call what the Government calls pool an operating agreement because that is what the evidence calls it, and the Government calls it a pool because it suits its purposes to call it a pool. Now, I do not think there is any real difference between them. In both cases there is an agreement for the operation of theatres locally, and the Government calls it a pool. I can't see that it makes any difference in its legal effect, whatever you call it.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Seymour, that refers to a situation where two or more defendants have an interest in the same theatre?

Mr. Seymour: I did not hear the first part of that question.

Judge Goddard: That refers to a situation where two or more of the defendants have an interest in the same theatre?

Mr. Seymour: Generally not. It refers to the situation, such as there was in Grand Rapids—although that does not involve two or more defendants—such as there is in Minneapolis or was in Minneapolis where a theatre in which, say, Paramount had an interest, and a theatre in which, say, RKO had an interest agreed that they should be operated through a common operator in order to effect economies. They do not generally involve only one theatre; they involve several.

Now, those are the things that the Government calls pools, and they are the things we call operating agreements.

Now, in addition to those there are several situations where there is a lease, or something like that, where a theatre has been leased to one of the other defendants, or to a corporation in which another defendant has an interest. Now, sometimes the Government calls those pools. They certainly are not pools, and there is nothing on this record to indicate any impropriety in any of them. I would suppose that one who owned a theatre was entitled to lease it to the best possible lessee, the person who is most likely to pay the rental and to operate it effectively. And there is nothing on this record to challenge any of those.

Now, I should like to refer specifically to the one situation involving Paramount, as I recall it, which Mr. Wright mentioned yesterday, and that is the situation in San Francisco, because I think it throws a good deal of light on this claim of the Government's.

Judge Hand: Now, before you do that, I am not entirely clear why the Government does not or that it should not, if there is violation of the Sherman Act in this West Coast situation, ask for relief against it in this case. You say that interstate commerce is not involved. I should think it probably was.

Mr. Seymour: Well, what I was talking about, if your Honor pleases, were the eight so-called pools to which Paramount theatres are parties. Now, the San Francisco agreement which I am about to come to is not included in that group because it is not a pool or operating agreement in the same sense, and I just want to mention that San Francisco situation.

There in 1930 Paramount leased theatres to the predecessor of Fox in accordance with an arrangement, which I think is in evidence, which provided for payment of rent in terms of an interest in the profits of the operation of the theatres, and gave a franchise on Paramount pictures. Now, the original reason for that was obviously to have the theatres properly operated and to assure an outlet for Paramount product. But in 1932 or 1933 Fox terminated that arrangement. Paramount then had a claim of 12 million dollars against Fox. Paramount was in bankruptcy and Fox was in bankruptcy, and the claim stood in the way of reorganization. And in order to forward reorganization, the agreement made by the trustees in bankruptcy, I think in 1934, which is in evidence, which provided for a lease to Fox of those theatres and a franchise by Paramount, so that Paramount could exhibit its pictures, was submitted to Judge Coxe in the Paramount reorganization for his consideration and approval; and it was approved.

Now, we do not say, of course, that his approval involved any consideration of the Government's present claims, but we do say that the fact that that agreement was submitted to a reorganization court shows not as the Government claims that the agreement evinced an intent to monopolize or to restrain trade, but that it evinced an intent to facilitate reorganization of a bankrupt company; and there is none of that quality about the thing which could possibly show, I think, any such intent as the Government tries to attribute to it.

Now, I want to say a word about the Paramount formula deal which the Government has adverted to in brief and argument: Your Honors will recall that we brought out on our direct case that with many of the theatre operating companies in which Paramount has an interest but not with all, Paramount pictures are licensed on a so-called formula deal basis, and the typical formula deal contract is in evidence; and that provides that Paramount is to receive a percentage based upon the national performance on the pictures licensed to the particular companies in which Paramount has an interest. Our witness showed that in his opinion that gave Paramount what it regarded as a fair rental and a higher rental than it might have obtained in other ways; and the Government does not contend, even if it would be relevant, which I doubt, that that gave the Paramount affiliated companies more favorable terms than their independent competitors, as far as rental is concerned.

Now, it also appears that when the Paramount distribution department was in a controversy with Evergreen, which is one of the National Theatre companies, and they could not get together on terms, Paramount suggested that a formula deal be worked out with Evergreen, Paramount thinking that that would give it a larger reward for its pictures; and it worked out that way.

Now, again, I do not understand it to be claimed that the terms of that deal gave any rental advantage to Evergreen. Certainly, if Paramount got more than it would have gotten in some other way, it did not give Evergreen any advantage over Paramount.

Judge Bright: How extensive are your formula deals throughout the country?

Mr. Seymour: They are made, so far as I am aware, if your Honor pleases—they are made with many of the companies in which Paramount has an interest; and in addition there is a formula deal with Evergreen. So far as I know there are no others.

Judge Bright: Are there any formula deals with exhibitors other than those of the defendants, associated or affiliated with the defendants?

Mr. Seymour: So far as I know there are not, your Honor.

Now, of course, the thing originated in an effort to work out a method of compensation to Paramount for its own pictures in theatres in which it had an interest. Similar terms were worked out with Evergreen for some of the theatres in which National Theatre has an interest; and as the evidence shows, the formula deal is of relatively recent development.

Now, the Government's claim about it seems to be twofold, first that it shows a non-competitive atmosphere in the industry. Well, I would not suppose that the fact that the formula deal was used with the theatres in which Paramount had an interest in connection with Paramount pictures shows anything about the competitive quality of the industry. We claim we would be entitled to make reasonable deals with the theatres in which Paramount has an interest, and it does not affect competition generally. And so far as the formula deal with Evergreen is concerned, it is evident that Paramount got higher rental than it otherwise could have gotten.

Now, what the Government also says about it is that somehow, although it did not prejudice other exhibitors in rental terms, it gave those who had the formula deal an opportunity to play the pictures for longer than the other exhibitors had the right to do, and that might prejudice them.

Now, the trouble with that claim is that there is no evidence of anything of the kind. There is no evidence by any exhibitor or by any document that the privileges under the formula deal have been abused by any of the theatres in which Paramount has an interest; and in the absence of such evidence, this claim of possible prejudice is just sheer speculation, and I think cannot show anything as to the impropriety of the formula deal between Paramount and the theatres in which it is interested.

Judge Bright: The theatres under the formula deal are licensed under the same form of agreements with other theatres

Mr. Seymour: The formula deal agreement which fixes the formula percentage and the other terms related to it has attached to it the standard form of agreement.

Judge Bright: Well, is there any evidence in the case that in any instance with exhibitors having the benefit of the formula deal, that there had been any different or preferential clearance or run provisions?

Mr. Seymour: None so far as I know, if your Honor pleases. I think, in other words, that the claim that there is any disadvantage through operation of the formula deal is simply speculation, and I cannot see any possible basis for that claim except just as a matter of theorizing, and if there was any basis for it they should have come forward with some proof.

Now, I want to pass to this question of local monopoly——

Judge Bright: Before you go to that, Mr. Seymour: You have been speaking about pooling arrangements, and you dealt solely with pooling arrangements in so far as Paramount alone is concerned. I may be mistaken, but as I understand the Government's contention, it is that the existence of pooling arrangements throughout the United States, and so many of them, show a pattern of interlocking or interdealing between the defendants, which is capable of the inference that there is some understanding to restrain competition.

Mr. Proskauer: There is not any such evidence.

Mr. Seymour: Well, let me make a comment on that. I think perhaps that is the Government's claim, because Mr. Wright said yesterday that there were ten possible combinations out of five defendants, and that they all appeared in pools.

Well, the fact of the matter is that there are eight so-called pools between Paramount theatres and theatres in which another defendant is interested, but in some of those situations there is an affiliated theatre in competition with the pooled theatres. Now there are so-called pools in which Paramount has no interest whatever and is not involved in any way. Theatres in which Paramount is interested, as the evidence shows, have operating or "pooling" agreements with independent theatres in various local situations. But since they have not been brought into question here, no details of these are in evidence.

Now, it seems to me perfectly evident that you can't take isolated local pool situations involving the theatres of two defendants, say in Minneapolis and St. Paul, add them to the so-called pool that Mr. Wright referred to yesterday between two other defendants in Albany, and say that you get some national pattern because there is no evidence at all that they involved anything but the local interests and advantages of the particular theatres involved. And when you add to that the fact that at least as far as Paramount is concerned, and I think as far as others, similar agreements have been made with theatres of the independents, all you get is a series of pools. And you certainly don't get any aggregate of national significance. And it certainly is apparent from all the evidence that they didn't pool in lots of places.

Now, I want to talk about this claim of local monopoly as far as Paramount is concerned. Mr. Phillips reminds me that Mr. Wright said yesterday that there were thirty so-called pools in the United States, which is an insignificant number considering the number of theatres.

Mr. Wright: What I said was that there were thirty in evidence.

Mr. Seymour: Well, I think with Mr. Wright's enthusiasm for getting everything in evidence, we can assume that that is a pretty fair percentage of those that he has discovered.

Now, on the local monopoly claim, as far as Paramount is concerned, that arises in two aspects apparently. First the Government says that there are forty localities in which affiliated theatres are the only first-run theatres. In a few of those Paramount has the only first-run theatres. In others two defendants or three defendants may have the only first-run theatres. The Government chooses to call those closed first-run situations. Now that it seems to me adds nothing to this case and shows nothing of significance in the case. In each of those cities it appears that there are other theatres operated on other than first-runs in competition with these first-run theatres. The use of the word "closed" means nothing so far as this record is concerned except the fact that those are the first-run theatres in the town accepted as such by distributors in licensing their pictures. There is nothing to indicate that there is any other theatre in any of those towns which is of a size and location which would normally make it a natural choice for a distributor to license first-run, and using the word "closed" is a convenient way of saying that in those places the particular theatres have all the first-run product. In the absence of some evidence of exclusion of some qualified theatres—and there is no evidence; in fact the evidence is to the contrary—those so-called closed first-run situations where there is obviously competition with other theatres in the town I think need not detain us at all.

Now I want to talk about the other aspect of this so-called local monopoly situation and that is this: the Government lists in its brief 157 towns taken from the record in which it says Paramount has an interest in all the theatres. Now there is a little error in that calculation. There are only 151 in the record because some of them are duplications. It does not make any difference which figure we take, 151 or 157. Those towns are in various locations, many of them in the South, where a particular operating company in which Paramount has an interest, has an interest in all the theatres in the town.

Now we think that is of no significance in this case because no attempt has been made, utterly no attempt has been made, and there is no evidence that those theatres were acquired by predatory practices, that those theatres excluded, or the operators of those theatres have excluded anybody else, or indeed that there was any need for any other theatre in the town, or that anybody would have thought of providing one.

Let me give you some idea of the size of the towns. Out of 151 towns which we think the record correctly indicates, there are 47 towns with one theatre.

There are 61 towns with two theatres, 28 with three, 12 with four, and two with five. The towns involved run all the way from such well known localities as Needville, Texas, which has a population of 500; Exmore, Virginia, with a population of 932; Smakover, Arkansas, with a population of 2,235; Yoakum, Texas, with a population of 4,733, up the scale of populations until you get to populations of—well, there is one town of a little over 20,000, one town of a little over twenty-one, and several with around twenty-four, but, in general, the towns are very small towns with one or two theatres. There is not the least indication that anyone would want more theatres in any of these towns or that anybody has been kept from having them. There are three towns of more significant size, which are in that list, West Palm Beach, Florida, where it appears that Paramount has an interest in five theatres. That is adjacent to Palm Beach. And in Norwalk, Connecticut, a town of 39,849, Paramount has an interest in one theatre and that is adjacent to South Norwalk. And Newton, Massachusetts, which has a population of 69,000, where Paramount has an interest in one theatre, is adjacent to Boston. In all those larger localities to which these towns are adjacent, there are many theatres operated in competition, and it is perfectly apparent that these places are simply suburbs from which people go to see pictures in the larger place, as they do in so many localities.

What does it show? What it shows is that over a period of time the theatre-operating companies in which Paramount has an interest have owned and operated one, two or three theatres in these small towns. It is perfectly plain that it is no offense under the Sherman Act to be a lone trader, as has been said in the Pullman case recently, which your Honors will get a little tired of, because I think it is quoted in almost every brief, although it is good doctrine.

And there is no evidence of exclusion, no evidence of predatory practice, no evidence that anybody has been kept out.

Suppose a theatre operating company in which Paramount is interested should have to get rid of its interest in one of these theatres in one of these towns where it has the only theatre, wouldn't the next fellow be a monopolist? Wouldn't he have the same power of exclusion? That is, that he would be able to use only a certain number of pictures and he could not use more. And therefore it seems to me that this local monopoly phase of the case is quite empty of any content.

We have shown that there are some 11 or 12 hundred localities in the United States in which independents own all the theatres, and in which no defendant has any interest. There is no more reason to suppose that there is a violation in the little towns that have been referred to than there is in those other towns, and your Honors will remember that there are some 16,000 incorporated places in the United States, and Paramount is charged with having an illegal monopoly in 151, which, as I figure it, is somewhat under 1 per cent, and when you consider the size of these places, down to 500 in population, I doubt if your Honors will think that you can draw the line in any place and say that on the evidence in this case there is any possible illegality.

I want to pass to one other charge and I will be through. The Government's brief refers to discrimination but it is not quite clear what is meant. Sometimes it looks as though what is meant is that a particular defendant in some situations has discriminated against some exhibitors, sometimes independent exhibitors. Plainly, most of these claims of discrimination are not made out, if that is what they mean. In other words, if they mean that generally there is a policy to favor affiliated exhibitors over independent exhibitors, we proved for Paramount, for example, that all the deals that are made with any kind of exhibitor are made indiscriminately between affiliated and independents, and if that charge is some general, vague, charge of discrimination, it does not have anything to do with this case. This case charges a national combination, and unless the Government can show a studied, concerted program of discriminating for the purpose of restraining trade or obtaining a monopoly, these episodes of discrimination would be irrelevant.

Finally, we are dealing here with licensing. We are dealing here with licensing of copyrighted products, and not dealing with sales, and there is no statutory inhibition of discrimination in connection with licensing, such as there is with sales. I say that, not defensively, because I will show your Honors in a moment that this claim of discrimination, as far as Paramount is concerned, is empty, but it is a kind of irrelevant comment in this case because it hasn't anything to do with the merits of the case.

The Government talks about franchises and refers to the fact that Paramount granted franchises at one time. The evidence shows that eight or ten years ago Paramount, as a matter of policy, discontinued granting franchises. It is clear that under the consent decree the consenting defendandts were forbidden to grant long-term licenses, because of the trade showing requirement and the block of five requirement, and it is clear from the evidence that Paramount, like the other consenting defendants, has adhered to the provisions of the decree despite the fact that that particular provision has lapsed.

Mr. Seymour on behalf of Defendant Paramount

There is no evidence in this case of the granting of any franchises in the last eight or ten years by Paramount and the whole thing is utterly irrelevant. Even while Paramount was granting them, it appears from the evidence in this case that, more were granted to independent exhibitors than to affiliated exhibitors.

Finally, although this has no particular application to Paramount, the Government now seems to have some bitter criticism of ten-year franchises, and yet it is just ten years ago that in this Court, in 1936, in a suit by the Anti-trust Division against Warner Bros. and certain other defendants, the Government insisted that two of the defendants, Warner and RKO, grant a ten-year franchise to an exhibitor in St. Louis as a condition for discontinuing the suit. So that its enthusiasm for franchises, like so many other things, that it once was for, has waned, since it took official action to the contrary.

The Government talks about master agreements, and says there is something wrong about master agreements. We have had that all out here in the testimony. It appears, as far as Paramount is concerned, and, indeed, as far as other defendants are concerned, that the so-called master agreements are sometimes used as a matter of convenience in dealing with a large number of theatres, and the only purpose of those agreements is to avoid writing a separate and detailed contract with each theatre. There is a general contract with the standard form attached, at least in Paramount's case, and then a separate deal sheet for each theatre. Even in a time when there wasn't a paper shortage, I should suppose that that practice, which the evidence shows Paramount followed quite indiscriminately in dealing with any large group of theatres, was perfectly lawful.

Judge Hand: Just what is that? What did they do? I have forgotten it.

Mr. Seymour: Well, where Paramount, for example, licenses a company with, say, ten theatres, instead of writing a separate license agreement for each theatre, it may, and the other defendants sometimes do the same thing, make one master agreement with the operating company and a separate deal sheet for each theatre, and it is simply a paper and time-saving device. There is no evidence of any abuse of the thing or any discrimination. Paramount does it with any customer who has enough theatres to make it a time-saving device.

The Government talked at one time——

Judge Hand: Dealing with one customer, or a customer with subsidiaries, I suppose, that is, a lot of theatres.

Mr. Seymour: It is the multiplicity of the theatres and the number of theatres that causes this method of dealing.

Now, during the trial it was suggested that Paramount had discriminated in rental terms against independent exhibitors and yet, although the Government had access during its preparation of this case to hundreds of thousands of licenses, its brief does not mention a single example of the alleged rental discrimination by Paramount. So that is out of the case as far as Paramount is concerned.

Then the Government says that Paramount has somehow discriminated in clearance terms, that it has somehow been more favorable to affiliated theatres than independents. I dealt with that yesterday. There is nothing in it. Paramount has applied, in dealing with independents and affiliated theatres, the same kinds of considerations affecting the length and the scope of the clearance that it applies in any other case. The clearance terms vary from area to area. There is no pattern about them, but, for every long clearance that you can find in this record in favor of an affiliated theatre, there is an equally long clearance somewhere in favor of an independent theatre. And for every broad clearance that you can find for an affiliated theatre, there is an equally broad clearance somewhere for an independent theatre. And it shows merely that in the particular area where the particular customer was affiliated or independent, the clearance was granted which seemed appropriate. The remedy, if the clearance is too long, is provided by the decree.

On this whole question of discrimination I have only this final word to say. The Government, not having advanced any real proof of discrimination, says that the defendants had it in their power, since they had all the license contracts, to come forward with documentary evidence that there was no discrimination, and that the fact that they did not do so should lead the Court to conclude that there must have been a multitude of discriminations. Your Honors had that before you on the discussion of the Government's motion to strike. It seems to us nonsense. I rather think it appeared, when it was suggested before, that the Government has the burden of proof. The Government had access to everything. They cannot shift the burden to us or obscure the fact that they have not come forward with any real proof, by saying we had the contracts and we should have snowed your Honors under—a thing which you would not have let us do—snowed your Honors under with thousands of contracts.

We feel that on this record the Government is entitled to no further relief, and that there has been utter failure to show the combination or conspiracy which it set out to show, or any individual restraint as far as Paramount is concerned, and that appropriate judgment to that effect ought to be entered.

I don't know whether your Honor was serious yesterday in a discussion with Mr. Wright about this, but I would like to make a comment on it. Mr. Wright, I think, suggested that it might be a good idea to restrain the affiliated theatres from using the product of other defendants. That would simply mean, of course, that the affiliated theatres, where they needed the product of other distributors, would be required to turn out their lights and get our of competition, or buy Westerns or similar pictures from other distributors who were not bound by the decree. How that would forward the competition which the Government is interested in eludes me.

Judge Bright: You just mentioned the fact that you did not think the Government was entitled to "any more relief." You mean more than has already been given in the consent decree?

Mr. Seymour: Yes.

Judge Bright: How far can this Court go on that proposition? In other words, have we got to find a violation of the Sherman Act in order to grant any relief to the Government or, if we cannot find a violation, must we dismiss and set aside the consent decree?

Mr. Seymour: I suppose there are maybe as many views about that as there are lawyers, but I will give your Honor my view. The consent decree reserves certain issues for trial and certain prayers for relief. It disposed of certain issues subject to the Court's reserved power to modify the decree upon a showing that it was not working properly. We are here and have been here on the reserved issues and the reserved prayers for relief, the consent decree having, as I have said, disposed of the issues which were embraced within it, to-wit, the issue of clearance, the issue of run, and things of that kind.

It is our view that what the Government has failed to do here has been to prove any violation of law on the reserved issues, and, therefore, any right to further relief by way of divorcement, which is what was reserved for trial. That being so, whether the form should be dismissal or simply a denial of the request for further relief on the reserved issues, I am not quite clear, but it would not, of course, affect the existence, I think, of the consent decree, that having dealt with issues carved out and which are not now on trial.

Judge Bright: I understood Mr. Wright to say yesterday that he thinks we should scrap the consent decree.

Mr. Seymour: That is what he thinks.

Judge Bright: That would mean starting de novo.

Mr. Seymour: That is right. That is what he thinks. We do not think so. We think that those issues are dealt with in the consent decree subject to your Honor's ability to modify upon a proper showing, which has not been made.

Judge Hand: What about the three years?

Judge Bright: About block selling?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Seymour: You are talking about——

Judge Goddard: That is one of the settled issues.

Mr. Seymour: For example, on block booking, if that is one of the issues your Honor is thinking about——

Judge Bright: Wasn't there a three-year limit to that?

Mr. Caskey: No, sir. Permanent.

Judge Bright: What was it the three-year limit was set for?

Mr. Seymour: My colleagues remind me that the three-year provision was a provision by which the Government agreed not to press the issues for divorcement for three years, and that three years have elapsed and the Government is now pressing both issues. There are certain other provisions which elapsed by reason of the Government's failure to get similar injunctions against other defendants not parties to the decree, and they concern such things as block booking, and as to those the decree has lapsed and yet the defendants who consented have been abiding by those lapsed provisions. And I suppose, your Honor, speaking for myself, I suppose your Honor could reinstate those lapsed provisions. Certainly the defendants who have abided by them propose to continue to abide by them, as far as I know, but the provisions on clearance and for arbitration of runs have not lapsed and are still in full effect, in order to be so continued.

ARGUMENTS ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANTS TWENTIETH CENTURY FOX FILM CORPORATION AND NATIONAL THEATRES CORPORATION

Mr. Caskey: If your Honors please, the discussion between Judge Bright and Mr. Seymour perhaps anticipated a portion of the case that I had planned to discuss because the effect of the consent decree, its history, its operation, play a very vital part in the ultimate decision to be made here.

Mr. Caskey on behalf of Defendants Twentieth Century Fox and National Theatres

The history is important because it shows that the bargain of the Government was no improvident one. For many months prior to June 1940 there had been extensive negotiations between the representatives, not only of the Department of Justice, but the Department of Commerce and the representatives of these defendants. Those issues were not resolved and the case came on for trial in June. Opening statements were made and then successive adjournments were taken for a period of five months, during which the parties literally lived together and fashioned this decree.

The Government was represented by four negotiators, including the present trial counsel. The then Assistant Attorney General, who was a self-professed opponent of monopoly, intervened, held hearings, discussions, and issued public statements. And finally, on November 14, and 15, extensive hearings were had before this Court and, after consideration, the decree was entered.

The first portion of the decree deals with certain marketing problems that had risen out of the controversy of block booking and blind buying. Those procedures had been held lawful in this circuit, but, without disputation, five of the defendants agreed to a radical change in their method of doing business. First of all, they agreed that no picture should be licensed for exhibition to any exhibitor until it had been completely manufactured, a positive print actually made. They agreed, second, that it should not be offered to any exhibitor until it had been publicly exhibited for the benefit of all the exhibitors who would come, and an elaborate system of invitations for these trade showings was set up.

They agreed, third, that they would not offer at any one time more than five of these completely manufactured trade shown pictures.

Fourth: They agreed that they would not condition the licensing of one group of pictures on another; that the exhibitor might take one and be free to reject the other.

Fifth: They agreed that in the merchandising of their short subjects, their newsreels, their western or action pictures, and the foreign made pictures which they distributed, that they would not force the exhibitor to take those by conditioning the licensing of their desirable features on the licensing of shorts and news, westerns and foreigns.

And sixth, they agreed that no license agreement with any circuit should embrace the theatres of more than one exchange area.

Now, these provisions were insisted upon by the Department of Justice, and on their face, as any reading of the decree will disclose, they are permanent. They were, however, subject to an escape clause. If the Department, contrary to its protestations and publicity, did not secure a like decree against the non-consenting defendants within a stipulated period, then these five were to be free of those requirements.

Now, the Department did not make——

Judge Hand: That means of all requirements under the decree?

Mr. Caskey: No, sir, of these marketing requirements that I have just listed; that is, these six marketing requirements and only those six.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Caskey: Now, the Department did nothing to bring about any trial of the action against the non-consenting defendants. Mr. Wright, did not even say "boo" to Ed Raftery.

Mr. Wright: Boo.

Mr. Caskey: But the consenting defendants did not attempt to escape from those provisions of the decree, and they have continued during these years to market their product in accordance with the provisions of Sections 3, 4 and 5. They license no picture to any exhibitor until it has been completely manufactured, until it has been trade-shown; they license their pictures only in small groups, usually considerably less than five. There is no conditioning of the licensing of one group upon another, and there is no conditioning of the licensing of features upon taking shorts, newsreels, foreign, action, or western pictures.

Mr. Caskey on behalf of Defendants Twentieth Century Fox and National Theatres

In good faith these five consenting defendants, despite the tremendous cost of doing business and the necessity of a greatly increased inventory have continued to observe the letter as well as the spirit of the decree.

Now, the next group of problems with which the decree dealt were problems which were trade practices which everyone recognized were essential in the conduct of the business, but which was alleged had been the subject of misuse or abuse and which could not readily be determined by the ordinary judicial procedure.

Now, talking about run, clearance and the practice of licensing on percentage and of entering into a contract specifying a minimum admission price, when Sections 6, 7, 8 and 10, dealing with these practices, were finally agreed to, they were agreed to in the light of the amended petition which framed the issues and which clearly show that in 1940 as well as yesterday, the Department of Justice was fully informed of all the vices that it says flows from a system of run and clearance; that the illegality was fully pleaded, was denied; and that the decree represents an adjudication on the issues made.

Let me call your attention to the specific allegations of the amended complaint: First it alleged that each theatre ordinarily plays all of the features it exhibits on the same run with the same clearance. That charge they made then they have repeated now.

They alleged, paragraph 113, that the incorporation of the provisions with respect to run, clearance and admission price had tended to stabilize the playing position and operating policies of the particular theatres from year to year.

They allege in paragraph 119 that uniform schedules of zoning and clearance are actually in effect in every exhibition territory in the United States.

They allege that the defendants have conspired and combined with each other concertedly to fix the run, clearance and minimum admission price on which any exhibitor in the United States may play.

And in paragraph 128 the whole nub of the Government's position was stated. I read it:

"The first-run exhibitor is also usually required to charge the highest admission price as a condition of securing a given clearance over subsequent-run theatres. Subsequent-run theatres could not normally play a picture so profitably at the same admission price as the first-run in view of the fact that they must play it at a substantially later date after the capacity of the picture to attract an audience from the particular clearance zone has been partially exhausted by the first run. The result is that the entire admission price, run and clearance structure of the theatres in a given town or city is subject to run and clearance terms fixed in license agreements betwen the major distributors and first-run exhibitors, and the availability to subsequent-run exhibitors of the most profitable features is determined by the manner in which the first-run exhibitor exercises his selective privilege. In recognition of this fact the producer-exhibitor defendants have uniformly refrained from operating subsequent-run theatres in towns or cities where they do not operate first-run theatres."

Now that reads just like good orthodox Wright.

And finally they say in paragraph 149c, the defendants have conspired and combined with each other concertedly to grant circuit theatres arbitrary and unreasonable clearance over competing independent theatres. As a result, independent theatres, in many instances, are unable to exhibit feature pictures until their novelty and freshness have worn off and their box office value has been seriously diminished, solely because earlier exhibition in the independent theatres would decrease the profits of a circuit exhibitor.

And there are like allegations as to the effect of the granting of clearance by an individual distributor.

Now I have adverted to these to show that in 1940 when this decree was entered there was no unexplored area. The Department was fully familiar with the effect of run and clearance on this industry, it made these allegations and they were denied. And then what did the parties do? They entered into this agreement, approved by this Court, that run and clearance were essential, and they set up standards whereby the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the particular run and the particular clearance could be judged. They set up this arbitration system.

Now this arbitration system was prayed for, as Mr. Davis stated, by the plaintiff. I read the fourth prayer of the amended petition:

> "That a nation-wide system of impartial arbitration tribunals or such other means of enforcement as the Court may deem proper be established pursuant to the final decree of this Court, in order to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibition of illegal practices may be contained therein."

Now it is our position that these provisions are permanent. Let me read what the Assistant Attorney General said to this Court when he presented this section of the decree. Mr. Hayes said:

> "And I may say in that connection that it has long been felt, both by exhibitors and by distributors, that their eyes, as was their duty, the complaints of explaints concerning clearance than to have the clearance fixed by some impartial arbitrator, and that is precisely what is accomplished by Section VIII. * * * Those of us who have worked on this decree after reviewing, as I said at the very beginning, the numerous industry problems in all their ramifications with the government representatives keeping constantly before there is no fairer way to handle and dispose of combibitors and the complaints of public groups, are of the opinion that the decree is a desirable forward step. We believe it will work. We believe it will produce good. We recommend the decree to your Honor."

In Exhibit 390, prepared by the American Arbitration Association, the details of the operation of the arbitral system are shown. First of all there is the complaint. A man who says that the clearance against his theatre is too long in time or too extensive in area, that he can't get the pictures as soon as he would like to have them. Then there are the intervenors, the people who currently have clearance over the complainant, and who certainly are loath to give it up. Then there are the representatives of the distributors with their books and records available for the arbitration. Then the arbitration—there are careful, patient, over-patient hearings, usually before trained lawyers, usually accompanied by an inspection of the competitive area and the theatres. There then follows the opinion of the arbitrators, many of them models of judicial writing. And if the parties are not satisfied there is the appeal, the briefs, the right to oral argument, and a complete review de novo.

How does the system work? Well, we have Mr. Braden's testimony to that effect. From February 1, 1941, through October 8, 1945, 416 cases had been filed, of which 343 dealt with clearance or with clearance in combination with some other portion of the decree.

112 cases were withdrawn and 21 resulted in a consent decree before the arbitrator, leaving 283 awards. In 177 cases, the decision of the Arbitrator granted the complainant some relief. In 106, denied it.

Of the 241 awards that deal with clearance, 161 granted the complainant some relief and 80 denied it.

Now this has not only been successful in its operation but it has been economical. As Mr. Davis so clearly pointed out and as the amended complaint and the consent decree show upon their face, the arbitration system was not set up as any bargain to protect us against divorcement or divestiture. It was set up with an honest purpose to solve these trade practice difficulties, and it has been supported by the distributors to the extent of expenditures of $1,347,000. And yet the average cost to the complainant who has pursued his matter all the way through an appeal has been $48.62. We see no reason why there should be stricken down, and we think on the face of the decree that it is permanent, subject only to the power of the Court, under Section 23d, which enables any party to this decree to apply after a period of three years for any modification.

Mr. Seymour said it is impossible to state with absolute precision the legal requirements of modification. I think the law is pretty well crystallized in the two Swift decisions and in the decision in the Chrysler case. The modification must be bottomed upon a finding of illegality other than that which is said to arise from a following of the decree. In other words, it cannot be said that we are to be damned for having granted clearance since the entry of the decree, when the decree itself specifically permitted it. The Chrysler and Swift cases, as we see them, make it clear that any modification must be for the purpose of furthering the purpose and intent of the decree, and the modification must be one that does not do substantial injury to the defendants.

Now it is not a modification to change "Yes" to "No." It is not a modification to say that something which on this record, after these allegations, was lawful and legal in 1940, is no longer lawful and legal.

The remaining sections of the decree dealing with acquisition of theatres, which is Section 11, and the prohibition against the Government bringing this or any other action for divorcement within the three-year period, have expired. But there again, as the evidence clearly shows, there has been no program of expansion by these defendants. During the five-year period the amount of new theatres acquired has been inconsiderable, and when it was challenged by the Department of Justice a hearing was had and an adjudication in favor of the defendants resulted.

In connection with the operation of the arbitration system a great deal has been written. As I say, there have been 283 awards and many of them are quite lengthy. There have been 109 decisions of the Appeal Board and they range from eight to twenty pages.

Mr. Caskey on behalf of Defendants Twentieth Century Fox and National Theatres

When the plaintiff made an application for a temporary injunction to modify the clearance sections, counsel offered all the decisions of the Appeal Board to the District Court for its consideration. During this trial, with the spell of advocacy upon him, he has selected only 21 and they are before your Honors. You will recall that we protested their admission, suggested that they were hearsay, that they were not binding upon us, we had had no chance to cross-examine, and the Court received them tentatively and provisionally. We think they should not be used as any evidence of the facts stated therein. We think they are, of course, useful to the Court as showing how the decree has worked, how the Appeal Board has patiently and painstakingly dealt with each of the problems that has come before it, but we do not think that they are any competent evidence of the facts that are stated in them; and I emphasize that because of what, it seems to us, is a peculiar unfairness in the plaintiff's brief.

The principal decision of the Appeal Board which is recited in the plaintiff's brief as proof of something that has to do with the situation down in New Orleans, or in that vicinity, in which there was a race of diligence between two exhibitors in erecting theatres, and the complainant filed a complaint that he did not get the product which he thought he should have, and that is quoted against us by the plaintiff's counsel. We think it a little unfair that the plaintiff's counsel did not state that as to two of us, we gave the complainant exactly what he wanted, and we think the attempt to use these Appeal Board decisions against those of us who were not even parties to the decision is an inadmissible substitute for testimony.

Judge Hand: Aren't the true facts, whatever they are, to be shown by the record so far as they relate to this case? That is, through answers to interrogatories and things like that? Does this make any difference? Are you just trying to get a ruling on an exception on evidence?

Mr. Caskey on behalf of Defendants Twentieth Century Fox and National Theatres :

Mr. Caskey: Not at all. We don't want any exception at all. We are not complaining from the evidence point.

Judge Hand: You are merely confirming the correctness of the new rules in that respect.

Mr. Caskey: What I mean is this: Let me put it this way. The plaintiff has avowed that it was trying a paper case; that it was not putting in any proof of specific misconduct or any proof of specific discrimination which, if it had embarked upon, it would have had to call living witnesses and subject them to the hazards of cross-examination.

Now, we say, having elected to proceed on that broad course and having announced that purpose, it is not appropriate to have just a teeny little bit of evidence of discriminatory practices through these Appeal Board decisions when what is stated is stated in an opinion that does not deal with an antitrust problem at all but with simply the the review of a business judgment.

Now, I can give you one example that I think will solve the whole matter: There is a very beautiful suburb of Boston called Winchester, and the fathers for many years kept all theatres out; but eventually they yielded, and a new theatre was built, and it was within a few miles of some eight or nine other theatres. The operator was dissatisfied with his playing time, and he brought an antitrust suit in which he alleged combination and conspiracy to restrain trade, and so forth. Under the Massachusetts practice it was referred to an Auditor, and we had the good fortune to have as Auditor the Honorable Hugh McClellan, sometime District Judge. He recommended that the bill be dismissed.

The plaintiff was still not satisfied; and as it had the right to do, went before a jury. The verdict was for the defendants.

Then and only then they filed a complaint to the Arbitration System, and the Arbitrator, freed of the legal requirements of the Sherman Act, and simply sitting in review of what the distributors had done, made quite considerable changes in the clearance that affect the Winchester theatre. And when it got to the Appeal Board, they tried their hand at it and they set up another and somewhat more complicated system.

Now, we say that certainly, having won an antitrust suit on the very issue of whether we had conspired or combined to grant an illegal clearance, that the decision of the Appeal Board modifying the clearance at some later time is certainly no evidence that there had been any violation of the Sherman Act.

Now, in the few remaining moments which I have, I desire—— Judge Hand: I think you take this item of argument rather too seriously.

Mr. Caskey: Well, then, that disposes of it.

Judge Hand: In other words, we are entitled, it seems to me, to have a picture of what this Board that has worked very well did.

Mr. Caskey: Certainly.

Judge Hand: And not fuss too much over the details, which we should not.

Mr. Caskey: That is quite correct, sir.

Judge Hand: I do not believe the Government would expect us to. They called attention to some features in the picture, and you could call attention to others.

Mr. Caskey: But what I am saying is, sir——

Judge Hand: We are not accustomed to reading any more, in suits of this kind, than we have to, or in ruling out a lot of stuff in evidence. It does not do any good. If it does not take too much time, in it goes.

Go ahead.

Mr. Caskey: Now, in the second part of my argument I want to discuss very briefly the position of Twentieth Century-Fox and its theatre-operating affiliates in the industry.

It is no longer necessary to discuss the problem of individual monopolization. Twentieth Century-Fox produces something like 9 per cent of the feature pictures produced in this country and distributes a somewhat lesser percentage of those which are distributed. Revenue from all the theatres in the United States including its own is less than 15 per cent of the total revenue. While, naturally, we urge that it produce the good pictures, obviously it does not produce all of the good pictures. It has no monopoly position.

So the plaintiff is compelled to resort to a claim of combination which, as has been stated yesterday, means agreement. Now, it does not mean agreement in the sense of a signed document, but it means agreement in the sense that a plan or arrangement has been assented to, and it means agreement in the sense that there is some defined program. Certainly, an agreement among these defendants to sell to each other whenever they wanted to is no such agreement. It seems to us that the only agreement which could possibly be spelled out of the claims of the plaintiff is an agreement that we will deal with the other four companies wherever they are located, and that we will refrain from dealing with others in those situations.

Now, of that agreement there simply is no evidence and there are no facts from which the inference of any such agreement could be made. The market which we have been asked to test is this rather artificial market conceived by drawing a line under a hundred thousand and taking the 92 cities which were above it. Obviously, some of those cities are not key cities in any commercial sense. Obviously there are other cities of smaller population of greater importance. But taking what was tendered, we find first of all that Twentieth Century-Fox has an interest in theatres in only 17 of those cities, and that includes Philadelphia where its theatre during the 1943-44 season, for which you have statistics, was operated by Warner Bros. Of course, in those cities, to the extent that the screen time will absorb the product, National exhibits the pictures of Fox, and Fox does not license them first run elsewhere. But here in New York where the Roxy Theatre is unable to show them all, then Twentieth Century pictures are licensed to independent first-run theatres, and often in direct opposition—that is, often an independent on Broadway will be exhibiting a Fox picture at the same time that another Fox picture is being exhibited in the Roxy Theatre.

In four of the cities there are no affiliated theatres at all, and we deal as we must with those who have the independent first-run theatres in those communities.

So that is 21 cities, leaving 71. If the plaintiff's fundamental basis has any validity; if this cross-licensing or diagonal-licensing or sharing screen time, or whatever it is, is to be sustained, we should find that in those 71 cities in which there are affiliated theatres, Fox deals with them and refrains from dealing with others.

Now, the fact is to the contrary. In 17 cities in which there is an affiliated theatre of one of the defendants, Fox deals with an independent; and in 6 cities in which there are affiliated theatres of two or more defendants, Fox deals with an independent. So that there are 23 out of the 71 cities in which there are affiliated theatres but where Fox has chosen to deal with some other exhibitor, an independent exhibitor, and for the reasons set forth in Mr. Kupper's testimony.

Now when we turn to the National situation we find exactly the same lack of pattern. As I have said, during the year for which the statistics are available, the Fox Theatre in Philadelphia was leased to Warner's. But taking the other 16 cities, what do we find? The first thing we find is that in 11 of them National Theatres does not license Warner first run product at all. In 11 out of 16 we license no Warner product. In 5 out of 16 we license no Loew product. In 6 we license no Paramount product. In 8 we have no RKO product. In 11 we do not have Columbia. In 9 we do not have Universal. And in 7 we do not have United Artists.

Now, we appreciate that in some of these cities the reason that we do not have the product of the particular distributor is because it has a theatre in competition with ours. But our point is that there simply is no pattern, there is no relationship between what Twentieth Century-Fox licenses the other four companies and what National Theatres licenses from the other four companies. There is no way in the world in which you can sit down and write out what this combination and conspiracy is, because the conduct of the parties is so at variance with any preconception as to show that there are no factual bases for any inference or conspiracy.

We put on, by stipulation, the testimony of the managers of the five principal divisions of National Theatres. They testified, uncontradicted and in detail, not mere generalizations, that in the licensing of motion pictures they are motivated solely by the purpose to secure the best pictures they can; that the fact that the particular distributor with whom they are dealing has or has not theatres is of no concern; that in licensing pictures for their theatres, they are not the least concerned, or informed, indeed, as to the distribution problems of Twentieth Century-Fox; that their theatres, which they license pictures for first-run, are either the best or comparable to the best in the community; that they are in direct and vigorous competition in every one of the 17 cities in which they operate except one, which is Wichita, Kansas, with other first-run exhibitors, and in Wichita they are in direct competition with a considerable number of other theatres.

I want to speak only a moment about the so-called pools or arrangements between two defendants. National has an almost irreducible minimum.

As the testimony shows, many years ago Loew's leased a theatre in Los Angeles and a theatre in San Francisco to Fox West Coast Theatres. That was before Twentieth Century-Fox had any interest whatever in that company. It had continued to lease and still operates those theatres under a flat rental. Certainly there can be no intent to eliminate competition in Los Angeles or San Francisco by purchasing stock in 1928 in a company which in 1924 had leased a theatre from Loew's.

The San Francisco situation has been fully explained by Mr. Seymour. There was a deal which was not negotiated by theatre men. It was negotiated by two sets or two groups of trustees in bankruptcy and approved by two different bankruptcy courts. Of course, that does not give immunity under the antitrust laws, but I do think the two distinguished District Judges would be somewhat surprised to have it charged that they were attempting to restrain competition.

Then in Kansas City what is the situation? Years ago the so-called Junior Orpheum Circuit built the Main Street Theatre in Kansas City. They spent a lot of money, but they built the theatre off location. And when vaudeville ceased to be profitable, RKO was unable to successfully operate it. For a very few months in 1936 there was a playing arrangement in Kansas City in which a number of theatres were operated together. As a result, there became available for the Main Street Theatre a choice of the product of many distributors, but the result was unsuccessful. RKO gave up the theatre, that is, the lease on it, and it reverted to its owners, and that was the end of it, and the theatre was closed. But in 1942 there was a war on, and there were boom times in Kansas City, and a real estate agent came to Fox and said, "I can get you the Main Street Theatre—the fee of it—very cheaply." So National said, "Well, if you can do that, of course we will take it." And the agent had spoken without authority and we ended up owning one-half of the theatre, an undivided one-half interest and somebody else owning the other half. We immediately commenced a suit for partition and when the answers in the suit for partition came in, we learned that the people who had bought the other half—and I will not characterize their action—was RKO.

I do want to say a few words about Mr. Wright's conception of the real estate law in Missouri, which is about the same as that of his antitrust law. In Missouri, when you have a partition suit of a building, you do not cut it in half. A master in chancery is appointed and he takes sealed bids from each party, and then they have a court hearing as to whether he shall sell it to the higher of the sealed bids from the two parties, or shall sell it at public auction and divide the proceeds among the parties. So I assure Mr. Wright that there will be no surgical demolition of the Main Street Theatre because of the partition suit.

I do not propose to argue the interstate commerce point, because it is wholly immaterial. I do point out that the theatre was closed and had not been operated for several years prior to the time when Fox acquired an interest in it, and that there is no kind of arrangement, agreement or understanding at all with RKO.

Finally, I want to come to these so-called closed towns. I do not want to repeat what Mr. Seymour said. Our situation is this: National has the only theatre in 16 towns. They have an average population of less than 5,000. We haven't got any quite as small as Smakover, but I will tender Delta, Colorado, as a fair example. We have two in California, five in Colorado, one in Illinois, one in Montana, one in Nebraska, two in Wisconsin, and four in the Michigan Peninsula. That is 16 local monopolies. We paid, during the 1943-1944 season an aggregate film rental to all distributors, including Fox, of $25,000,000. I estimate that the film rental paid by these 16 theatres did not exceed $25,000. It is an infinitesimal fraction of one per cent. The ownership of these closed towns certainly gives National Theatres no economic power which enables it to discriminate or to compel anybody to do anything they should not do.

Finally I come to this issue of discrimination. We say that however broadly the record may be construed, whatever may be to this Court's conception of discrimination, whether it is discrimination to sell to one man for five dollars and to another for six, which we think is not, but however the word "discrimination" be construed, there is not one sentence in this record that National Theatres Corporation has been guilty of any act of discrimination against anyone. There is no evidence that National Theatres in the operation of its motion picture theatres has ever licensed a single picture which it did not need. There is no evidence that the admission prices which it charges the public are high or too high and have kept anyone from seeing any picture. There is no evidence that any motion picture produced anywhere has been excluded from the screen. There has been no act of engrossing. So we say that failing proof of combination, there have certainly been no acts of monopolization.

Argument on Behalf of Defendant RKO

Mr. Leisure: May it please the Court, the general proposition of law and many questions of fact common to the five individual defendants have been so ably covered by my distinguished associates, that I will confine my remarks to the evidence particularly affecting RKO.

The Government charges that each of the integrated defendants is in and of itself a combination in restraint of trade. There is also the charge that certain trade practices are illegal per se, but I believe there can be no doubt that the main charge against the defendant I represent is that RKO has knowingly and wilfully agreed to enter into a combination and conspiracy with the other integrated defendants to unreasonably restrain interstate commerce in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures.

I come, therefore, directly to that point. The Court will find no evidence of any such combination and conspiracy in this voluminous record. The Government tendered no testimony or presented no injured parties for cross-examination in support of any such charge.

In respect of this charge, the Government has pitched its entire case upon the single contention that the course of dealing between the five integrated defendants presents evidence from which this Court could and should find evidence of discrimination.

As Mr. Davis pointed out in his admirable statement of yesterday, so sure of his position in this respect is counsel for the Government, that he passed over all such details as proof of the charges made, and he has advised this Court on the very face of his brief that the only matter with which it need concern itself is the nature of the penalty which he seeks to guide the Court in meting out to these defendants.

If I can but make clear what RKO's dealings have been with these other integrated defendants and the reasons for those dealings, I have every confidence that this Court will be fully able to apply the law governing relief without any help from either side in this litigation.

Specifically, the course of dealing that the Government complains about is that which the Government terms "cross licensing". Because of this course of dealing between the integrated defendants, Mr. Wright charges that they have agreed to favor each other in the selection of their first-run outlets to the exclusion of the so-called independents.

Now, does RKO favor affiliated theatres and discriminate against independents in the distribution of its priduct? Well, if it did, one would expect to find in this record evidence that RKO in some way sought to exclude the independents, or, at least, made some appreciable difference between the independents and the affiliates in the licensing of its film to them.

The record discloses no such discrimination. It shows something very different. It shows the fact to be that out of this test group of pictures for the 1943-44 season, in the very cities selected by the Government, both the 92 cities and those having a population of 25,000 and over, approximately 50 per cent of RKO's product was to be found in the affiliated theatres and approximately 50 per cent was to be found in the independent houses. The exact figures are: 47% in the independent houses and 53% in the affiliated houses; in other words, a variation of only 3 per cent on either side of the line from an absolutely equal division between the affiliates and the independents. And this figure becomes even more striking when we consider that the Government claims that 71 per cent of the first-run theatres in these 92 cities are owned or operated by the integrated defendants.

Now, quite aside from this showing as to RKO's product in these 92 cities selected by the Government, let us look at the cities. Did RKO discriminate against the independents in those 92 cities? The record does not show any discrimination. It shows that in 27 out of the 92 cities, RKO owned or operated its own theatres. There is no discrimination in cities where RKO operates and shows its own pictures in its own theatres.

In 24 out of the remaining 65 cities, RKO licensed all of its product to the independents. I suppose even Mr. Wright would not contend that there has been any discrimination where RKO licenses all of its products to the independents.

In six of the remaining 41 cities, RKO divided its product one-half to the independents and one-half to the affiliates; so there is no discrimination in those cities.

In the remaining 35 out of the 92 cities RKO licensed its product to the affiliated theatres, but the record shows that there was no discrimination against the independents in the selection of these affiliated theatres. In fact, the evidence is not even disputed that these were the best available theatres in this vicinity. Specifically, the record shows that in more than 75 per cent of those 35 cities the affiliated theatres were at least 22 per cent larger than the independent theatres, and in many instances from 70 per cent to 190 per cent larger than the independent theatres. The record further discloses that the first run of affiliated outlets selected by RKO averaged 16½ per cent more revenue than the independent outlets averaged.

Now our general sales manager, Mr. Robert Mochrie, testified that in many instances RKO had actually taken its product away from affiliated theatres and licensed it to independent houses. Buffalo, New York, Salt Lake City, and Oklahoma City were cited as specific examples. The Government did not seek to dispute this testimony either on cross-examination or by calling witnesses of its own to contradict it. Neither did the Government seek to show that RKO had ever taken product away from independent houses and licensed to competing affiliated theatres.

As was said by Mr. Whitney Seymour this morning, with the industry that counsel for the Government have shown in this case, I submit that such testimony would have appeared in this record if an army of United States Government accountants had been able to find a single instance of any such discrimination on the part of RKO, agreed to, or as an isolated transaction, tacit, or in writing.

Now there is also the charge in this case that the integrated defendants have agreed to favor each other in respect of the length of playing time and as to the quality of pictures licensed to the independents. Mr. Seymour I thought covered that beautifully this morning from the general standpoint. Let me be specific one second, and I can leave that part of my argument completely out, because it has been covered.

Here also the Government used as its test the first block of pictures for the 1943-1944 season. As to whether RKO did discriminate against the independents in playing time, let me point out to the Court what happened to that first block of pictures. The best picture in the block averaged six days in the affiliated theatres and it averaged six days in the independent houses. The next best picture averaged five days in the affiliated theatres and it averaged five days in the independent houses as well. The next picture averaged four days in the affiliated theatres and it averaged four days in the independent houses as well.

Now what happened to the two least successful pictures, which accounts for the entire block of five pictures? Were they palmed off on the independents for longer playing time, as Mr. Wright suggests? Not at all. The record shows that they averaged four days in the affiliated theatres, but they only averaged three days in the independent houses. In other words, they were actually given longer playing time in the affiliated theatres than they were in the independent houses.

The record shows that the affiliated theatres licensed only 55 per cent of RKO's best product.

I have already pointed out that they licensed 53 per cent of all the product. I think a variation of two per cent is de minimus. Frankly, I have no fear that this Court will find that that a variation of two per cent in a nationwide distribution is the character of evidence which will support an inference of collusion.

Now if the Court please, those are the important charges of discrimination made against RKO as a distributor. I come now to the charge that RKO as an exhibitor has discriminated against the independents.

There is no evidence of any such discrimination in this record. The Government seeks to explain the absence of any proof of this charge by the suggestion in its brief that the integrated defendants naturally favor each other's product. What does the record show? Let's see whether RKO just naturally discriminated against the independents.

A nationwide survey of all RKO theatres during this 1943-1944 season shows some very interesting things on that:

It shows that RKO exhibited nationwide more Republic features than it did Loew's features.

It shows that it exhibited more Monogram features than it did Paramount features.

And it shows that it exhibited more Universal features than it did Fox and Warner features put together.

In other words, less than one picture out of every three pictures came from the other integrated defendants.

Now that is the record if your Honors please. I submit that such a record not only fails to support any charge of discrimination but it demonstrates that RKO could not have been a party to any understanding or agreement to injure the independents either in the distribution or in the exhibition of its pictures.

Mr. Leisure on behalf of Defendant RKO

I now come to the second general charge in this case and that is the charge that RKO is in and of itself a combination in restraint of trade. As this Court well knows, the Supreme Court has consistently held that the legality of any consolidation turns upon two important and main question,—first, its purpose, and second, the effect of its operations. I have reference to the Appalachian Coal case, the American Tobacco Company case, and the Standard Oil case.

Now, RKO's purpose was clearly shown in the record. Coming into a very highly competitive field was its purpose, and that is shown in the record, and I can save thirty minutes of the Court's time by not reviewing that because it is very clear that it's purpose was to come into the competitive field of producing, distributing and exhibiting motion pictures.

So coming down to the effect, what has been the effect of RKO's integration?

Well, as a producer, it has expanded from an almost nonexistent competitive factor to one of vigorous competition to the other four integrated defendants. It has neither the power nor the will to exclude other producers of motion pictures. The Government has not even suggested that it has such power or has even attempted to exercise it.

Now, what about the effect of its operations as a distributor? I submit that the record is clear. RKO has never attempted to exclude the independent producers. On the contrary, as the youngest and the smallest of the integrated companies, it relies upon the independent producers for more than 30 per cent of its film revenue.

The testimony of its president, Mr. N. Peter Rathvon, and its general sales manager, Mr. Robert Mochrie, remains unchallenged and uncontradicted in the record that RKO has always afforded a substantial outlet to the independents for the distribution of their product.

For a period of nine years down to the close of 1944, RKO has depended upon the pictures of independent producers for approximately one-third of its gross revenue.

Now, finally, what has been the effect of the operations of RKO as an exhibitor? Well, has it shown any tendency in this field in the direction of monopoly, as Mr. Wright suggests? It owns 106 theatres today. It has 50 less theatres today than it had when it entered the motion picture field in 1928. Does that look like any desire to monopolze motion picture theatres? Either RKO has no such desire as has been ascribed to it, or it has been missing some wonderful opportunities during the years that these theatres were being built.

Neither the size nor the competitive strength of RKO indicates any tendency in the direction of monopoly. As a producer it produces less than 8 per cent of all the feature motion pictures released in the United States. As a distributor, it distributes approximately 8 per cent of all the feature pictures distributed in the United States. As an exhibitor, out of every 1000 motion picture theatres operated in the United States in 1944, RKO operated less than six theatres. If there is such a thing as evidence, we think that this record clearly shows that the formation and present operation of RKO promotes, rather than restrains, competition.

I respectfully submit that every charge that RKO has entered into a combination and conspiracy with the other integrated defendants collapses under the impact of the facts in this record. The record stands unchallenged that RKO without its theatre holdings could not have emerged from receivership in 1940, or have expanded its production in 1942 and 1943. Therefore, it cannot be disputed that the mere fact of integration has enabled RKO to appear today as a substantial competitor in the motion picture industry.

The operating efficiency of the showcase theatre as a means of exploiting and advertising our product stands unchallenged in this record. The Supreme Court has persistently held that an efficient method of marketing a product should be encouraged and not condemned.

There is no evidence of predatory practices on the part of RKO such as led the Supreme Court to strike down the combinations condemned in the Interstate, the Crescent, and other cases relied on by the Government in this case.

There is no evidence that RKO anywhere or at any time either coerced exhibitors to sell their theatres to it, or in any other manner impaired their fullability to go out and erect or buy or get all the theatres they wanted to get.

There is not even any attempt to bring out any such facts of predatory practices against RKO which runs through all these other cases.

And lastly, I submit that this record is unique it its total absence of any evidence to show that any person has ever been injured in any respect by RKO, under any of the charges contained in this complaint.

Judge Hand: We will take a recess now until 2.15.

(Recess to 2.15 p.m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF THE WARNER DEFENDANTS.

Mr. Proskauer: May it please your Honors, for the better part of a day I have heard my colleagues on this side of the counsel table indulge in a process of what I personally regard as murder as a fine art on the Government's case, and it might occur to your Honors that in view of that demolition, I might fairly temper the wind to the shorn in court and say the rest is silence. But I have a definitive objective in speaking. I am going to indulge in the task of trying to find the pattern in the Government's argument and follow through the labyrinth the maze of obscurities and contradictions which have characterized the presentation, in the endeavor to demonstrate finally to your Honors that there is no cause of action proved here.

First, I direct your attention to the question asked by Judge Bright this morning which related to the power of this Court with respect to the consent decree. First let me say that it is obvious to your Honors that none of these defendants seek to avail themselves of the three-year escape clause. We have abided by the provisions of the consent decree from which we had a right to escape in view of the Government's inaction which reached its climax this morning when Mr. Wright finally got himself to say "Boo" to the three non-integrated defendants. So that if your Honors see fit to continue those provisions it is my submission that you have a perfect right to do that without any finding of law violation against us.

Second, with respect to the arbitration provisions I take it that a court always has a reserved power to perfect a plan formulated in a consent decree, and if the Government, as I shall point out later in another connection when I come to speak of remedy, had seriously undertaken to try to meet any criticisms suggested either by the Appeals Board or by the Court in the details of the arbitration provision, and if this Court should believe that there was anything that could be done to make that machinery even more effective than it concededly has been in the administration of this industry, you will find us ready and willing to consider, when the opportunity is given us, any suggestions that may be made in that regard.

Beyond those two things, which I think are within the reserved power of the Court—and I am speaking for myself alone—the effect of this consent decree is to my mind, and I read a few words from the Swift case (286 U. S. at 119):

> "Nothing less than a clear showing of grievous wrong evoked by new and unforeseen conditions, should lead us to change what was decreed after years of litigation with the consent of all concerned."

Before you can do what Mr. Wright has suggested, throw this consent decree in the waste basket, I suggest that in respects other than the two to which I have referred, you must find a clear showing of grievous wrong evoked by new and unforeseen conditions. So much for the consent decree.

Has there been a grievous showing of wrong? And from this point on, I shall argue as though there had been no consent decree. I grasp the nettle and take the challenge which the Government has offered.

There has been a curious inconsistency in the presentation of the Government's case. One aspect of it sticks out like a sore thumb when you read their brief. "Collectively" is the word they use, and there they base all their claim for relief on the assumption rather than the proof that "collectively" means conspiracy, an agreement to restrain or monopolize.

And at various times during the trial the Government has offered the issue on that phase of the litigation. At other times, and particularly in his summation yesterday, Mr. Wright discards that and he says, "We are not relying on proof of detail or specific agreement or on inference," but in somewhat high sounding phrase he says, "We rely on the principle of law that the integrated industry is illegal per se." I wont burden your Honor with reading from his oration of yesterday.

At one time during this trial, when he evidenced such a theory, there was a spectator in this courtroom who uttered what I think is the most significant bon mot I have heard about this case. There has been great competition among defense counsel to use that on argument. My colleagues finally generously conceded that I had the right to use it because the spectator was my son-in-law, a young Naval officer. When he heard Mr. Wright, and I asked him how the argument appealed to him, his answer was, "It seems to me that the Government's charge is that the moving picture industry is monopolizing the motion picture business," and that is exactly what it comes down to.

And I desire to examine it objectively, and I hope fairly, to demonstrate that in that presentation of his case Mr. Wright is treading on quicksand. What is this talk about illegality per se? Well, the first thing he objects to is integration. There is no harm in integration as such. I read two statements on integration, one from Mr. Justice Holmes,

"The disintegration aimed at by the statute does not extend to reducing all manufacture to isolated units of the lowest degree. It is as lawful for one corporation to make every part of a steam engine and to put the machine together as it would be for one to make the boilers and another to make the wheels." (227 U. S. at 217-218). And then in another case, which approximates very closely to this case, the Eastman case, where the Eastman Company, making almost all of the film that is used by motion picture producers, sought to go into the business of producing motion pictures, Judge Hough, than whom there was never a greater mind to sit upon this Court, used these words (7 F. 2d at 996):

> "Since corporate power exists, it was not and is not unlawful for Eastman Kodak Company to equip itself for, or enter upon, the business of making pictures, but it was and is unlawful for the Commission to order that company to divest itself of the factories and laboratories so lawfully acquired. * * * it is fundamental just now in this country that competition is holy * * *"

It does not follow from what I have thus far said that there are not forms of integration which are illegal, and therefore I think my next step should be to consider with your Honors what is it that makes integration legal or illegal? I find the complete answer to that in one case. That is the second Standard Oil case, the one which had to do with the attempt of the Government to prevent consolidation between the Vacuum Oil Company and the Standard Oil Company after the decree of dissolution against the Standard Oil Company had been made (47 F. 2d 288). And I believe I can help your Honors if I will run through that opinion and approximate what it says to the facts which are here before you.

First: "The industry, as a whole, is thoroughly into the stage of integrated companies," says the Court, which means that such a company owns or controls production, pipelines, and so forth.

That is true here. This industry is in a thoroughly integrated stage where for many years companies, for reasons which have been described to you in the testimony, have produced, distributed and exhibited motion pictures.

What is the criterion by which that should be judged? The Court says that "the superior business position of such an integrated company is evident." Mr. Wright seemed to argue yesterday that if we made an appeal to you to take into account the valid business considerations which prompted integration, that we were asking you to say that a course of conduct was legal merely because it enabled us to make money. I repudiate that argument which he puts into our mouths, but I do say that as Judge Hough pointed out further in that Eastman case, competition is not impaired; it is increased by integrations which make for business efficiency; and unless you can show that by reason of that integration there has been either by predatory practice, by invidious and planned and systematic discrimination, an exclusion from the market of people vi et armis, this Court says that the fact that integration gives a superior business position is a factor that you have a right and a duty to take into account.

What is the next thing that the Court said in that case? I read these words: "It is not of their making and is beyond their control. It is a business current which they cannot successfully oppose. It cannot be ignored in judging their actions and the results therefrom."

That is this case. How did these companies come to be integrated? You have heard the story from my brother Seymour. The independent exhibitors ganged up on the old Paramount, and Paramount met the ganging up by buying theatres and running them itself.

You have heard the story of how Warner got its theatres. We got our theatres because as a struggling infant, young company, we were being throttled in the production of talking pictures and sound films by the great companies which some of my brothers here represent. And we wanted—and I ask you to read the story both in the testimony of Mr.

Keough and in the testimony of Mr. Harry Warner—we wanted and bought theatres for the purpose of enabling us to produce sound pictures which, except for our ownership of those theatres we would have been wholly unable to produce. So I give you, therefore, the second parallel. It is a business current that cannot be ignored in judging our actions.

What is the third consideration? The Court says: "From the above it is clear that there are sound business reasons for this merger which are entirely sufficient and are wholly unconnected with any design to create a monopoly."

That is this case. Certainly it would be piling Ossa on Pelion for me to repeat at this stage of the argument the business reasons which have been developed here, valid business reasons, harming no one, for the integration of this industry, and which have not anything in the world to do with monopoly or restraint of trade; and I shall come to that phase of this by and by.

Then there is another and somewhat more incidental phase. It was developed in that Vacuum-Standard Oil case that those companies were engaged in a foreign business, and the Court used these words, strangely and prophetically applicable to this case: "The plaintiff objected"—that was the Government—"to all evidence as to foreign business" and it said that "the act does not govern foreign trade. We cannot agree. While, of course, the act is not designed to have extra-territorial effect, yet that does not render this evidence immaterial. We do not judge violation of the decree by the effect of the merger upon foreign trade, but the business of each of these companies is a unit, and each has an important foreign trade as an integral part of that business. This is so because the industry is not a local nor even a national matter, but it is world-wide, because there are various companies engaged in it, the trade of which is world wide, and "because the tendency in the industry is to aspire to and to acquire worldwide trade."

And the importance of that I think has not been sufficiently emphasized in this case. The evidence is that for the most part these companies would not break even if it were not for their foreign business. And how do we hold that foreign business? We hold it because we make the best pictures and at this moment we are fighting with our backs to the wall to hold it against discriminatory laws which are being enacted in Europe. And strike down that profit which comes to us from the ownership of theatres that enables us to pay a million, a million and a half, and two million dollars in the production of the great pictures and you deprive not only us of that foreign market; you deprive this country of that foreign market. And at every stage of what I am saying to your Honors I am going to ask you to observe that I take Mr. Wright's criterion of the public interest. The public interest is an essential criterion in the determination of this case, and it is the uncontradicted evidence that to strike down the integration of this industry is to deprive this country of a return of millions of dollars, many millions of dollars, that come in here every year in return for nothing more substantial physically than a few sheets of celluloid.

Mr. Wright: Where does that appear in the record, Judge?

Mr. Proskauer: Well, Mr. Wright, I am not here under cross-examination. You will find the testimony in Mr. Harry Warner's testimony, and I cannot give you the page at this moment, and you will also find it in Exhibit W-5. And it would give me great pleasure if you asked me that after I finished.

Mr. Wright: I am sorry, but you have my record.

Mr. Proskauer: If you want your record, you can have it. I am using this record for the most useful purpose it has ever been put to. Do you want it back?

Mr. Wright: I would like to look at it.

Mr. Proskauer: You have said your "boo" to me. Now let's go on. Take it all.

Mr. Wright: I hate to interrupt you, Judge.

Mr. Proskauer: Nothing you can say will make me cease to love you even though I despise your argument.

Mr. Proskauer on behalf of Defendant Warner

I am sorry for the interruption, your Honors.

I want to go ahead with that case, showing always the parallel between the integration there specifically sanctioned by the Court and the integration which we have here under attack. Competition? What the Sherman Law does is to forbid unreasonable restraints on competition, and this is what that Court said:

> "The round situation is that while Socony was formerly the thoroughly dominating concern in this territory, and while it still has more business and outlets than any other company therein, yet competition of all kinds and in all localities has entered and thriven and is participated in by rivals ample able to take care of themselves."

Whether you think of Warner Bros. alone or Warner Bros. as a link in this imaginary chain of five integrated defendants, that is true in this case. It is true in every phase of this case. There are, as I remember the figures, and I state them subject to immaterial correction, approximately five thousand more independent theatres in this country than there were in 1935.

Warners have not increased their theatres. Loew's and RKO have not increased their theatres. Paramount has increased only by that device that you know of, the so-called partnership with people all over the country. Has anybody come here to say that there isn't ample competition in the growth of theatres—independent theatres—in the exhibition field? In the production field?

We have Mr. Wright's concession that there is no monopoly in production, but I am not content to rest on that concession. I am inviting your attention to the evidence which shows the growth of these three little fellows over there and of P.R.C. and of Monogram, and I quote Mr. Wright substantially when I say that he conceded that no man who had the ability to produce a decent picture had the slightest difficulty in having it exhibited.

If you challenge me on that, Mr. Wright, I will find it.

Mr. Wright: Yes, I do. Where is that?

Mr. Frohlich: Montague's testimony.

Mr. Proskauer (Reading): "I suppose it is perfectly clear that anybody who has talent and who can make a successful picture is in its intense demand, and that all of the people who own theatres are anxious to have those people make pictures and get their pictures distributed." (R., p. 1949).

That is what I am referring to, Mr. Wright, and I think I fairly paraphrased it, and I don't wonder that you express surprise here at the fact that for once you did make an absolutely clear concession of an indisputable fact.

And I should like to be free from that kind of interruption. I am not accustomed to misquoting concessions or testimony.

There too, as here, the integration related to a business that controlled the ultimate retail outlets—some of the retail outlets, just as here, where we own some of the theatres that are the ultimate retail outlet to the public for the exhibition of these pictures.

Intent? Let's see what intent has got to do in determining whether integration is illegal per se.

"There is no direct evidence in this record of such an intent to restrain commerce." I repeat, there is no direct evidence in our record of any intent to restrain commerce. "The only direct evidence is to the effect that the intent and purpose of this merger is to meet the normal and natural business interests of the two companies brought about by the development of, and the changed competitive and business conditions in, the industry." That, I submit, is a fair statement of the evidence of all the defendants' witnesses in this case, uncontradicted and unchallenged; and while I am not unmindful of the observation made by Judge Hand during this trial that a court was not going to be too much influenced by general denials in abstract terms by officers, I advance for your consideration the suggestion that you cannot ignore those denials, and that positively instead of negatively they are entitled to the very greatest weight when they are fortified by the mass of detailed and specific evidence adduced here to which it will be my privilege in a moment to advert.

Lastly, what is it in its effect on restraining commerce that makes an integration legal or illegal?

Says the Court, "The Supreme Court has construed the purpose of the Act to be to prevent monopoly by preserving that character and degree of competition which will prevent monopoly. This has been variously expressed as 'undue' restraint or 'unreasonable' restraint of trade or of commerce." And then it quotes from a dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Holmes with approval, this phrase:

"This idea has been succinctly expressed by Justice Holmes as 'a combination in unreasonable restraint of trade imports an attempt to override normal market conditions.'"

We have attempted to override no normal market conditions, as I shall prove when I come to consider the second phase of this case.

Why does Mr. Wright resort, in the last stages of this case, to a return to a somewhat ecstatic amorphous dissertation on trade practices of integrated industry? Judge Hand during this trial referred to a book, "The Age of Jackson" where everybody thought everything was a monopoly, and it is that kind of ecstacy which seems to pervade the thinking of those who stay a long time in the Antitrust Bureau. From that same book I culled a statement and put in my brief a phrase, "A doctrinaire preference for deductive logic over facts."

When you consider that first horn of the dilemma on which I am seeking to impale the Government, namely, this general idea that there is something illegal per se in integration, I believe you will come to see that that aptly describes the approach made here yesterday in Mr. Wright's summation.

Why does he do that? He does it because he has realized the breakdown of the Government's case on the other theory he advanced and which he bases on the uses of the word "collectively." And at the risk of some repetition, which I will reduce, I assure your Honors, to the minimum, I desire to examine what the evidence here is to sustain the use of that word "collectively" in its legalistic sense, its legal sense; namely, of a conspiracy. And I am going to try to put the case to your Honors, not repeating, but referring to the factual statements that have been adduced by my colleagues, in an integrated hole. I am arguing to the fact finders now. You are my jury.

What is the evidence of collectivity? Let us just see. The suggestion is made that we are engaged in a conspiracy. There is no direct evidence of it, as everybody has conceded. What are the facts from which he endeavors to infer it? First, it is conceded that there is no monopoly with respect to production. Second, the concession that I just made from Mr. Wright has been made. Third, and I refer again to the public interest, it is conceded that every member of the public can see every picture, no matter how great or expensive, for a trifling admission cost, if he is willing to wait. If he wants to see it right away quick, he will go to one of the big, expensive theatres and pay 75 cents or a dollar or more to see it. It is conceded, and I measure my words when I say "conceded", that there is profound competition among the defendants for film revenue and the box office dollar. And Judge Bright asked a question yesterday which sticks in my mind with reference to the proof on that subject. Could you have any better proof of it than the admitted fact that each one of these eight defendants maintains a distribution system at the expense of millions and millions of dollars for each one of them? Going out, fighting one another, to sell their pictures—and we sell ours singly—to sell their pictures to the 18,000 theatres in this country, of whom over 15,000 are absolutely independently owned? Why do we engage in that competition? We engage in it because we could not live without it.

In normal times, when there is not so much money going around that enables the economically lower strata to go to the more expensive theatres, which are largely owned in some of these cities by the defendants, 61.6 per cent, if I remember the figure correctly, of our revenue comes from theatres wholly unaffiliated with any one of these defendants; and it is in the area that we are spending a sum which I estimate as about 30 per cent—cost of distribution—30 to 40 per cent of our film revenue. How? In conspiring with these other people? Not at all. In fighting the life out of them to get the last dollar of revenue from these independent theatres throughout the country.

Now, let us take up, after registering those indisputable facts with you, what the Government thinks it has adduced. They say we own a large percentage of the theatres. Well, I might reply to that, your Honor,—so what? But the fact is that we operate Warner theatres first run in only 28 of these cities. In 16 of them we are in competition with independent first-run theatres and in 10 more with the first-run theatres of other defendants. That fact standing alone has no legal significance. It would have significance only if it could be brought into alignment with a combination or conspiracy which could link us up with the other defendants as being guilty of exclusion.

Now, they say, "But you license a large percentage of your first-run pictures to affiliated theatres." Again I suggest—so what? These defendants own the show theatres. You have heard the showplace argument for the ownership of those theatres. Public interest? Public interest is served by it. The publicity that they get from those first-run exhibitions work advantageously right down the line to every subesquent-run exhibitor.

Mr. Proskauer on behalf of Defendant Warner

But let us take Warner's situation—and I am going to give you very few figures; I know they are hard to carry away, and they are on this brief. But take Plaintiff's Exhibit 428. It shows that independents were Warner's regular first run accounts in 24 cities and that there was independent first-run competition in 31 different cities, 16 where Warner's licensed its own theatres and in 15 cities where it licensed a theatre affiliated with another defendant. In 55 of these 92 cities there was independent first-run competition, and with negligible exception, in every one of the others there was bitter first-run competition between the defendants themselves.

I am not going to give you, with your permission, an exhaustive discussion of this evidence. What I am really doing is to try to give you the will to decide based upon this demonstration on our brief, which I think is unanswerable, factually, on the question of drawing any inference of conspiracy or agreement either to monopolize or to restrain.

Now, I proceed rapidly from that point of view, skipping a number of the considerations to which I direct your attention on my brief; but I will give you one figure. It is estimated that the total box-office receipts in this country are $1,350,000,000 a year. It is shown by the interrogatories that the box-office receipts of all these defendants collectively —I will use—"collectively" for once—is $460,000,000 a year. The excess of revenue of independently-owned theatres over affiliated theatres is approximately $900,000,000 out of a total of $1,350,000,000. That does not look very much like a very effective conspiracy to restrain; and while we may be guilty of some minor offenses, of which I am not aware, I think nobody will claim that we are lacking in business acumen; and if we wanted to suppress we have done an awfully bad job.

Now, here is an amazing contention of the Government's: Each defendant has discriminated against a small independent exhibitor in favor of affiliated and unaffiliated circuits. So what? I do not admit the fact. I am not going to repeat the argument made here by Whitney Seymour this morning, which showed the enormous advantages sometimes given to the small exhibitor; and you will find in my brief a calculation with shows that percentagewise the small independent exhibitor is paying less for his film than these big circuits. But let me pass that and assume that we were discriminating against small independent exhibitors in favor of affiliated and unaffiliated circuits. I have never known that it was a violation of the Sherman law to give a large customer an advantage in trading over a small customer. I have never known that it was regarded as a restraint on competition. If a man who owns a dozen theatres comes in to me and says, "I will take a picture for the whole dozen theatres if you will give it to me at a price," and I give him a better price than I could possibly give him if he was just giving me one theatre, I do not see how it can be regarded as a restraint on competition. But the essential part of this is the give-away of the necessitated use by Mr. Wright of the word "unaffiliated." What a queer kind of conspiracy where it is suggested that we discriminate not in favor of affiliated circuits but we also discriminate in favor of unaffiliated circuits. I put that to you as a juror in the box, your Honors. Would that make any sense in supporting a contention that we were engaged in a conspiracy to monopolize?

"Oh," but says Mr. Wright, "you show a discrimination because I have shown that in a few trifling instances larger percentages were paid for subsequent-runs than for prior-runs."

Now, Judge Bright may remember that he asked some questions about that during the course of the trial, and I brought out clearly what is demonstrated beyond possibility of cavil at page 19 in my brief that the run is only one of the factors that determines price; and I gave as the cardinal example of it the evidence which I adduced from one of the witnesses about th Music Hall here. The Music Hall pays a lower initial percentage than almost any other theatre for its first-runs. Why? Because it has a big stage show, an enormous seating capacity, and because a producer can afford profitably to give them a lower rate; and that is not the only example of it. For that evidence to have probative effect on the issue of a conspiracy to monopolize, you would have to show, one, that it was widespread, and the evidence here shows only I think three or four instances of it, countrywide, not very many more—I won't guarantee that exact number. You would also have to show that it was a systematic practice directed against non-affiliates, where on my brief I show that in many instances, in several instances at least, non-affiliates had the advantage in that kind of price discrimination, if you please—and I am not afraid to use the word "discrimination," because, as I have said on my brief, discrimination becomes legally important in this case only if it rises to the dignity of proof of conspiracy to restrain. Of course we discriminate, and so does everybody else who sells anything. And I am saying that this discrimination to which I am presently referring is legally insignificant because it lacks that quality, and because the Government gave no proof from which any inference of invidious organized exclusion of unaffiliated theatres could be drawn.

Now, uniformity of conduct: The Government says, "You license the same people every year." You can go through this country, your Honors, and you will see clothing stores—Hart, Schaffner & Marx stores, or Kirschbaum stores, or College—I do not know some of these other trade names—or, let us say Adam Hats, as my friend suggests—you can't deduce from mere uniformity any significance; and I am not going to turn to the brief to get those cases which you heard where the courts say that mere uniformity is no evidence of conspiracy.

Uniformity also of admission price, they say: There is that beautiful quotation in one of the cases. This is also from the second Standard Oil case:

"Grocers, butchers, and all other lines in the same markets generally sell the same things at the same prices for the sound reasons that they wish to get all they can; that they cannot get more than the price at which the bulk of what is sold in their respective markets is selling, and that they do not think it wise to cut prices."

To all of those considerations we plead guilty. Go out on Broadway here and the adjacent streets and tell me what difference there is in the prices charged for admission by the legitimate theatres?

Now, your Honors, I want to be realistic about this. Isn't it just a little nonsensical to talk about an inference of conspiracy from the fact that a motion picture house is known as a 50-cent house or a 75-cent house, and that it does not change? I am not going to labor that point. I give it to you confident that I am preferring facts over a doctrinaire preference for deductive logic.

Now, clearance and run: I think you have been fed up on clearance and run, but there is one thing I want to say about it: First, we have in this consent decree a provision that clearance reasonable in time and area is essential to the conduct of this business. I do not have to estop the Government by that judicial pronouncement. You read Judge Chesnut's opinion in the Westway case, and you can't escape from it. He reviews that evidence of the kind that you have heard here. And when Mr. Wright talks about abolishing clearance, I find myself the defender of a public interest, not he. I would like to see what would happen to Mr. Wright if he went before a group of independent, second-run exhibitors and told them that he had got a decree abolishing clearance. I told you I like him, and I would be deeply concerned for his physical safety.

Now I put it humorously, your Honor,—quasi-humorously—but it is true you can't run this business without clearance.

Judge Hand: But he has had a spiritual conversion here in the nature of a revival.

Mr. Proskauer: The trouble with Mr. Wright's spiritual conversions is that they are so frequent, so contradictory, and so impalpable that at times I think if I may put it humorously, they are spiritous rather than spiritual.

Mr. Proskauer on behalf of Defendant Warner

I am not going to spend any more time on defending clearance per se, but it does not follow from what I have said that clearance is not capable of abuse as an instrument for the suppression of legitimate competition. It is because of that fact that we put in these provisions in the consent decree.

My good friend Caskey this morning broke my heart by reading one statement of Mr. Hays's that I had here that I wanted to read. Maybe he won't mind and your Honors won't if I just read a word or two of it to emphasize this point I am making.

Here you have this system of clearance which I say without fear of successful contradiction is essential to the business of this industry, and you have 18,000 theatres scrapping about it, and we come in and we say, "We don't want to use clearance as an instrument of oppression." We say, "We consent to the granting of your prayer, Mr. Hayes," —Mr. Wright's distinguished predecessor—"for the appointment of a great arbitral system out of which we can't make anything, we can only lose, and we are so anxious to be sure that clearance and run are being properly handled that we will pay the hundreds of thousands of dollars of expense for the maintenance of that system so that any little fellow anywhere in the United States if he thinks he has got a raw deal can come in and for practically nothing get an immediate decision."

Now what does Mr. Hayes say about that:

"There is no fairer way to handle and dispose of complaints concerning clearance than to have the clearance fixed by some impartial arbitrator."

I say that, the Government said it, and the Government's brief even today in one of those moments of reconversion to which Judge Hand referred, uses these words, "We ascribe as fully now as we did in 1940 to the notion that any clearance must be reasonable as to time and area, but now we regard the essentiality of clearance as such as extremely doubtful."

And in another place he concedes, Mr. Wright concedes that this arbitration system to the extent that it operated well and successfully. These are his words:

"It has no complaint"——

Mr. Wright: No question about that one.

Mr. Proskauer: There is no question about anything I say, Mr. Wright.

> "It has no complaint as to the administration of this arbitration system and the arbitrators and the appeal board have admirably performed their intended task of relieving this Court of complaints."

Now I don't like to criticise any brother lawyer, but I have been reading some of these briefs lately and some of these arguments, and I have had awful feelings, truly, for the profession.

Judge Bright: How about the Court?

Mr. Proskauer: Well, I have an awful feeling with the Court.

Judge Hand: I think you have been infinite in your moderation. About 750 pages as against—well, I don't know how many. We had 1500 in the Aluminum case, you know.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, don't tempt me to talk too long. I am going to give you an example of what I mean. You will find three or four of them at the beginning of my brief. But I saw a statement of unreasonable clearances where it said there was a clearance of 365 days, and I said to myself, "In God's name, how can anybody justify that?" And I went and looked it up and this is what I found: that the clearance of 365 days was an ultimate clearance over a theatre that charged 5 cents admission and that intermediate was a whole series of perfectly normal and reasonable clearances.

Now I am giving you that as a caveat. There are a dozen things like that in the plaintiff's brief, and there have been a dozen things like that in the plaintiff's argument.

To sum up—and I call attention to it in my brief—I don't think it is quite according to Hoyle to suggest a clearance like that as something typical of the industry.

Now, has there been any suggestion that clearance was used as a means of unreasonable discrimination against independents? I know of none. Has there been any evidence that there was a serious abuse of clearance other than in the deductive logic of brother Wright? Out of all these fifteen thousand independent theatres in the United States and in the five years that have elapsed since this consent decree, there have been four hundred complaints. Just four hundred! I am not going to burden you with the number that were decided in our favor and the number that were inconsequential, and the number that were settled. Let us suppose, arguendo, that they were all justified complaints. Seriously, when you have given them, by this consent decree, a method of speedy alleviation of their sorrows, when there are only four hundred people who have complained during the whole five years, out of 18,000 theatres, isn't it a little strain on one's credulity to suggest that there has been an abuse of the system of clearance in order to effect a monopolistic restraint on interstate commerce?

I must be getting along. I have been going an hour. Price fixing. I am not going to gild refined gold by going over Whitney Seymour's argument, but I want to make one addition to it, and it is elicited by a question of Judge Bright's. He asked about this theory of the Government's, that the theatre was not charging just for the exhibition of the picture but for the short, or whatever else went with the picture, and that leads me to try to clarify, as it lies in my mind, what these tie-in cases mean. What they hold is that if I have a patent or a copyright, my legal monopoly does not entitle me to say to a man, "I will license you this picture, but you have got to buy from me some candy or something else." That hasn't anything in the world to do with the essential purpose and effect of the copyright or the patent. You cannot use a patent or a copyright right to impose on a buyer or a licensee something that you demand from him in connection with a subject matter foreign to your legitimate monopoly. What in the world has that got to do with the situations where I license a theatre owner to show my film? I don't tell him he has got to show it with a news reel? I don't tell him anything. And I impose no condition upon him excepting that for any shows he gives which show my picture, he is to give me 25, 30, 15 per cent of it. There is no tie-in in that such as there is in the cases which have been decided, And that is the sole addition, and I think it is an essential one, I shall make to the brilliant argument of my friend Whitney Seymour. I trust that your Honors will bear that in mind.

Price discrimination. I want to add a word about that, and I am a little out of my logical order. I wrote this in here and I did not get it in in the right place. You will forgive me for going back on my tracks for just a minute.

They say, Warners, you are guilty of price discrimination because you have made a deal with Richards down in New Orleans to show pictures at all of his chain of theatres for 15 per cent. I wish your Honors would read the colloquy that occurred during the trial when that evidence was adduced. Richards is an independent theatre operator. He has an independent chain of theatres but—don't interrupt me, Mr. Wright; everything I say is right—but he happens also to have some connection with a specific Paramount theatre or theatres—I have forgotten—and he buys for all of them. We say to Mr. Richards, "not because you happen to have a small interest with Paramount, but because you, entirely independent of Paramount, are the operator of a big chain of local theatres, we will make an overall deal with you for 15 per cent." Are we giving away ourselves to Paramount? Why, it is absurd. The fact that Richards had this little interest with Paramount in a theatre gives to this case nothing of discrimination by us in favor of Paramount.

Judge Bright: How about a discrimination against independents?

Mr. Proskauer: He is an independent. Most of his theatres are independent.

Judge Bright: Other independents outside of that chain?

Mr. Proskauer: I have got a right to discriminate when I sell my pictures. I have said, sir, and I have maintained that right unquestionably, I have a right to reduce my price to a large customer. That is not discrimination in any legal sense. There is a lot of talk about discrimination here which has no legal significance, and I am glad you put that question to me, Judge Bright, because I would like to answer it head-on. I discriminate every time I make a sale or a license. I take my customer, I make my deal with him. If he is a good customer, and I think I can make a lot of money by reducing the price, I discriminate in his favor. There is no law against discrimination. The kind of discrimination that is outlawed is a discrimination practiced in connection with an attempt to restrain trade unlawfully, unreasonably, or to create a monopoly. And I rest on that proposition, sir.

Now we come to the next ——

Judge Hand: How did this deal leave the New Orleans situation?

Mr. Proskauer: So far as I know, I know of no complaints about it. Was there ever any? No evidence of any complaint or trouble at all. Mr. Wright just digs this situation out of the papers we furnished him. I never heard of any trouble about it. I have never heard anybody complain about it. That is one of those deductive things.

In every case there is a residuum of atmospheric argument and the Government constantly insinuates here, oh, the Goldman case was decided against you, and the Schine case, and the Interstate case. Therefore, you must be bad people. Well, I might retort in kind, the Gary case and the Shad case, and I have another case written down here and I have lost it—the Westaway case—they were all decided in our favor, so we must be good people. But what it comes down to, your Honors, is this, and I am going to have a word to say about sore spots later, because I know Judge Hand's mind has been running on that a little during this trial, I said, when I opened this case to your Honors, that it would be incredible if, in the conduct of a great industry like this, with all its complications, you could not find something to cavil about.

We have been blackjacked by that circuit down there in the Interstate case, and wrongly, wrongly! We yielded to a species of blackmail and made a perfectly illegal agreement to fix the price of other people's theatres as a condition of licensing to that circuit's theatre. I have no quarrel with that case. It was righted as a local situation by a court of justice.

We got the Goldman case, where the court drew an inference of fact that we had entered into an agreement not to sell to a particular theatre. That decision has righted what the court held, and which I believe incorrectly, to be a wrong. And so with every one of these four or five or six cases that are constantly thrown in our teeth here.

That Chicago case, a jury found—a jury found—as a fact that there had been an agreement not to sell to a theatre.

Judge Hand: What became of the Goldman case, is it through?

Mr. Proskauer: No, sir.

Judge Hand: There is an application for a writ or something, or is there a writ?

Mr. Proskauer: I don't want to take the time to tell you all the things about it at the moment.

Judge Hand: No.

Mr. Proskauer: Suffice to say that there are some interlocutory proceedings going on. They asked for a jury trial on damages. Judge Kirkpatrick refused to give it to them. They brought a mandamus in the Circuit Court against Judge Kirkpatrick and it has been argued. I don't think it has been decided. Has it? It hasn't been decided yet. Meanwhile, we are all marking time until we can get somewhere in the case and go up on appeal.

Mr. Proskauer on behalf of Defendant Warner

On this phase of the case, your Honors, I am just submitting to you, you cannot prove this case by showing that in three or four instances there were specific local situations where the courts redressed a wrong, particularly in view of Mr. Wright's emphasis yesterday that he was not driving at specific things; he was directing his claim against the whole nationwide pattern of this industry.

What is the next thing they say? Cross licensing. Again I am not going to paint the lily by going over what Mr. Seymour said. As far as Warner Bros. are concerned, I say that it is not only the oath of our officers which demonstrates beyond the possibility of contradiction, I mean beyond the possibility of it, that we never conditioned what we licensed for our theatres by what we license to the theatres of our co-defendants. I have elaborated that on my brief. I am not going to detain you here with it on oral argument.

Judge Bright: Is there any contention to the contrary?

Mr. Proskauer: I don't know. I never can tell what Mr. Wright is contending. If your Honor cares to ask it of him, I should be delighted to have his answer.

Mr. Wright: I think you are right, Judge Bright, there is no contention that each contract they make with each other is conditioned upon the execution of a similar agreement.

Mr. Proskauer: You see, the trouble with Mr. Wright's concessions is that they always have a little modification. Now, the answer to that question was yes or no. I do not know what he meant by the addition. I am saying that the evidence demonstrates beyond the possibility of contradiction that there is no back scratching. That is a word perhaps that he can understand.

Mr. Wright: That we do not concede.

Judge Bright: I do not think he concedes that.

Mr. Wright: That is right.

Mr. Proskauer: Then I make my point.

Judge Hand: It shows the great danger of figures of speech.

Mr. Proskauer on behalf of Defendant Warner

Mr. Proskauer: Let me put it literally so that even an Assistant Attorney General can understand it. I say that the evidence shows beyond the possibility of contradiction that there is no such cross-licensing as will support any inference that we condition what we license to and by what we license from the co-defendants, so that there is no inference therefrom of a conspiracy to exclude anybody else.

Mr. Wright: That we deny.

Mr. Proskauer: All right, then I will just give you one example of it out of a half dozen places which I treated in my brief. I say there is no pattern whatever. If you had a pattern you would suppose that when we licensed more from Loew's, they would license more from us, and vice versa, with all of them. I shall just read a few of them. They are all in this brief: In 1931 and 1932 we paid Loew's 40 per cent less than we did the prior year. Loew paid us 43 per cent more. In the next year we paid them 22 per cent more than in the prior year. They paid us 62 per cent less. Now, I am not taking that as an isolated example. I am telling your Honors that this brief will demonstrate that that is typical and there is nothing in this case as to cross-licensing, as Mr. Seymour developed this morning, which gives rise to any inference of conspiracy to restrain trade.

Now, public interest: I have referred to that briefly, and I make only a passing reference to it now. The growth of the theatres, the millions we spend in competitive distribution; the enormous increase in the cost of pictures absorbed entirely by us, as is indisputable, shown by an exhibit we put in evidence, the cost never passed on to the public; admission prices remaining about the same—I do not know what the humorous phase of it is. Mr. Wright seems to be enjoying it, outwardly. I am stating that to be what the evidence in this case shows.

Now, it is developed in this case that there are certain places that we call sore spots, possible sore spots; and there was a great to-do made about Albany. And particularly yesterday Mr. Wright made a great pother about a contract we made with the Fast Company, I think it was, in which it was provided that that company should operate only in Albany and Troy, as I remember.

Mr. Wright: You did not make it.

Mr. Proskauer: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Wright: I was going to say that appeared in the RKO agreement with Fast. Maybe it appears in yours too; I do not know it, if it did.

Mr. Proskauer: Well, I don't know whether it was with us or with RKO. It does not make any difference with respect to what I am going to say.

And he left your Honors under the impression that that was some kind of a covenant not to compete anywhere else, and, therefore, there was something illegal in it; and when you analyze it, what do you find? Here is this man Fabian, a well known independent theatre operator, unaffiliated with us, operating theatres in a number of cities, and he comes up to Albany—and the detail of this deal is in the brief, and I am not going to go into a mass of it—he comes up to Albany and he wants to make a deal by which if he does not build a new theatre he can get an interest in our theatre. And we say to him, "All right, there is not enough business here for two theatres. We do not want cutthroat competition. We will make a deal with you, and we will give you an interest in this theatre, so you won't build the other theatre right across the street from us." We have a right to do that on the local scene if we are not using oppressive tactics to force Fabian—and I may say you may almost take judicial notice that nobody uses any oppressive tactics to force Fabian. He is one of the biggest and most successful operators in the country.

Now, we say, "We are going to form a separate corporation with you, but we do not want that corporation doing business outside. We want to restrict this business to the particular area in which we are negotiating with you." And that provision is made. And Mr. Wright used that yesterday as though that was some kind of an agreement to prevent competiton in other cities, whereas, in truth and in fact and objectively it left Fabian perfectly free, Fabian the man, independently of this corporation, to go and open theatres anywhere in the world he pleased. Now, that just does not make sense.

Philadelphia—and I am taking my sore spots—we happened to own all the first-run theatres in Philadelphia. You heard the story of how we came to get them. Why, your Honors, if there is anything wrong in those—and I do not concede there is—they are being corrected on the local scene.

One of the Judges asked this morning, "Could you correct them here?" If you thought that they had force you could correct them here. It is certainly within your power.

I urge that it is not within the mandate that this evidence gives you, where it is perfectly clear that it is being treated locally, but, certainly there is nothing in those situations to support the picture of this nationwide conspiracy to which my friend referred; and the same thing goes for pools. That is an awfully ugly word. There are no pools here in the technical sense of pools that have been condemned under some of the authorities. Mr. Seymour told you how they originated. Nobody gave any evidence, as far as I remember, as to the extent to which those pools were with independents or affiliates. And why? Because they are de minimis.

Warner Bros.—and how many pools have we got all over the country? 24 I think it is, or something like that. They are utterly inconsequential. Nobody would be hurt if they were maintained, or if they were enjoined. There is not the slightest proof, however, that the pools are limited to co-defendants to make them evidence of a nationwide conspiracy. There is no evidence of that; and if there is any such contention made—here, I have got it written down here.

We had pools in 25 towns, 19 with independents, four with defendants, and two jointly with affiliates and independents.

Now all that evidence is not in the record. It is not in the record because no contrary evidence was given, but I am asserting to you the real picture to show why Mr. Wright never made any proof that these so-called pools were being used as an instrument of conspiracy among the co-defendants, and I repeat, your Honor, so far as we are concerned they are absolutely negligible. We don't care a rap about them.

Judge Hand: Do you have anything to do with that California situation?

Mr. Proskauer: Not a thing in the world.

Judge Hand: I thought you had.

Mr. Proskauer: Oh, no.

Now I am coming to the end. What is this talk about dissolving us as a monopoly, dissolving Warner Bros., and divorcing Warner Bros. from the Warner Bros. Theatres Corporation?

I have spent a good deal of time in the last week reading the cases on that. This is what they hold, your Honors: In every single case where dissolution was decreed, except in two or three to which I shall refer, the dissolution was based—and I am going to shorten this; I am telling your Honors that that is what you will find when you read the cases—the organization dissolved was itself the monopoly. That was the Tobacco case, that was the Standard Oil case. In two or three cases of which the Reading case is the outstanding case, the organization which was ultimately ordered dissolved was directly the device by which the nefarious practice was being imposed upon the community, that is, a holding company existed in the Reading case by means of which there was an absolute agreement to control wholesale coal prices, and the Court held on one branch of the case that that violated a provision in the Interstate Commerce Law forbidding coal mines from owning coal companies, and it put the provision on that ground and it referred also to the other phase of it, and I am not going to argue that they put it solely on the ground of the Interstate Commerce Act. They said that the whole thing was a device to create a monopoly, standing alone, not in combination with anybody else. In other words, it was as though you were to find that Warner Bros. and the Warner Bros. Theatres Company together were a monopoly imposing their will and their unjust conduct on a long suffering public.

Now there is nothing like that here. Absolutely nothing. Warners are not a monopoly. There is no monopoly created by any conspiracy between Warner Brothers Pictures Company and Warner Brothers Theatres Company. There is no such charge really. The charge is that those two companies in conspiracy with all these other companies are doing something, and I assert, your Honors, and I want to make this distinction clear because it is an honest, reasonable distinction, there is not a case in the books that ever ordered a dissolution between a parent and a subsidiary company excepting where the combination between parent and subsidiary was itself the vital part either of the monopoly or of the conspiracy to restrain.

And what are the practical consequences of this claim for divorcement? Mr. Wright was questioned yesterday as to what he wanted to do with this industry. So far as anything he has ever said is concerned I think he wants to put it in a vacuum and wrap it up in cotton padding and there let it die and stagnate. You can't run this business divorced. There has not been a human being who lifted his voice here to give any contrary evidence, and every witness testified to the impossibility of running it divorced. I have used in my brief the phrase that Mr. Wright wants to give us an atomic bomb that will take us back into the nickelodeon days, and that is exactly what it is.

But I am not alone in this. I will quote Mr. Hayes again, and this is what he said before Judge Goddard:

> "Both the defendants and the Government honestly believe that it is infinitely to be preferred"—that is, the consent decree—"to years of litigation with the possibility at the end of the chaos"—that is his word, not mine—"of the chaos that might result from divorcement."

And no matter what else your Honors may think about this case I submit with full confidence that with every consideration for the public interest you are not going to remit this industry into the chaos that would result from disintegration. You are not going to strike down these companies which for a quarter of a century have been doing business as integrated companies. Maybe my period is wrong, but I think it is about right, isn't it? About 20 or 25 years—with harm to nobody, with not a living witness brought here to testify to a single predatory act or practice, with what has been properly called a paper case. I am pleading in the public interest when I ask your Honors to throw this suggestion of divorcement out of consideration as one that would lead to ruin and chaos.

Argument on Behalf of Defendant Columbia Pictures Corporation

Mr. Frohlich: May it please your Honors, we have reached the point in this case where we can say the case has been divided into two parts. I speak for one of the three non-theatre-owning defendants. Our problems are different from those of the five integrated defendants. I am going to confine myself to the problem that I think is the chief problem confronting these three defendants. I am going to speak on block booking, and I am going to speak on the charge of discrimination and nothing else.

We have tried this case here for two months. The Government has submitted voluminous briefs. I sat here patiently yesterday and listened with the greatest attentiveness to Mr. Wright and Mr. Marcus and I have not heard yet why these three defendants are in this case, what they have done that merits condemnation by this Court and what relief is asked against them. I was startled when the brief was served on me and I found that the Government's counsel said in plain English, "We don't know what relief we want now. Let's find out what this Court will do with the other five defendants and then perhaps we can ask the Court to grant some relief so far as you are concerned."

It is rather a fantastic situation, but it is symptomatic. It indicates, your Honors, that even Mr. Wright is not convinced that this defendant Columbia, or the other two defendants, Universal and United Artists, have broken any law and that they should be condemned by this Court or any relief at all granted against them.

I have no interest in this consent decree. If these other five defendants want that consent decree continued and they wish to operate under it, that is their privilege. I do not. I am fighting here for the very life and existence of this defendant, because we cannot run our business and sell our pictures in the manner that the Government seeks to impose on the industry in small blocks of five or less.

In order to have this Court hold that block booking is an illegal practice the Government must ask this Court to make a finding that block booking is in restraint of trade. I have tried to make that sentence as short as I can, and that I think is the very heart of block booking.

And what is block booking? To my mind it is very much like what Darwin speaks of when he speaks of Natural Selection. It is an evolution that grew up in this young industry in the past 30 or 35 years out of the business, out of what I would say the harmony that is necessary between the exhibitors and the producers and distributors.

Your Honors will recall the testimony of Mr. Montague, who was himself one of the pioneers of the business, originally an exhibitor, and then a state-righter, and now connected as general sales manager of this corporation Columbia. He knew the problems of this business and has grown up with it. And he knew and testified that in the early days of this industry these companies had great difficulty in marketing the pictures which they produced. They tried it with franchise holders and it didn't work. They tried it with state rights, and it didn't work. All sorts of devices were used whereby these people could recoup their investment and make a reasonable profit, and they finally came to block booking. They came to this practice under which a company would license its product for a full season to the exhibitor, and that has worked out to this very day. Not only has it worked out with one company but with every company in the business.

Judge Bright: Mr. Frohlich, does the block booking system give the exhibitor any choice or does he have to take your whole product for the whole season?

Mr. Frohlich: No; the testimony is, Judge Bright, that when this exhibitor makes his contract for 44 pictures he has a certain amount of selectivity, and the average selectivity, as Montague testified, is about 32 out of the 44, so that he may reject 12 pictures during the course of the year. And in addition he comes in from time to time with adjustments and we give it to him, and we have been very glad to do it. We want these people to make money with our product.

Judge Hand: Why would it ruin you not to have this system? I don't understand that.

Mr. Frohlich: Well, I am coming to that, Judge Hand. I am trying to explain why it would completely ruin Columbia. To begin with Columbia owns no theatres.

Judge Hand: Let me ask you—I suppose it is not in the record; maybe I have no right to ask you, but I assume it is common property—how about these other independents? Do they have a block booking system?

Mr. Frohlich: Certainly.

Judge Hand: You mean everybody does except these five?

Mr. Frohlich: Monogram and Republic and P. R. C. block book just like Columbia and Universal. And I am going to show your Honors why that would ruin them.

I say to begin with we own no theatres. We have absolutely no method of recouping from any ready market the monies that we put into the production of motion pictures. The other five defendants are fortunate. They own theatres. When they make a picture for a million dollars they can send it into their theatres and they can at least recoup part of their million dollars and try to sell and recoup further moneys from the other theatres. We can't do that. We haven't the slightest outlet for our pictures.

Now the only way in which we can insure some sort of recoupment and reduce the hazard and the gamble, which is inherent in this business like in no other business in the world, is by making these contracts at the beginning of each season with groups of exhibitors under which we know, rain or shine, at the end of that season we will have at least X dollars in our treasury, and will have recouped a part of our investment.

Now that is the only way we can operate. If we couldn't do that, how do you suppose we could spend two million dollars on a picture? Go out and try to sell it piecemeal? That just isn't possible. We have to look to block booking in order to reduce the hazards and enable us to risk that investment.

Now, just think of what has happened in the last 15 years with the rising costs. Columbia originally spent in 1928, 1929, when we were just a young company in the industry, $1,600,000 in one year for all of its pictures. That was the extent of its investment. Times have changed. The cost of producing pictures has advanced. Public taste has changed. You have got to give them more important pictures; and last year we spent $16,600,000.

Now, where do you suppose we could look for $16,600,000 if we had to go down in this country and sell each picture by itself to every exhibitor? We can't do it. The only reason we can spend $16,600,000 is that we know that we can make contracts in advance for the seasons which will net us maybe ten or twelve or thirteen million dollars, and we can gamble with the rest. And that is why Columbia must have block booking; and when I say "Columbia," I am speaking for every independent distributor in the United States, the companies that own no theatres, that that have no method of recouping their investment.

As Mr. Montague testified, another consideration, which is a very great and important consideration to Columbia, is that inventories are frozen by this method of selling in small blocks or groups. Here, when we make our contract at the beginning of the season, as we release the picture it is shot out, sent out through the country, and it is released for distribution, and we get our money back, and we get our money back in time to use it and turn it over again during the year. When you take these pictures and split them into small groups and have to wait until they are all manufactured and produced, you have to have trade showings, and then go around and sell them, you just lose that time. You lose four or five months. That was the objection I made originally when this decree came up before Judge Goddard. I said we can't afford to take our money and tie up for four or five months in inventory on the shelf, because we haven't got that kind of money. We certainly can't make 44 pictures a year if we have to do that. That is another one of our problems, and Montague so testified, and that is in the record.

So that again, block booking is essential to these small companies with limited capital; and we are a little company with limited capital, your Honors.

Judge Goddard: What opportunity does the theatre owner have to know what would be in the pictures?

Mr. Frolich: I was just coming to that. Because the Government in condemning block booking—and that condemnation of block booking was not Judge Goddard's idea; it was submitted to him by the Government. The Government insisted it had discovered a way to the promised land. Block booking was going to be destroyed and was going to cure all the evils in the industry; and the Government insisted on it, and that is why I never consented to that decree.

Judge Hand: Of course, there must have been a lot of complaint about it, a big complaint, or they would not have thought they discovered a way to the promised land and done any of these things.

Mr. Frohlich: Well, if there were any complaints about it the time to produce the complaint was right here in this court room, and there was not a witness put on the stand who testified that block booking hurt him. And I know why Mr. Wright did not put an exhibitor on the stand, because he could not get a single exhibitor in the United States—I say that advisedly—who would say that he did not want block booking. You heard Mr. Montague's testimony. Mr. Montague said, "I went to the exhibitors' conventions after 1940 and they were clamoring to go back to block booking."

I would like to have a few of these exhibitors on this stand. I would show you why they do not want this present system. They are not happy with it. This case has been tried in a vacuum; and some of the most important elements which could have been brought out on the stand, and on which the Government had the burden, were not brought out.

The expense of selling pictures in small groups is very substantial. You have got to have a tremendous sales organization; and, again, this little company can't afford it. You have got to sell your pictures eight or nine times a year if you sell them in small groups. That means a sales campaign, publicity, traveling around the country, contacting the exhibitors. Where is the money going to come from? If you think it is not going to hurt Columbia, I will show you how it would hurt Columbia. The Government put in evidence in this case, an exhibit showing the profits that Columbia made in the past ten years.

In ten years, mind you, from 1934 to 1944, and what did it show? It showed that for the first three or four years of that period Columbia, with all its investment, cleared about two million dollars a year, and then there was a falling off and for three years it practically went broke. One year it made nothing; next year it had $500,000, next year $500,000.

And then the war came along and with the lush period of the war, Columbia again made almost two million dollars. It did not make as much during the war as it had made the first three years of that 1934 period.

Now, your Honors, Mr. Montague testified the expense of that selling campaign eight or nine times a year would be a terrific burden on this company. It would certainly entail terrific expenditures and it would eat into these profits. We hadn't any fourteen million dollars profit. This company is living from hand to mouth, after twenty years in business, and to saddle it with that kind of burden and tell it to spend another million or more for additional sales campaigns, is absolutely harsh and unnecessary.

And last but not least, the exhibitors want block booking. I am making that statement advisedly. I have proof of it by Mr. Montague, uncontradicted and unimpeached. There has not been a witness to take that stand to testify to the contrary. And the exhibitors who clamor for block booking today, to give them an assurance of product, are entitled to some consideration too.

Why didn't the Government, with all its resources, knowing that this was a critical point in the case, terrifically critical, why didn't they produce witnesses here and make proof to show that block booking was bad and vicious and a violation of the Sherman Act? Because, don't forget, your Honors, if you are going to take away block booking you will have to make a finding that block booking violates the Sherman Act in restraint of trade, and you will have to reverse two courts, one the Second Circuit Court of Appeals, and one, the Third, which have held that block booking is a very lawful practice. And I will show you how the Government attempts to supply this want of proof by language in the brief. Here is the way the Government brushes aside all considerations of evidence and proof. I am an old-fashioned lawyer and, in my mind, you have got to produce proof in a courtroom and then you can argue from that. You don't make statements in a brief. You don't make statements on the floor of the courtroom. So the Government says on page 111 of its brief:

"Block booking is the tying of a series of copyright monopolies to each other and conditioning the availability of one of a block of dramatic works on the acceptance of others."

The Government has said it! Where is there proof in this record of tying in? What did Columbia ever tie in? When it goes to an exhibitor and says "I want you to buy 44 pictures," and he says "Very well, what is your price?" is that tying in? Is that a condition? If I understand the English language, no.

And that is what the Government bases its claim on, solely and simply, on its own statement, when the very case which supports block booking, the Federal Communications Commission case in the Second Circuit Court of Appeals—said there was no tying in.

So the Government is now asking this Court to reverse these two cases, to forget every consideration of fair dealing in the industry, and to take the five small companies and saddle them with a tremendous expense which may bankrupt them, and turn over the business to the other five large companies. That is Mr. Wright's idea of fairness and of a proper decision under the Sherman Act, destroy the little fellow and give the big fellow a real monopoly. And he would have a beautiful one, because these little companies cannot operate under that system, and if block booking is taken away from them, your Honors, they are gone.

To recapitulate, block booking, I say, is a convenient method of selling. It keeps selling expenses down; it does not freeze capital. It makes a ready market, so that a man may gamble those millions and try to appease that fickle public taste; and the exhibitors want it.

Those considerations, I submit to your Honors, should be very weighty and certainly you should not, on the simple statement of Government's counsel in a brief, condemn a practice which has grown up for twenty-five years in this industry, under which every company made money, every company operated, every exhibitor made money, and the public got the benefit of the skill and genius of these men in this business.

Why condemn this practice and destroy it on absolutely no proof in the record and on the mere statement of the Government, because the Government thinks it is a solution to some of the practices that hurt the industry?

I assure the Court it is no solution, just as much as divorcement is no solution. From the fertile brain of the Department of Justice, block booking was going to be the solution. Today it is divorcement. God alone knows next year what other panacea they are going to have, to solve the problems of this industry.

I am going to have a few words to say, your Honors, on the question of discrimination, and then I will be through.

Judge Goddard: May I ask, the average independent theatre uses how many films a year?

Mr. Frohlich: Well, the average is about two and three hundred pictures a year.

Judge Goddard: And you sell in blocks of 40 from which they must accept 32?

Mr. Frohlich: They usually accept the 32. Sometimes we have to give them an adjustment and they take a few less. And the evidence is that we give the independents all the breaks on it. We give them a better selectivity than we give the affiliates because he needs it, he is a small fellow.

Judge Goddard: They still have an opportunity to get a large supply from the other source?

Mr. Frohlich: Yes, they have an opportunity to do that, of course.

The Government being very sorely pressed and not knowing what to say about Columbia again used its fertile imagination and came out with this very serious charge, wholly unsupported by proof; it said in its brief at page 21, that Columbia, Universal and United Artists are in a different position from non-distributor defendants, in that they have generally reached a satisfactory accomodation with the producer exhibitors, which has enabled them to take more film rental individually from these theatres than that of all the non-defendants put together. That is a startling charge! In other words, they say we very little fellows here are members of this conspiracy because we get more money from the affiliates than the other independent non-defendants like Monogram and Republic and Producers Releases Corporation.

In the first place, there isn't the slightest proof in this record of any conspiracy between these three defendants and the other side. There is no proof in this record that there has ever been any discrimination as against the non-defendants. The proof in this record is that Columbia, just like United Artists and Universal, make good pictures. The Government admitted that. It said again in its brief—that was a lapse, because I imagine they must have forgotten what they said in one part of the brief—when they came to the other part of the brief, towards the end, the man who wrote it forgot what he said, but he made a slip here and I am going to hold him to it, he says, "True, such a business is more hazardous", meaning a business without theatres, "is more hazardous but it does yield profits and results in the making and distribution of films comparable to those controlled by the producer-exhibitors." Well, thank him for that concession! At least we make——

Judge Hand: He thinks it makes men of you, not to have theatres.

Mr. Frohlich: At least we make comparable pictures.

The point I want to make is this, if our pictures are comparable to the pictures of the other five defendants, can this Court draw an inference of conspiracy because we sell our pictures to the theatres owned by the other five defendants? Why shouldn't they buy our pictures? Is that any proof in this record that Republic's, that Monogram's, that Producers Releases Corporation's are comparable pictures? And that they were excluded and that we three were favored? Oh, no. No such proof. How dare the Government make that charge without such proof in the record? It is another illustration of the Government's helplessness in trying to fasten a case on Columbia without proof or evidence of any kind by mere statements in a brief. And it is not honest and it is not fair to these three defendants, who have been dragged through this trial for months and months, to have them come into court and meet that kind of charge.

Judge Hand: Your charge is very much abbreviated by everybody.

Mr. Frohlich: I have done my share at abbreviating it.

Judge Hand: I never could see much of a case against you, I said so in the beginning, but in considering it further, I may yet be convinced that you are in it.

Mr. Frohlich: I have ten minutes more, and I——

The Court: You cannot cleanse your sins by yelling, you know.

Now, we were charged with discrimination; and in order to build up a case of discrimination the Government arbitrarily selected, as your Honor knows, three groups of cities. It took 92 cities of 100,000 or more; it took 413 cities of 25,000 or more; and it took a group of 73 cities which it claimed were closed monopolistic cities, 73 out of 92. Now, there are three groups of cities, and I am just going to very briefly call your Honors' attention to the ultimate figures we submitted in these charts which were put in evidence. In the 92 cities, the proof is that Columbia sells to independents in one-third of those cities, and that is an excellent showing in these large important cities of 100,000 inhabitants or more, with the large theatres in the finest locations.

And then breaking down the 92 cities into the so-called competitive cities where there are independent and affiliates in those cities, Columbia sells to 32 independents of the 48 cities, or 65 per cent.

Now, I submit that is an extremely impressive showing; that we do sell to the independents wherever possible, beginning with the large cities where we could get the most revenue.

The same holds true in the 73 cities. We sell to one-third of the independents in those cities. And again in the competitive situations of 413 cities, we sell 65 per cent to the independents. Now, certainly, Columbia is not discriminating against independents when it goes out in these cities and sells its product to that tremendous proportion of independent theatres.

The Government charges that the defendants did not sell away from each other. Well, in these 92 cities the evidence is that Columbia has sold away in 12 of the cities—"sell away" meaning it takes its product from the affiliated and turns it over to the independent. Certainly that is inconsistent with a conspiracy. It gave "move-overs" to independents in 9 of those cities, again inconsistent with any tie-up or any combination or any conspiracy.

So that the practice and custom of Columbia has been to sell wherever possible to the independents, and we do sell to so many independents that our revenue is derived chiefly from the independents. The evidence shows that about one-third of our revenue is derived from affiliates and about two-thirds from independents. Now, certainly that is not consistent with an adherence to any conspiracy. And in my brief I referred—and I am not going to burden your Honors with any reading from it—to Judge Davies' findings in the Crescent case where the case was tried for two months, and evidence taken, and Judge Davies held that the course of conduct of Columbia has been to sell wherever possible to the independent theatre. Now, that certainly is not consistent with a national conspiracy of any kind.

Judge Hand: Do you have a foreign business?

Mr. Frohlich: Oh yes. Columbia has a foreign business. All these companies have. And we had a foreign headache in the last few years with this foreign business, because we couldn't get any money over. It has been tied up, blocked in London for many years, and so on. But we have that foreign business.

So now I am not going to say any more to your Honors about discrimination. I think the evidence is clear and convincing that Columbia has certainly been selling to independent theatres, and that in no way has it discriminated with respect to any practice against independents and in favor of these five larger companies.

Judge Goddard: They are apparently your best customers. Why should you want to eliminate them?

Mr. Frohlich: Well, we had to have some customers. We have got to have some customers. After all, Judge Goddard, we are in the market to sell our pictures.

Judge Goddard: Oh, yes. They are your best customers, according to your figures. They buy 65 per cent, did you say? What did you say?

Mr. Frohlich: I thought your Honor said——

Judge Goddard: I am not talking about the foreign business; I am talking about independents.

Mr. Frohlich: The independents are our best customers.

Judge Goddard: 65 per cent?

Mr. Frohlich: 65 per cent of our money comes from the independents throughout the country.

Judge Goddard: Then it would seem to be not to your interest to eliminate them.

Mr. Frohlich: That is quite right. And following self-interest, following self-interest and good common horsesense, we have continued to sell to these independents, all of which is inconsistent with any conspiracy. That is the point. What our motives may be—naturally, our motives are selfish. We are all in this business to make money out of it, to make a living; but we certainly are not party of any conspiracy.

So that in view of the evidence here, your Honors, the failure of the Government to give any proof with respect to block booking; the failure of the Government to show any discrimination; the failure of the Government to show any adherence to a conspiracy by this defendant—I earnestly urge the Court to dismiss this case against Columbia.

Judge Hand: Well, I presume you would rather go over until to tomorrow?

Mr. Raftery: I would, if you don't mind.

Judge Hand: All right. We will adjourn until 10.30 tomorrow.

(Adjourned to January 17, 1946, at 10.30 a. m.)

Mr. Raftery on behalf of Universal and United Artists

New York, January 17, 1946,
10.30 o'clock a.m.

Trial resumed.

ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANTS UNIVERSAL AND UNITED ARTISTS

Mr. Raftery: If it please the Court, I am going to speak for two defendants, that is, the Universal group and the United Artists Group.

In view of the fact that Mr. Frohlich finished up Columbia last evening, I will start with Universal, because of the great parity between Universals' method of selling and Columbia's. United Artists, on the other hand, is as unlike either of these companies as it unlike any of the five, so I will save them for the last.

Universal is the oldest in point of time of all the companies that have been brought in here by Mr. Wright. It has had a continuous existence in practically the same corporate form with slight changes since 1911.

As shown by the testimony of Mr. Scully, the company underwent a reorganization in 1937 and new management went in. Starting in 1938 the company began to show some real progress, and I believe the Securities and Exchange Commission reports that Mr. Wright introduced showed it had paid a very substantial excess profits tax in the year 1944. At any rate, it increased the number of theatres that it served from an average of 7,400 to an average better than 11,000 in the seven-year period. It had been in red ink almost continuously from 1928 to 1938 and in 1938 they got rid of the red ink bottle and began writing in black.

Now it owns a studio. It is one of the oldest studios of any size in Los Angeles County. In fact, I believe at some point in some of the examinations before trial Mr. Wright brought out that its studio is known as Universal City, and it has a post office Universal City. It operates in a regular straight schedule. By that I mean it produces pictures with regularity, using its own funds, delivers them to the distributing defendant with regularity, and has a regularity of release and is able to render to a theatre or theatres a steady service, a steady supply of product. It owns no theatres.

I am not going to repeat anything that Mr. Frohlich said about the absolute necessity of a company of that character with approximately 50 releases, with newsreels, with shorts —the absolute necessity of a company of that character, owning no theatres, of selling its product in advance. It must sell its product in advance and it must have a backlog of contracts at all times in order to keep up with production and the costs of production.

I am going to touch one phase that Judge Bright asked Mr. Frohlich that Mr. Frohlich did not go into, and that was blind selling.

Your Honor asked Mr. Frohlich if the exhibitors ever had an opportunity to look at the pictures before they bought them, or something to that effect. Mr. Kupper was called to the stand as the representative of Twentieth Century-Fox; and some counsel asked Mr. Kupper about trade showings. Now, since Judge Goddard's decree the so-called Big Five have been selling their pictures in blocks of five and trade-showing them before the exhibitor even negotiated for the product.

Mr. Kupper was asked, "Do the exhibitors go to trade shows?" And Mr. Kupper rather sadly said, "I regret to say they don't."

Every device known to get exhibitors to go to trade shows has been tried by the five and by United Artists. In fact, only last week, as an added attraction for a trade show that was held at the Normandy Theatre on 53rd Street, held at 10:50 in the morning—and we all know exhibitors do not get up so early in the morning, but 10:50 we thought would be a reasonable hour— and as an added attraction they put a little card in it which entitled every one of them to a free lunch at 21; and the exhibitors were conspicuous by their absence even with the free lunch.

Now, they do not look at pictures. They do not want to look at pictures. I have known exhibitors that—well, there is one in particular. We had a preview out in San Bernadino of the picture "Since You Went Away," and this fellow Richards whom Scully told us so much about, and we heard a lot about it from others—our general sales manager says, "My God! Richards is here tonight. I don't ever remember Richards seeing a picture before."

Now, when they buy pictures and when they bought them over the 20-odd years that they have talked about here, they were buying a trade name. I remember seeing theatres in New England and New York State. They would have a sign in front "Home of Paramount Pictures" or "Home of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures." They bought that trade name. I remember when Universal sold a service, and they would sell a man a complete service, and as part of the service would be "The Home of Universal Pictures."

Now, Mr. Scully told us how they set up these groups of pictures. He goes out to the studio either in May or June of each year and he sits down with the studio executives, and he comes back to New York with a complete list of the proposed releases for the theatrical year, which starts sometime, we will say, August 1st or—I think every sales manager has a different starting date—we will say August 1st and ends the following July. He will set that up with his advertising department; they prepare elaborate brochures; they prepare in their contract that they are going to have this special, giving the name of the book or the play; the name of the people who are to be in it; the name of the director who is to direct it; and they go down the line; and then they have in addition—I forget—I think Scully called them his marquee pictures; and he told us marquee pictures were those where you put a name band, or that sort of thing, and you set that up in your contract. You go to your exhibitor.

Now, I do not subscribe a hundred per cent to Mr. Montague's rule that you can average what the exhibitor buys. That is, he said if he had forty-four pictures, his average showed that thirty-one were bought. That is, thirty-one were committed. The elimination took care of the rest. You can't subscribe to that a hundred per cent. I am more inclined to go along with Scully. Scully says you go in to the exhibitor; you have this brochure; you have this contract; you show him the goods, wares and merchandise you are going to have for that season, and you say, "Here, I am going to have 44 features, 5 specials; I have got a newsreel; I have got some shorts; let us make a deal." And he said you walk out of there with the best deal you can make. He said very rarely are you able to get an exhibitor who will buy your entire block. He may buy 30 of them; he may buy 20. And I think it was Judge Hand who asked Mr. Scully, in effect, "What he really gets is an option on your pictures?"

Now, that is about the way the thing really works out.

Montague told us about the crying towel, where the exhibitor comes in after the contract is made, after he is committed, after he is supposed to play the pictures, and he starts weeping, "I can't play these; they are bad," and so forth, and you adjust them.

So, in reality, blind selling is just another one of these high sounding phrases that have come into this business. We had some more yesterday, such as back scratching, and there are more slogans in the trade, many of which the Government has introduced and many of which the trade itself has introduced. You have got a very peculiar trade. You have more associations than any other; I think when Judge Goddard had his bearing on the consent decree you will recall how many there were; you had briefs from the Southern California Exhibitors Association, the Allied States, the man from Ohio, the man from Texas. You had them from all over. You have all these associations. And they have all these conventions, and they have all these meetings.

Montague summed up his experience since 1940, when the decree was signed, by telling his experience with these associations. Montague testified he was on the committee of distributors that was forever dealing with these folks, trying to get better trade practices. Montague testified none of them wanted blocks of five; that they preferred to buy in bulk. They wanted to know that their theatre had so many pictures committed for the coming season.

Judge Bright: Did your prospectus carry a synopsis of the picture, the general trend of the plot or theme?

Mr. Raftery: Since 1927 every contract that I know of, that Universal has used, and these brochures I am telling about, has an over-glowing synopsis of what the picture is to be. In fact, your question, Judge Bright, reminds me that I was reading the record of the Federal Trade Commission hearings the other night. Those hearings were conducted by a man named Meyers, who at that time was Federal Trade Commissioner and who now is the head of one of the exhibitor associations. Well, in those hearings that very question came up and they adopted some glowing resolutions. It seems that one company started out to sell a picture called "White Flannels." That was to be a great love story of a college town. Well, somewhere the script got mixed up with something else and when it was finished, it was a dire tragedy of a Pennsylvania mining town. So out of that came this resolution about synopses and what not.

There is another interesting thing in connection with the question of block booking. It was United Artists. At that time United Artists had a general sales manager named Lichtman, who now is one of the top executives of Mr. Davis's client, and a lot of church folks were there at this hearing and they were protesting about block booking because that is where the protests about block booking came from, not from exhibitors; it was from the civic groups—a minister, I forgot his name, I think it was Mr. Holmes, he was the leader of it. And they had a report that some theatre manager gave as an alibi for playing a Mae West picture that, in order to get the other more cultural pictures, he had to take the Mae West picture. Well, everyone there knew there was no honesty in that statement of the theatre manager because the chances are that he would not talk about the other pictures until he got the Mae West.

Now, during it, Mr. Lichtman, in order to give United Artists a particularly good place with the church people, stood up and he says "United Artists is the only company here that does not block book." And there was an exhibitor from Pittsburgh, a man named Denny Harris, and he was an important exhibitor out there. He followed Mr. Lichtman. He said, "If United Artists is the only company that does not block book, then for God's sake give us block booking."

Now that is in the record in the Federal Trade Commission hearings.

Block booking has been—well, it is, I don't know, it is like the five-cent fare, everybody likes to talk about it and nobody does anything about it, because it is an essential thing one way or another.

Now you say blocks of five or trade showing. The trade showing idea came from England. The trade showing has been in existence over there for many, many years. In fact, they are supposed to sell pictures in blocks of one, one picture at a time after trade showing, and only after trade showing. The results of trade showing in England are very apparent. In England you have practically a complete monopoly of production and exhibition. There is no monopoly in distribution because all the American companies are operating over there. In exhibition, you have laws which require the exhibitor to exhibit so many feet, or, numerically, so many British pictures for every foreign picture he shows—the quota laws. The other thing the Government threw in against the importation of films was this trade showing.

What has been the result of it? You have two circuits, in reality, dominating the whole British Empire—that is, the British Isles. You have three circuits, two of whom are controlled by one man. Mr. Rank, whose name is in the papers here. Let me say, by the way, since we left here on the 21st of November they have formed two new national distributing companies in this country, with this Mr. Rank dominating them. That is in line with what Judge Proskauer was talking about, new competition from abroad.

You have complete monopoly of production and you have trade showing and only selling after.

Trade showing in blocks of five is not going to relieve anything in our opinion. Now as regards Universal——

Judge Hand: Well, somebody got very excited about block booking. What is the matter with it? What is the dispute all about? Is it just a question of whether you should have this unlimited choice and unlimited obligation, a sort of free will business as against predestination? What is it?

Mr. Raftery: Well, I look on block booking as a red herring that everybody throws across the trail trying to mask and hide the real economic differences between exhibition and distribution.

Judge Hand: But they all forbade it except your people in this consent decree. What did they do it for?

Mr. Raftery: They have their theatres. They can show their pictures in their own theatres and if they are unlucky enough to have a bad one they can slough it off. Universal has no theatres. If Universal has to get into this trade showing thing they are going to be helpless. At least now they have a contract with an exhibitor and he will have a place for the picture somewhere. You recall Montague's testimony. He said this is an exhibitors' market. It is still an exhibitors' market and it has been for years. The exhibitor buys as much stuff as he needs and no more. He can go out of business by over-buying. If he does he will pay for it. He will try to buy just what he needs and pay as little as he can for it. The difference was explained by Montague and Scully. What the exhibitors want—I will wager today if Metro or Paramount were to offer the rank and file exhibitor in this country a five-year franchise for all their product for the next five years every one of them would jump at it. The same goes for Twentieth Century or any of the other defendants. Here is where the economic difference is: How many pictures can we eliminate from what we buy? It is a right of elimination. Selective contract.

Mr. Raftery on behalf of Universal and United Artists

Any contract that has gone into evidence of any importance with Universal or Columbia are essentially elimination contracts. The exhibitor will buy 44 with the right to eliminate as high as 30 of them. Or he will buy 40 with the right to eliminate 20. I think I saw one contract where he obligated himself to play only 8 out of 40. That is the way the exhibitor buys. He wants the right of elimination.

Now block booking in blocks of five, I can't see any difference between a block of five and a block of 40. It is just a question of degree. No one ever questioned the legality of block booking except in that Federal Trade Commission case which your Honor sat on—Federal Trade v. Paramount. I subscribe that is good law and either of these companies have a perfect right legally to sell their pictures in advance just the same as anybody else in any line of business.

For instance, Judge Proskauer touched lightly on other name products. Johnston & Murphy shoes, you can't buy Johnston & Murphy shoes except in these Whitehouse & Hardy stores. And Hickey-Freeman clothes, you go, I think to Tripler's for those. In all these name products, they will buy them from year to year, from year to year, and year to year. And they will be the only ones who handle them in that competitive area.

Now I submit in this case on the evidence not a single witness has been called to complain either about block booking, blind selling, or any of these practices that Universal is alleged to have indulged in.

Universal only mentioned once in the closing.

Judge Hand: You say that the only difference between block booking and, well, the five-picture arrangement is—well, in either case you would say that the purchaser, the exhibitor, would want to eliminate something if some of the pictures weren't good, and it is therefore just a question of degree in the assortment?

Mr. Raftery: And he generally by contract protects himself when he makes the deal.

Judge Hand: Does he in these five?

Mr. Raftery: Yes—no, not in the five. He has no elimination in the fives. There may be some exhibitor strong enough to do so, but there are no contracts that I have seen in evidence where there are any eliminations.

Judge Goddard: The right of elimination extends to how many pictures? I understand eight. It is blocks of 40 with the right——

Mr. Raftery: No, you don't sell blocks of 40. You sell as many pictures as the exhibitor will buy, and in that there is generally, in all the contracts that have gone into evidence, a typewritten provision that of the 40 pictures licensed the exhibitor is obligated to play a minimum of 10. Well, if he has that provision he throws out 30, if he wants to.

Judge Goddard: You mean he has a right out of 40 to eliminate 30?

Mr. Raftery: There are contracts like that in evidence.

Judge Hand: Well, that is not really block booking.

Mr. Raftery: Yes. It is just another slogan. It is just a question of degree. As Mr. Scully put it we have a seasonal product and we try to sell it all, and if we don't succeed we sell as much as we can.

Judge Hand: In block booking contracts what is the average number that an exhibitor can eliminate?

Mr. Raftery: That I can't answer, because it depends upon each individual contract.

Judge Bright: It is part of the dicker.

Mr. Raftery: It is part of the dicker. There is no obligation on his part to buy any.

Judge Bright: Where does the public come out on that type of buying? The public has to see mediocre pictures or scrubs.

Mr. Raftery: It can see mediocre pictures on any arrangement. For instance, we sell pictures one at a time. We had a picture called "A Voice in the Wind," which we thought was a good picture. No one else thought so. No one else bothered to see it. We sold that on an individual contract, one picture. The public—I don't know, they seem to know the pictures they want to see. I have gone in and sat through pictures in theatres that I thought were terrible.

Judge Goddard: Do you mean, Mr. Raftery, the exhibitor may take 40 or he may take only one?

Mr. Raftery: There are contracts to that effect in here.

Judge Goddard: I got the impression that the Government charged here that you compel an exhibitor to take so many pictures.

Mr. Raftery: No. The Government hasn't produced a single witness to show that he was ever required to take more Universal pictures than he wanted to take—not one.

On the contrary, if you look at the Universal franchises that are in, those three-year deals, those are broken down into a one-year deal and a two-year deal superimposed on it if the exhibitor wants it. Seven hundred odd independent exhibitors bought those three-year deals.

Judge Hand: Well, it is very hard to see why there has been all this outcry about block booking if it makes no difference, and particularly if nobody was requiring it. That is certainly inconsistent with ordinary probabilities.

Mr. Raftery: If there was any hue and cry against block booking it would come from the exhibitors. And not one exhibitor has come forward on this trial to complain in one degree against selling pictures in advance. Not one.

Judge Bright: As I understand your argument, you are in favor of block booking because it is an economic necessity, but it is not to the other five?

Mr. Raftery: I would say to the other five block booking would be just as good for them as the way they sell in blocks of five. When I say block booking, I mean to sell it all in advance. Of course, they have the economic advantage of having their own theatres to exhibit their pictures in. You heard Mr. Rathvon say on the stand that he will take a picture and put it in the Palace Theatre and gladly come out of there without any film rental just to put the picture across for the future exhibitions. Well, Universal has not any theatres to do that. Neither has Columbia.

I say this, to your Honors: I say that any restriction on the right of the trader to sell either in ones or blocks of two or blocks of forty, that there is no place in the law where the Government has reached a point where they can regulate industry to that extent. Block booking is just an outgrowth of show business. When the key theatres here in town were the vaudeville houses, you would make a deal with Keith for 40 weeks of vaudeville. You did not know what you were going to get every week, except that you knew you would get a Keith bill, and you knew the trade name you were dealing with.

I do not say that every Universal picture made is a good picture. In fact, I think it was Judge Proskauer on the first or second or third day of the trial proved that worst picture ever played in Philadelphia was the Universal picture, at the Earl Theatre—oh, it did not play the Earl; it played a theatre which normally is a second-run house; it never had a first-run. But I do say as a trader they have the absolute legal right to sell their product in advance either in blocks of ten or forty or twenty; because no one has been hurt; no exhibitor has come forward to say it is not the way he wants to buy. No exhibitor has come here and said, "They blackjacked me or coerced me or forced me into taking his product that I did not need." On the contrary, the record is absolutely silent as far as evidence is concerned.

Judge Hand: Well, then you have a sort of a confession and avoidance argument which is, at least in this case now, that there is no block booking in the old sense?

Mr. Raftery: That is right.

Mr. Scully testified fully on that as to the manner and method of selling Universal pictures. Mr. Montague testified fully as to Columbia, and contracts were put in evidence. Now, we do not think the issue is of any importance. We never have thought it was an important issue. We think the hue and cry has been a bugaboo that was raised originally as an alibi, and it was completely disposed of in the Federal Trade Commission case here in this circuit.

Now, in that Federal Trade Commission case they took thousands of pages of testimony all over the country, the Federal Trade Commission did, and they issued a cease and desist order, and that order was upset in this court; and we submit that is the law as far as block booking and blind selling are concerned.

Judge Hand: Did they seek a review of that in the Supreme Court?

Mr. Raftery: I do not know. I could not say.

Now, in the Crescent case and in the Interstate case, every one of these cases that Mr. Wright relies upon, practically all the contracts involved, with the exception of United Artists in those cases—that means Paramount, Fox, Universal, everyone, were this type of contract. And somewhere along the line in the judicial decision someone would have said contrary to the Federal Trade Commission if there was any thought on the part of the Court that there was any illegality in he practice. In fact, in the Crescent case voluminous Universal contracts were introduced by the Government; and we put in a few they left out; and Judge Davies' findings of fact and conclusions of law—I think it is Government's Exhibit 299 in this case—gives Universal a complete clean bill of health. As far as Columbia, they were dismissed at the close of the Government's case; and every contract that was put in—and there were hundreds of Columbia's contracts—were on this same form or substantially the same form we have got here.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Raftery, do you say that an exhibitor may either contract for a single or for a block of pictures? Is that at his option?

Mr. Raftery: I would not go that far, Judge. Universal might say this. Here you have got two competing exhibitors, one with a theatre across the street from the other; and your salesman goes in to Exhibitor A, and he says, "I will only buy one picture; I will buy that big special you have got." And we will say, "What about the rest of our product? You are not going to talk about that? And he says, "I am not interested." Well, we will go across the street to the competitor. He goes across the street and makes a deal. He may be able to sell 20 over there. He is not going to sit back and let the exhibitor punish him, because the exhibitor is not the kindest fellow in the world, as Scully's testimony indicated during the trial.

For instance, you take Fall River, Massachusetts. You remember we had a lot of talk about our friend Yamins. He has not bought a Universal picture for about five years. Richards, down in New Orleans, he has not bought a Universal picture in six years. And the result of that is that Scully went out and created competition against him. That is, he went to little theatres and got them to remodel their theatres, fix their theatres up, and gave them three-year franchises.

Now, just one word on those franchises: The Government did not mention them in the final argument, but they referred to them just a little bit in the brief. Every one of these franchises in evidence—and when I handed those to the clerk the other day was not to add to that stack you got; but I remembered a promise I had made to put the exhibits together and have a set for the Court. You have got here, I think, about 700-odd franchises, all Universal franchises, all made during the last three years. The longest is about three years in duration. I think that is right, isn't it, Mr. Wright, three years?

Mr. Wright: You have the exhibit there.

Mr. Raftery: Well, they are either two or three years. Now, we submit that this is not the forum or not the lawsuit to litigate any one of these franchises. We submit that if there is any illegality in any one of these documents, a necessary party to any litigation is the exhibitor. It is like Judge Hand said about Albany, it is a local situation. Now, not one competing exhibitor has come forward to offer any evidence that any one of these franchises in any way prejudiced him directly, indirectly, or in any way at all.

Now, we submit that any judicial consideration of each of these documents must be in a litigation where the exhibitor is a party, Universal is a party, and whoever has been injured; and that each franchise would have to be litigated separately; the Court would have to inquire into the nature, the extent and the area affected by each one; and that is nothing that can be even talked about here.

Now, what is the situation with regard to Universal? Universal, according to the testimony of the five exhibitor defendants, has improved in stature steadily since 1938. The quality of its pictures has improved; what they have paid them in film rental has improved; their grosses have generally improved, according to the Securities and Exchange Commission report put in by Mr. Wright; and they are rendering a better service to the exhibitors today than they ever rendered in their history. Now, that is the sum and substance of Universal. They are hardly mentioned in the brief, except on this block booking, which is the red herring that somebody somewhere along the line has been throwing across since 1922 and which generally ends up as a lot of nothing.

Now, United Artists is an entirely different type of company than Universal. It is entirely different from any of the five. United Artists is perhaps the least dependable of all the distributors. We own no studio; we produce no pictures; and many times we live entirely on promises from our producers that do not materialize. We have gone as much as five months without a picture. In fact, one year we had to go out and buy some Paramount pictures, because they had too much inventory and could not handle them, and we had nothing—oh, I withdraw that nothing—we had one picture, a picture called "Moon and Six Pence" which was in production but not delivered. So we went out and bought some Paramount pictures, including some Hopalong Cassidys. We had never been in the Western business before, but we got in, and we found out it was a pretty good business. We bought about eight other features. Well, we had enough to have a convention, and we had just hired a short time before a man who had been the general sales manager for Warner's. So some wit at the convention got up and described our product that year that we had a Warner sales manager selling Paramount pictures for United Artists. And that has been the lack of continuity of delivery which has been our problem since 1919. So, naturally, we have to have a different method of selling than anybody else.

First, under our contracts, which are in evidence, we are required to sell our pictures separately one at a time, and that is the way we sell them. We used to sell them before screening and before they were delivered; and we found that a very bad method for us, because all we were doing was creating a lot of bad will.

I remember one picture we sold three times. I think the name is Life of Rudolph Valentino. To this day that producer has not delivered that picture. We were authorized to sell it and he didn't make it. So, for the most part, over the years, we have sold our pictures one at a time, sometimes after they are finished, sometimes before they are made, and sometimes while they are in production and being made and after we know what we have got.

The Government has referred to United Artists twice in their argument here in closing but they have referred to us about thirty times in the brief. One of the references they have in the brief is an alleged discrimination in Los Angeles County, California. They claim we sold a picture to Skouras or National Theatres on a sliding scale—a picture called Stage Door Canteen—on a sliding scale that started at 20 and went to 50 per cent. We had a great deal of evidence about that. And he says at the same time we sold the same picture to an exhibitor in Burbank for 50 per cent of the gross. That is true, we did. Lazarus testified that in the early stages of selling Stage Door Canteen we tried to get 50 per cent from everybody. In my brief I stated, with a little bit of tongue in cheek, as I did not have the copy of the exhibit, that it was my recollection that we had a contract printed especially for Stage Door Canteen, and in it, so that our salesmen would not be misled; we had printed in there "50 per cent of the gross receipts." I said in all probability that was an early stage of Stage Door Canteen to the man in Burbank, and he went for the 50 per cent. Yesterday my friend here got me out part of what we referred to on the trial as the $800 worth of photostats, and that is the Stage Door Canteen contract for Burbank. It is Exhibit No. 369-1, subdivision 751. And that is a contract for Stage Door Canteen for Burbank, California, and I see printed right across the face of it, "50 per cent of the gross receipts." I said it was an early sale, "15th of July, 1943."

But yesterday I was wondering what was attached to it. We have heard a lot about the preferences given to affiliated circuits. Now, somehow, there got annexed to this exhibit, and I presume it is in evidence because it is out of the bundle, four other contracts, and I see that Woman of the Town was sold to the same exhibitor and he had the right to play Woman of the Town in the Major and/or the Loma, and/or the Magnolia. In other words, he could play it in any one of the three theatres. You remember that is one of the big preferences we gave the big five, let them move it from one theatre to another, or select any one of the three. The terms, he plays it for seven days. He pays 35 per cent of the gross receipts for the first four days, and the last three were reduced to 30 per cent of the gross receipts. "The exhibitor on percentage has the privilege of deducting the cost of the second feature not to exceed $75, from the gross receipts, before computing the film rental." That is another great preference that we gave these affiliates, the right to deduct the second feature. I think there is something in the brief about it, that is, the Government's brief.

Here is another contract attached to this exhibit for Victory Through Air Power. The only difference is, instead of starting at 40 and going down to 35 and going to 30, in this one he starts at 30 and goes to 25. On Hi Diddle Diddle—

Mr. Proskauer: Is that an independent exhibitor?

Mr. Raftery: Yes, this is the big discrimination that is in the brief.

Mr. Proskauer: You did not tell the Court they were independent theatres.

Mr. Raftery: Thanks for doing it. 35 per cent of the gross and 30 on Hi Diddle Diddle. And here is a James Cagney picture, an important picture, 40 per cent of the gross for the first four, 35 for the next four, and the privilege of deducting the cost of the second feature.

I also told your Honors, as the selling got a little tougher, they were forced to strike out that 50 and write in the best deal they could get. Here is the 50 inked out on a contract for the Lamb Amusement Company, and it is dated 12 November, 1943. As the selling got later and the exhibitor got tougher, you had to go down. So, instead of 50 now you get 40, and the split figure. And all through this here—Yamins in Fall River, Newport, Rhode Island, Lafayette theatre in Central Falls, Rhode Island, all independents, the 50 is stricken out, 40 is in. University, Cambridge. Here is one here, Wyandotte, Michigan, where the 50 is out and they are down to 30.

So instead of there being any discrimination of any kind, all that this exhibit shows is that all exhibitors, both the affiliated and the independent, try to get every edge they can from the distributor, irrespective of whether it is United Artists or Universal or Paramount.

Mr. Wright criticizes United Artists on two franchises in his brief, that is all, because we have no other franchises. And the reason, frankly, why we don't make them, we do not think they are good for us. Not that we do not think that they are good for the exhibitor. And in this statement here he says in the case of United Artists, there are closer ties with Loew and Paramount theatres due to two ten-year franchises, with the pattern of distribution set by these franchises continuing since their lapse.

First of all, if you remember, when he offered the Paramount franchise, I stipulated he could put it in on condition he would recognize the fact that in this court, in the Paramount bankruptcy, the franchise terminated in 1933. It wasn't taken over by the Irving Trust Company as Receivers of Publix.

In that franchise, instead of being a ten-year deal that set a pattern for future distribution, it was a five-year deal by operation of law. It was out the window.

I am only going to make one statement in regard to that, that it set a pattern. In 1939-1940 Mr. Wright examined personally our sales force. He examined fully on this Paramount situation. Instead of reading into the record the evidence he got regarding our dealings with Paramount since 1933, he makes this statement with no support of the manner that we have dealt with Paramount since. As a matter of fact, the testimony shows that in New England—we will just take that one sector,—since 1933 United Artists sells against the Paramount theatres in every situation where Paramount has any opposition in the whole of New England except one, and that is New Bedford, Massachusetts, and in New Bedford we did sell against Paramount when we had a fight with the local fellow and we went back selling M. & P.

In this batch of contracts, Paramount has two big fine contracts. In Holyoke, Massachusetts, I just ran across Rifkin, who has a little more or less inferior theatre there. We sold Stage Door Canteen to Rifkin twice. We sold it the first time for a run and then he bought a repeat run, played it twice in the same theatre.

As regards the Loew's franchise, he says we have set the pattern on the Loew franchise. I did not know the Loew franchise was in evidence until I found, instead of going in through us, it went in through the Loew exhibits. The Loew franchise was made in 1927 although dated 1928. When that franchise was made, all the Loew theatres played vaudeville—that we were selling—or stage shows, and the film rental recited in that franchise for practically all our theatres was 17½ per cent of the gross. That does not mean for all our pictures but all the pictures covered by that franchise. Some of our producers were not in on it. The 17½ per cent was predicated on the advance in admission prices charged by those theatres plus the vaudeville show. Instead of allowing them to deduct the cost of the vaudeville show, we took 17½ per cent of the show. Sound came in, vaudeville went out, and we considered that a very bad contract from our standpoint and in 1936 we did not renew it, and the contracts that he has put in now, that we are making with Loew, are paying 35 per cent of the gross and higher percentages. There is no pattern since 1936. It is entirely different. And this statement is absolutely without foundation in fact or on any evidence in the record. The evidence is directly to the contrary.

Judge Goddard: What page is that?

Mr. Raftery: That is page 22 of his brief.

Of course the statement that Mr. Frohlich read yesterday just before that, where he says that we have reached a satisfactory accommodation with the producer-exhibitors. We do not subscribe to that. We never reached a satisfactory accommodation with any exhibitor. They won't satisfy us. They cannot satisfy us.

He then goes on and says that Universal's distribution pattern exhibits a similar tie with RKO.

Judge Hand: Where are you reading from?

Mr. Raftery: Page 22, the top of the page.

This is, in fact, the most insidious charge against United Artists and Universal. It is the bottom of page 21, and 22 right at the top.

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Raftery: In other words, he says that we are able to get the crumbs from the table of Paramount and Loew, and Universal gets them from Paramount. I think Scully testified here that he sold half of his Universal product to Loew in New York. He got mad at RKO in Chicago, took his product away, and he is selling it to B. & K. out there, which is a Paramount affiliate. He took the product away from RKO in San Francisco and he is selling it to Blumenfeld. And only recently, he testified, that down there in Los Angeles he said he made other accommodations because he could not get what he wanted out of RKO. In other words, it is a gratuitous statement. There is no pattern. The evidence is entirely different.

I have talked enough about this, because I think in our brief we have covered everything.

As I understand the Government's argument they have extended what they have asked for in their brief. In their brief they ask for divorcement and then they ask for no relief against United or Universal or Columbia as distributors. But on the argument yesterday or the day before Mr. Wright and Mr. Marcus stated—and I am going to try to paraphrase their contentions, and I am going to try to close very quickly after that—they want divorcement first. They have not signified the nature of the divorce, how it is going to operate, whether it is just going to be the creation of a lot of local circuits, and I don't know whether our state will be worse then than it is now. At any rate I don't know what they want on that and I am not going to talk about it.

But they want to force the selling of pictures on the auction block, if I correctly understood Mr. Wright. They want the elimination of clearance completely. They say that the distributor shall go out and select his run and sell his run. I think it was Judge Bright, or it may have been Judge Hand, who asked Mr. Wright what would happen if you were just having the distributor selling the runs, no clearances, and the exhibitor using the same 300 or 350 prints.

One of Mr. Wright's predecessors—I don't know which one it was—he set up some kind of a complaint department down in the Department of Justice, and every time an exhibitor had a squawk he would write a letter to the Department of Justice. Then the Department in turn would write a letter to all the distributors. Then everybody would write letters back and forth.

Now what would happen would be simply this: we would select the 81st Street Theatre, if there is one at 81st Street, and we would give it the run there. The man at 83rd Street would say, "I can't get it; 81st Street is getting it." He would write a letter to the Department of Justice. In other words, we would be back in that letter-writing stage we were in for several years before this lawsuit was filed.

Judge Hand has talked considerably about the Westerway case. I was one of the associate counsel in that case, and I recall the plaintiff telling how he operated in that case. He would go to Washington to the exchanges to try to buy pictures ahead of Durkee, the independent exhibitor he was talking about.

"What did you do?"

"I would go down to Warner Brothers."

"Whom would you see?"

"The branch manager."

"What would you do then?"

"I would go up to the Department of Justice."

"Whom did you see there?"

"Mr. So and So."

"What did he say?"

"Go back to RKO. See if you can get some pictures from RKO."

The whole sum and substance of the testimony before Judge Chesnut was that he in partnership with the representative of the Department of Justice was trying to break down Durkee's clearance and get clearance for himself.

If you are going to go back—not go back, create a new method of creating runs with no clearance, then I can see nothing but organized chaos as far as distributing pictures is concerned. It is just an economic impossibility.

Now as regards the auction block method, one of the big complaints that we have had from the Department of Justice is that, "You have taken the pictures away from your old customer and given them to somebody else, either an independent or an affiliate."

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I think the complaint here states the complaint of the Department of Justice. It seems to me it is going a little bit far outside this question.

Mr. Raftery: I still repeat that in this case there has been the inference created that pictures were taken away from one exhibitor and given to another. That is a false statement because nothing has been taken away from anybody. What is meant: You have a contract for this year and you service your pictures to this theatre here (indicating). For some reason or no reason you decide not to sell this exhibitor the following year. We say there is no obligation to continue with that exhibitor at any time. So we go over here (indicating) and sell over here to the competing account. That is still called a sell-away or a take-away. Now that has been a complaint. Yet, if you are going to auction-block, that will cease to be a complaint, because no one will have any security in the operation of any theatre. Take a theatre like the evidence shows here in the 92 cities, a theatre in Erie, Pennsylvania, caller the Shea's. That plays all the Fox, Metro and United Artists pictures. I think it is a percentage of Fox or Metro, but it is all United Artists and the other two. We know that that theatre is in no way comparable to the big theatre that Warner Bros. have up there. If you are going to auction-block, Warner's can outbid on the individual picture.

You have got to get a customer. You have got to establish the customer. You have got to establish a steady release of your pictures. You have got to establish your revenue. All you are going to get this way is an auction block. Are you going to support your account or are you going to desert your account?

We stated in the beginning that we sell the market as we find it. We didn't create it. And I respectfully submit as far as Universal and United Artists are concerned that we should not be in this court. We have no position in this court. We have done nothing but sell pictures. If that is a crime we are guilty.

REPLY ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF THE GOVERNMENT

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I had not wanted to go back into the events that led up to bringing us where we are today, but in view of the argument that was made yesterday, I think that it is necessary to do it in order to understand the scope of the issues and precisely what this Court is now being called upon to do or not do. I therefore would like to sketch briefly some of the events leading up to the entry of the consent decree, which were omitted from the statement made yesterday.

Now that decree at the time it was presented to Judge Goddard was uniformly opposed by everybody who appeared in court at those hearings except the government and the defendants. All of the other persons who were permitted to be heard, were opposed to it. Those were primarily the circumstances which made it necessary for us to present it, if it were to be made effective at all upon a wholly tentative experimental basis.

We had negotiated with these people for months. We felt that what they had to offer deserved a fair trial, that it should be put into effect on that basis as far as we were concerned. The problem we recognized as a complex one. The Justice Department had been struggling with it for twenty years. We had this mass of complaints which seemed to take up an inordinate amount of our time as well as the courts'. We wanted to get rid of it and solve it if we could, without resort to prolonged litigation.

We hoped that that decree would do the job. But there is not any question but what in the remarks of Mr. Hays and in the decree itself, it was expressly put forward and accepted not as any final solution or adjudication of anything but merely as a decree which would give an opportunity to the parties to find out whether or not there could be a satisfactory solution of these problems without prolonged litigation.

Now, as to the hearing, Judge Goddard, of course, had no facts before him. The arguments that were made were not addressed to legal propositions. It was simply an airing of complaints; so that the recital in the decree to the effect, of course, that it was not a finding or an adjudication as to anything was simply a necessary consequence of the manner of its presentation; and the responsibility for it was ours. It was our representation to Judge Goddard that the decree should be entered, which he accepted and one which, I suppose, that any judge would accept under similar circumstances. We were willing to take the responsibility for giving the Court the necessary assurance that this relatively radical experiment should be undertaken. And I for one would think the Court was thoroughly justified in undertaking it. I do not want to be understood as asserting here that the Court acted in any way outside its authority in entering that decree. My only point was that if it did what these defendants say it did, and gave them permanent immunity as to any of these matters, then we did not have the right to do it and neither did the Court. But that is not what we did.

Now, as to those limitations on that three-year period, they were not quite accurately stated by Mr. Caskey. As far as the provisions as to method of sale, there was in effect only a one-year trial period as to those. Those were felt at the time to be very drastic things, and some of the industry made the same statements that you hear today, that they were going to be economically ruined by those methods of sale; and very elaborate escape provisions were put into the decree. But the only season during which those five defendants were bound to employ those methods of sale was the season 1941-42. And after that they were free to do anything they chose in those respects.

Now, as to the three-year limitations: They were for a period of three years enjoined from engaging in a general program of expanding their theatre holdings. That limita-

Mr. Wright: You can license, as I see it, under the law five or fifty at a time.

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Wright: In one agreement.

Judge Hand: I used five simply as symbolic.

Mr. Wright: Providing you do not condition the license terms for any one of the five, or fifty, upon the terms which are to be paid for another of the group.

Judge Goddard: What do you mean by "conditioning"? You mean make a price on a certain percentage of the box office receipts of 25 pictures, say?

Mr. Wright: There is no reason why you should not stipulate such percentages for the pictures as you think that they are worth, but what I mean is, you cannot say, "You can have copyright A for 25 per cent of the receipts, if you buy 50, but if you want copyright A alone, it is going to cost you 50 per cent of the receipts." To me, that is plainly conditioning the terms of that copyright on the terms on which the exhibitor buys the other.

Mr. Proskauer: You may sell cheese that way, but you don't have a copyright on the cheese.

Mr. Wright: You may sell cheese that way, but we are not concerned here with how you can sell cheese.

Judge Goddard: As I understand you, Mr. Wright, you say there is no objection to a distributor saying to an exhibitor, "We make a deal on 25 pictures"?

Mr. Wright: Yes, make 25 ——

Judge Goddard: Is that right?

Mr. Wright: Yes, 25 — sell 50, if he has them ready to sell. Of course, blind buying is another aspect of the—— Judge Goddard: Yes, we won't take up blind selling now.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Goddard: But there is no objection on the part of the Government to a distributor making a contract with a theatre owner to take 25 pictures, or take 40 pictures, with the right to eliminate 8 or 10, if he wishes to?

Mr. Wright: That is right.

Judge Goddard: Your answer is, there is no objection?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Goddard: I cannot understand what the argument is about.

Mr. Wright: I am sorry that I cannot——

Judge Hand: I understand what he says, but I do not get the classification. I do not understand what it is all about. Why?

Mr. Wright: Well, I think it is a very clear consequence of the position the Supreme Court has taken in interpreting the patent laws.

Judge Hand: They have never taken it about this sort of thing, have they, at all?

Mr. Wright: Well, it seems to me——

Judge Hand: Now, wait a minute. Answer my question. It won't necessarily be a concession that will involve your position. It may or may not. But just answer my question, whether there is any decision directly in point in regard to coypright or patents?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Hand: Of course, you can talk about the Dry Ice case, and all those things, and the Motion Picture Patents case, and the Socony-Vacuum case and say they are in point. I don't know whether they are or not. I would like to have something like this rather than these analogies. I don't think these are the ordinary tie-in contracts. Maybe they are within the same principle.

Mr. Wright: That is what we contend. I concede we can't come any closer on the facts than, let us say, the Mercoid[1] case and the Motion Picture Patents case. We can't bring you closer to the factual situation that is presented than in those cases. We do rely for our argument on the principles that are to be deduced from what the Supreme Court has done in that whole line of cases reviewed in the Mercoid case the trend of—which has not terminated but which is still going on.

Judge Bright: I wonder if I get you. I understand you to say that any one of these distributors can sell one or more or can license one or more of their copyrights to any distributor providing they do not condition the license of one for the benefit of any of the others.

Mr. Wright: I am not quite clear what you mean by "benefit."

Judge Bright: Well, condition the price or the right to take, the right to buy, for the benefit of any of the others.

Mr. Wright: You mean by benefit, as a means of persuading him to purchase any of the others?

Judge Bright: Well, that is for the benefit——

Mr. Wright: I would say yes. Yes.

Judge Hand: Perhaps I don't get your classification really yet. I should think your answer ought to be no.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, I don't want to transgress the proprieties by too much interruption, and if your Honors think I do, please shut me up, but I would like to pose one question just to clarify this if you will let me.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Proskauer: It comes from one of my associates, and it is so poignant. Sandburg's Lincoln—there are four volumes of them. Each one is separately copyrighted. If you buy them all together you pay $12 for them. If you buy them separately you pay $16. Now is that illegal? Is it illegal to say, "I have got some books and I want to break the set. I will sell them all conditioned on the other, each one separately copyrighted, for a certain price. If you want to break up the set and buy them separately you have got to pay more."

Judge Bright: That is hardly parallel. Your copyrights run to different pictures. They are not really in one book. They are separate stories, every one of them.

Mr. Proskauer: It is parallel, I would say, your Honor, because he says we have a detriment from the copyright law.

His argument is that having a copyright I can't do with my property what I would be entitled to do if I didn't have a copyright.

Mr. Wright: That is right.

Mr. Proskauer: That is what his argument comes down to.

Mr. Wright: No question about that.

Judge Bright: That is the way I understand it. I understand him to say that you can license your copyright on any feature, but you can't sell it upon condition that he buy some other feature or that he pay a price for some other feature or that he do something for the benefit of the other feature.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Marcus calls my attention to the fact that in the Hartford-Empire case differences in royalty payments on the uses of the patents there involved were used to tie the patents together in that case. That was one of the practices employed there, and the technique used was to make the single use at a higher royalty than if used as part of the combination.

If I may go back a moment to the consent decree, it did some other things that were not mentioned here, that I think should also be understood.

There are, as you know, in effect between the Government and the defendants two other consent decrees, one in Chicago, the other in Los Angeles, both of which I think were entered in 1932 and both of which restrained the defendants from engaging in trade practices of various sorts.

Some of the provisions of both of those decrees were suspended and are suspended pending the continuance of the arbitration procedure in this case.[2]

I mention that because it shows the scope of this proceeding which affects not only the decree immediately before you put these other decrees as well.

[2]There was also a 1930 consent decree in the same litigation as that in which the Los Angeles decree was entered, which was similarly suspended in part. See trial brief App. C, pages 147-149 for details of these proceedings.

At the time the consent decree was entered here, there were two contempt proceedings pending, one in Chicago and one in Los Angeles, under those decrees. The one in Los Angeles had not been set for hearing and was dismissed. The one in Chicago was pending on exceptions to a master's report which had recommended that Paramount and Balaban & Katz should be found guilty of violating the decree and recommended dismissal as to the other distributor defendants. That was disposed of by dismissal of the latter defendants and the entering of nolo pleas by the former defendants, with a payment of $10,000 by them.

At the same time these defendants who are defendants here were also defendants in the three so-called independent circuit suits which were brought in various parts of the country primarily against these combinations of independent exhibitors, but also with these defendants here as co-defendants, and which originally charged not only that the defendant distributors had conspired and combined with the exhibitor groups to impose the restrictions there involved on their competitors, but also charged a conspiracy among the distributors themselves to impose the same restrictions.

Now as a part of the settlement of this suit, we agreed to dismiss from those suits as defendants the consenting defendants to this decree and we also amended those to eliminate the charge of co-conspiracy among the distributors to impose the restraints in question. And that was done so that those suits were left in the position where they would try out a question which we had debated at some length with these defendants as to whether or not any conspiracy among distributors was necessary to constitute a violation of the Act. As the suits were left, they charged no conspiracy between distributors. They charged a conspiracy only between the exhibitor defendants and each of these distributors who were still charged as co-conspirators with the exhibitors but were dismissed as defendants.

Now I would like to outline what from our standpoint we hoped to accomplish during this three-year trial period.

In the first place, one thing we hoped to do which we did do was to get one of these circuit cases litigated through the Supreme Court to get the answer to some of these undecided legal questions. We did that in the Crescent case and we think that if you want to see what the Supreme Court thinks the Interstate Circuit doctrine was, you will find it stated in the Crescent case by the Supreme Court itself[3] rather than in the Westway case or any District Court decision on this question of whether or not you have to have two distributors conspiring together in order to have an unlawful conspiracy under the Sherman Act.

In the Crescent case the Supreme Court held that they did not even have to find for the purpose of establishing liability that Crescent conspired with one distributor; that it was enough that these exhibitor groups combined among themselves to restrain the trade in pictures distributed by these defendants, although the District Court had found expressly that each of the consenting defendants here had separately combined with the exhibitor defendants there for the purpose of restraining the trade of their competitors.

Judge Bright: The Crescent case, is that the Texas case?

Mr. Wright: No, that was the Interstate Circuit case. The Interstate Circuit case directly led to the filing of the Crescent case and these other independent circuit suits which were filed shortly after the decision in the Interstate case came down from the Supreme Court in 1939. At the time of the entry of the consent decree none of those independent circuit cases had been reached for trial.

Now we hoped by the small block limitation as against these defendants not only to make a freer selection of pictures which would make it possible to more sharply differentiate the reward of the good from the bad, and thus stimulate, as we saw it, production and distribution of better pictures, but we hoped with the licensing in small blocks tion ceased at the end of the three-year period as did the limitation on the Government against its litigating the——

Judge Hand: I do not understand this.

Mr. Wright: I beg your pardon.

Judge Hand: I do not understand this thing about 1941-42 that you just mentioned. Where is that?

Mr. Wright: The escape provisions I believe are in Section 23, is it, of the decree? Have you Appendix C of our trial brief? That has the decree printed in full.

Judge Hand: We have got the consent decree here.

Mr. Wright: Well, if you will look at Section 12 you will see the escape provisions which made those sections of the decree which dealt with selling dependent for any extension beyond the 1941-42 season upon the securing of like relief against the non-consenting defendants over here. So that actually there was only a firm commitment as to the one season.

Now, with reference to that provision, or the lapse of those provisions, I would like to say too that it is not true that we did nothing——

Judge Hand: Just a minute. That is a very limited matter, isn't it?

Mr. Wright: I just want to clear the thing up as to what happened.

Judge Hand: I do not know just what you mean, but all right.

Judge Goddard: Section 21 provides for three years.

Mr. Wright: Yes, but the three-year period applied generally to the other provisions of the decree. I simply wanted to point out first that there was this one-year trial period for the method of selling provisions, with a proviso that if we got similar relief against the other defendants, that could be extended. The statement was made we did nothing to get such similar relief; and I want to call Judge Goddard's attention to the fact that we did this: We came in before your Honor and attempted to secure a severance of issues as to those three defendants so that we could present for decision the question of block booking and blind selling independently of the other issues raised in th suit, because we did not see how we could possibly try those other issues separately as to those three defendants. Your Honor will recall that the little three objected to any such severance; and, of course, I think your Honor quite properly ruled that in the absence of consent those issues could not be severed; and there was, therefore, no trial against the little three separately to determine that.

Judge Goddard: The situation is quite simple. That section generally provided for three years, in general terms, and then in Section 12 said in effect that the consenting defendants conformed to the rule of five pictures in a block, but if you did not get the other defendants to agree to it they were only bound to that for a year; isn't that it in substance?

Mr. Wright: That is correct. And we did not get it. I merely wanted to point out that an effort was made to separately adjudicate that block booking, blind selling issue at that time or within the time, which was unsuccessful.

Judge Hand: So far as this decree is concerned they can go on with block booking now?

Mr. Wright: There is nothing to prevent them from using any method of selling they desire, and has not been since the 1941-42 season.

Judge Goddard: They have been at liberty for upwards of two years—it is more than two years—to sell in block booking, but they have not done it; isn't that right?

Mr. Wright: That is quite correct.

Mr. Proskauer: We have said here that we do not want to take any advantage from the escape clause.

Mr. Wright: The evidence I think is clear that the block booking—the difference has been one of degree. It has been confined to small blocks. That is, they have chosen to sell their pictures in groups of five, or an occasional group, I believe, of eight or ten rather than in season groups which were previously used by them and which are still used by Columbia and United Artists.

Mr. Raftery: You mean Universal.

Mr. Wright: Columbia and Universal, quite right.

Judge Hand: You object to those blocks of five arrangement?

Mr. Wright: Yes, we do.

Judge Hand: You just want them to sell picture by picture?

Mr. Wright: We do not think you have to make a separate contract for every picture, but we do feel that the law has quite definitely now reached the stage where it is illegal to condition the sale of one copyright upon another, and that is essentially what happens in this business when the method of sale is such as to tie these groups of copyrights together in the one highly restrictive licensing agreement. That we think clearly under present decisions is absolutely contrary to the purposes of the Copyright Law as well as the Sherman Act, because on its face it tends to prevent the Copyright Law from serving its purpose of differentiating the rewards of the various copyrights in accordance with such merit as they may have.

Now, I concede that as far as exhibitors are concerned, many of them, or perhaps most of them, want the security that comes from having as many pictures as they can tied up with a maximum privilege of elimination. That is the ideal position as far as the exhibitor is concerned. On the other hand, they do want freedom of selection. Now, there is nothing particularly new about this doctrine or its application. As counsel for Columbia pointed out in its brief, there is in effect a consent decree today with respect to Ascap, the organization which deals in music copyrights, which provides that if the user wishes to buy any music copyright singly, he may do so. On the other hand, if he wishes to make a group purchase, he may do that. But the license of one may not be conditioned upon the license of another by the copyright owner.

Now, I am not going to take——

Judge Hand: You say you have got that in a consent decree as to Ascap?

Mr. Wright: Yes. Of course, that does not adjudicate anything either; but I say that the state of the court decisions is such that that same conclusion, I think, is impelled as to the illegality of this copyright tie-in in this business.

Now, there were further——

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, to put it clearly, the exhibitor to have an option to take whatever trade-shown pictures he wants.

Mr. Wright: That is right. If he wants to buy one, he should be able to buy one without having the terms of the one conditioned upon the terms of another.

Mr. Proskauer: And if another exhibitor wants to buy two or three, we have no right to say to him we prefer you over the man who wants to buy one?

Mr. Wright: That is right.

Mr. Proskauer: That speaks for itself.

Judge Bright: Did you mean your last answer, Mr. Wright? Did you mean your last answer as broad as you made it?

Mr. Wright: Perhaps I did not listen carefully enough.

Judge Bright: In other words, if one of these distributors goes to an exhibitor and asks how much he would like to buy, and he says he only wants one, do you mean to say he cannot go across the street and pick out an exhibitor who is willing to take three or more?

Mr. Wright: If the other exhibitor has complete freedom of choice.

Judge Bright: Well, he has the right of selection.

Mr. Wright: He has a right of selection among exhibitors, of course, if both exhibitors have equal rights of selection as to his pictures.

Judge Bright: The distributor can sell to whichever one he chooses.

Mr. Wright: It is not just a question of—— Judge Bright: Can a distributor sell to whichever one it chooses under those circumstances?

Mr. Wright: Yes. I had understood him to mean, can he go across the street and find somebody that he can force more pictures on, and by using a forcing technique sell that exhibitor as against the first one.

Judge Goddard: Suppose you give us a clear answer on it, Mr. Wright. It seems to me you answered two ways to Judge Proskauer. Is it your position that if a distributor can get a customer to take five or three or four pictures instead of one, that he is not at liberty to deal with that person but he must sell to a man who would only take one?

Mr. Wright: He is at liberty to deal with anyone he pleases. The question is, what method he uses to get any particular customer to take three, four, five or fifty. That is, if he conditions the terms for the one upon terms for the others in dealing with the man who buys five, we say that he is violating the Sherman Act and the purposes of the copyright statute.

Judge Hand: Do you call it conditioning to say, "If you want to buy you must take five"? Do you?

Mr. Wright: Yes, clearly. Clearly.

Judge Bright: It is not a violation to say to him "You can buy as many as you wish"?

Mr. Wright: That is right. He can say, "You can have one, and the terms for that one are going to be the same, whether you buy one or five." The way the conditioning is handled in the trade is that he is told. "Yes, you can have one, but if you want just one it will cost you considerably more than if you bought that as a part of a group of five."

Judge Bright: Is that a violation?

Mr. Wright: I think it is, yes. That is in substance what happens.

Judge Bright: That, it would seem to me, would prohibit any merchant from selling to a big buyer on better terms than he does to a small buyer.

Mr. Wright: Well, as to what other merchants may do, I think that is another matter. I think the law is also clear that a copyright owner in dealing with copyrights does not have the same freedom of contract that somebody who deals in uncopyrighted material would have. I think the Court has clearly taken the position——

Judge Bright: Well, can a copyright owner sell for any price that he sees fit?

Mr. Wright: I beg your pardon?

Judge Bright: Can a copyright owner sell or license for any compensation that he sees fit?

Mr. Wright: That is right.

Judge Bright: Then why can't he sell to a small buyer on sharper terms than he would to a larger?

Mr. Wright: Well, it is not a question of sharpness of terms, as I see it.

Judge Bright: Well, for greater compensation, I will put it that way. Why can't he sell to one who buys or licenses one film for a greater compensation than he could sell a license to one who buys 20 films?

Mr. Wright: Well, I think that is a little different proposition than the one I asserted. I am not saying that—of course, he does not have to have uniform terms for a single picture as among all exhibitors. I simply say that in dealing with a particular exhibitor he cannot condition the terms on which he makes one copyright available to that exhibitor upon the terms on which other copyrights are to be made available to that exhibitor.

Judge Bright: Well, in the absence of any conditioning he can sell on any terms he sees fit, or license on any terms he sees fit; or am I stating it a little too strong?

Mr. Wright: I think you are. Then we run into the extent to which he can impose restrictions. If you are talking merely about ——

Judge Bright: Price.

Mr. Wright: — rental terms, price, that is correct.

Now, I wanted to point out in so far as this arbitration system is concerned, that was set up on a three-year basis and has been continued since that time by an annual extension of the terms of the Appeal Board at least by stipulation between the Government and the defendants. And as far as we are concerned, we have no desire to scrap the system as your Honor suggested the other day until such time as it can be replaced with one which is effective; and for that purpose, even after the expiration of the three-year period we have consented to its continuance in its existing form. But in so far as the decree is concerned, at the expiration of the three-year period it is expressly stated that the whole matter is wide open for modification of any kind on petition of any party; and, of course, that is what we are here for now, to determine what kind of a decree is necessary to enforce the act with reference to all of these trade practice matters as well as to determine the fundamental legality or illegality of these defendants' structures.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Wright, I understand the term of the Appeals Board expires shortly. Are you fearful about it being extended another year or pending the result of this litigation?

Mr. Wright: My feeling is that we should extend it for six months with the understanding that the extension is without prejudice to any action that the Court may take in this proceeding. I assume there will be some sort of decision here within that time and that is why I think an extension of more than six months would not be desirable.

Judge Goddard: Is that agreeable to all counsel?

Mr. Caskey: We do not think the Government's consent is necessary. We think it is quite shortsighted to make it only six months, but we are not going to press the point. If that is the desirable interim relief, why, we are willing to have it six months. That brings us to the 1st of August.

Judge Bright: Without prejudice to either side.

Mr. Wright: That is right.

Mr. Caskey: Obviously, without prejudice.

Judge Bright: And subject to whatever decree is entered in this litigation.

Mr. Caskey: I personally think that it would be much better to make it a one-year term, subject to the further order of the Court.

Mr. Frohlich: Of course, your Honors, the three non-consenting defendants take no position whatever.

Mr. Caskey: We invite you in.

Judge Bright: We did not look in your direction at all.

Mr. Proskauer: Why not make an order continuing it subject to the further order of the Court, just that? I don't think you have to have any term in it.

Judge Goddard: Is that satisfactory, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Provided it is without prejudice, I think that is all right.

Judge Bright: I think that is fair enough.

Mr. Proskauer: You cannot prejudice us and we do not want to prejudice you.

Mr. Wright: Not much.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Caskey, will you see that an order is presented to that effect?

Mr. Caskey: An indefinite extension subject to the further order of the Court?

Judge Goddard: As stated.

Judge Hand: All right, Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: This decree, as I say, imposed this three-year limitation on the defendants with respect to engaging in a general program of theatre expansion, and that, of course, also expired, and there has been no renewal there.

There was an interlocutory proceeding under that when Fox and Paramount bought additional theatres during the period of the decree in what we thought were fairly substantial numbers. We brought a proceeding asserting a violation of this Section 11, which was heard upon stipulated facts there. Of course, there was no dispute as to the number of theatres they had acquired and where they had been acquired and the fact, that in the course of those acquisitions certain independent competition had been eliminated by the acquisitions.

Judge Hand: I do not exactly get your position about these five and one pictures. You say that, as I understand it, you say that it is all right to license five provided you do not insist upon it? You give the licensee an option to do something else?

that it would actually result in some loosening of what seemed to us to be a fairly rigid pattern of distribution which we attributed in part to season block selling and to the use of long term franchises.

We observed the operation of the system and were disappointed in that expectation as appears from the evidence here as to what happened with respect to distribution of these defendants' pictures in the principal cities from the period beginning with 1936-1937, the last season before the suit was filed, then 1938-1939, the last before the entry of the decree, 1941-1942, the season when the blocks of five had to be used, and 1943-1944, the last season prior to the commencement of this proceeding when they were still being used voluntarily.

Those exhibits which are in the form of admissions of fact by each of the defendants involved, I think speak for themselves.[4] They show that with the exception of RKO, which during that season 1941-1942 did license a substantial number of new first-run accounts there that it had not licensed before, there were very few changes of any kind and virtually none as between affiliated first-run operators and the RKO distribution pattern shifted back in 1943-1944 much to what it had been before.

Now another thing that we hoped this system would accomplish was a general loosening of the clearance structure by means of these arbitration proceedings, that the established rigidity which it had could be in part broken down by having these exhibitors come in and file proceedings which would result in either a reduction in the period of clearance or total elimination of it.

Very early in the operation of the system we found that while we had been careful to couch those awards in negative terms, that is, we did not provide that anybody could come in and arbitrate for the right to have clearance over somebody else, the effect of an award fixing a maximum clearance which a consenting distributor could impose against a complainant's theatre, was to encourage the imposition of a similar clearance by other distributors. We found that in certain cases, such as that involving the Bailey Theatre, which we offered in evidence here, referred to in our brief at page 109, an exhibitor might show that, if treated fairly, he would have been given a prior run over another theatre, but by virtue of circuit or distributor affiliation, the affiliated theatre was being given a prior run over his theatr with substantial clearance against him.

Now the Board found that the distributor's practice of licensing the Kensington, the affiliated theatre, on a run—I believe it was seven days ahead of Bailey—was unreasonable, and entered an award which cut this clearance to oneday. But in view of the fact that what the arbitrator and the board in substance found was really not that he had merely been discriminated against as to clearance but that actually he should, if the distributors were licensing on a fair basis, be playing ahead of the Kensington or with it, instead of behind it in response to any clearance, that award had in itself a very unfavorable aspect. Although the limitations which the board said prevented it from granting the full relief to which the exhibitor might be equitably entitled were provisions in the decree for which the Government was responsible, this did not change the fact that the result was an inequitable one.

Now that alone would not have been so disturbing had it not been for the fact that we could see the tendency of these awards to fix a pattern or status which other distributors would follow—that is, you saw what happened here with respect to Columbia, which was not then even licensing this other affiliated theatre. Bailey was being licensed clear of the Kensington theatre by Columbia. But when that award came down, then Columbia immediately introduced a discrimination in its license agreement that had not even been there before, a provision to the effect that if the affiliated circuit bought Columbia pictures for the Kensington, the Bailey would have to play one day behind it just as it did on the other distributors pictures.

Now I am not going to go into the Appeal Board decisions or awards in detail. We offered you those which we thought were sufficient to show the inadequacy of the system to give the relief that the Sherman Act requires.[5]

Another adverse aspect of the situation, I think you can see from a mere reading of the award in the Overton, Texas, case.[6] That is where a theatre affiliated with Jefferson Amusement Co. which is 50 per cent owned by Paramount operated the only theatre in the town. There were two of them. One burned down. They took their time about rebuilding. The citizens of the town decided they wanted to have their own theatre there and they built, as the arbitrator found, a very nice theatre for the town. Then the Jefferson Amusement Company proceeded to remodel a store, opened what is called a store show, and the new theatre found that it could not buy pictures from these consenting defendants except on a second run because the Jefferson Company absorbed all their first-run product between the two theatres it had, and these people were then permitted to buy a second run of the pictures, playing them 30 days behind Jefferson, and Jefferson further made the situation a little more acute for the local owners of the new theatre by cutting the first-run admission price of one of these theatres to exactly the same price as the independent was charging, so that they had the characteristic situation where the independent takes his most severe beating with the affiliated theatre playing the pictures at exactly the same admission price with substantial protection in the form of clearance over him.

Now, he arbitrated and got an award to the effect that the clearance was unreasonable, and it was cut from 60 days to 14 days. But in our view that kind of a secondary position really does not satisfy the requirements of the Sherman Act as to what relief the independent would be entitled to have on the basis of the facts that appeared there.

Judge Bright: Why doesn't it?

Mr. Wright: Well, if the Court please, the mere fact that somebody else in the town happens to be there first does not in our view mean that when a new theatre comes in it should not have an opportunity to bargain for pictures free from restrictions imposed in favor of the existing theatre. That is exactly the difference between the position of these defendants as theatre operators in a small town of that character and the position that you or I might occupy if we were operating the only theatres in the town. I agree that the mere fact of sole possession of physical facilities in any location does not mean a monopoly. It is only when you couple it with the power to exclude others from the business or the right to restrict their activities.

Judge Hand: What is the restriction here you are talking about?

Mr. Wright: The film licensing control which Jefferson Amusement had in that case by virtue of its affiliation with Paramount.

Judge Hand: You mean that it had some provisions as to second showings? That it should not have any? That it should have just its trade run provision? Is this going back to your argument now, or your main position, I mean?

Mr. Wright: The facts that occurred there merely illustrate to us the inadequacy of any scheme of relief which simply results in changes of status within an established clearance system, and does not actually give an opportunity for a full and free competition between theatres in licensing films.

Judge Hand: Well, you really do not want them to have any freedom of contract.

Mr. Wright: We want them to have complete freedom of contract.

Judge Hand: Well, I know. You say so. Here was another contract that somebody had with a customer first, and you do not like that.

Mr. Wright: Well, the contracts are, of course, repeated. This was under selling in small groups. The clearance, of course, while nominally renegotiated with each group actually continues in effect, but there was no existing contractual arrangement which would have prevented these defendants from dealing with this new exhibitor on a competitive basis had they chosen to do so; but they chose to protect the affiliated account against that competition.

Judge Hand: Well, that it is. That is what I say. You object to any tendency to stick to their customer. That is really it, isn't it?

Mr. Wright: Sticking to customers is one thing.

Judge Hand: Well, what more?

Mr. Wright: Licensing customers restrictively is something else.

Judge Hand: What was the restriction there? Too long clearance?

Mr. Wright: The fact that if the theatre had gotten the kind of a deal that it would normally be entitled to, it probably would have licensed ahead of this little store show that Jefferson opened in order to use up the product; and yet the limitations of the decree were such that the Arbitrator could do no more than mitigate the existing clearance situation and cut down the time interval, leaving the independent in the position of playing the following run at the same admission price as the affiliated first-run, which is ordinary competitive murder.

Now, I want to say something about one provision of the decree which did what we hoped it would do, and that was Section 6, which provided the so-called some run provision. What gave rise to that was this: Of course, the most extreme form of clearance restriction is where the distributor says to a competitor, "I am not going to license you pictures at all. I already have a first-run account in this town. I think the town is so small, or the situation is such that if you exhibit my pictures at all you are going to injure the first-run situation. So I won't sell you."

Well, in order to take care of that situation, Section 6 was inserted in the decree which provided that anybody was entitled to some run of pictures from these defendants at terms to be fixed by the distributor, with the only proviso that the terms should not be calculated to defeat the purpose of the section; and if the distributor could show that the effect of licensing the additional run would diminish his over-all revenue from the area, he could refuse to license. In all of the cases that were brought, I know of no instance where that showing was made.

That provision did open up areas where runs had been refused before and did create, we felt, a new competition that had not been there before.

The difficulty that arose there was the limitation of the award. The award was that if the arbitrator or board found that distributor had been refused a run contrary to the section, then the distributor was simply ordered to make him another offer, and then if the offer was unreasonable in any of its terms, the exhibitor could then go back and arbitrate again. Well, after you have two awards and a couple of Appeal Board decisions, the thing is liable to become endless, and, in particular situations, you reach the point where you might have to have somebody actually arbitrate rental terms before you could get a fair solution. But for the most part we feel that that section worked and was effective in prohibiting that extreme form of discrimination, where the distributor does not impose merely unreasonable clearance terms, but simply says, "You cannot buy on any terms."

I have pointed out the manner in which the consenting defendants were dismissed from these proceedings. We tried the Crescent case with all the other three defendants in, and two were dismissed by the Court, one was held.

In trying the latter cases it was apparent to us that the more appropriate forum for relief against these defendants as to their distribution practices as such was really here where it could operate on a general basis rather than in those proceedings, and they were accordingly also dismissed out of those suits, that is, the Griffith and the Schine cases. That was on our motion.

I want to state further that at the conclusion of the three-year period we, of course, again made an effort to see what could be done by way of modifications which would relieve ourselves and the Court of the burden of this litigation, and we filed formally in August 1944, a proposal to modify the consent decree, which set forth the provisions we thought it would have to have in order to make it effective. That was done when we had exhausted all possibilities of agreement. After we filed the petition here, we offered the defendants the opportunity to litigate the relief question, if they so desired, without any adjudication of law violations, if they were willing to assume law violations for the purpose of hearing the relief questions, because, as we viewed the matter, there could not be further substantial relief without either admission of violations or adjudication of them. That offer was declined by them and it then became necessary to set the matter down for hearing.

We again went in on a preliminary motion as to clearance relief before Judge Goddard, and that resulted in further efforts, which were unsuccessful, to compose differences and work out some kind of decree which would make what we were doing here unnecessary.

Now, the reasons——

Judge Hand: Of course, we don't know—I don't know whether we possibly should know—what these negotiations were about. I really don't understand them. I suppose they were about some kind of modification of the decree.

Mr. Wright: Well, the fundamental stumbling block in our negotiations was that the defendants insisted on further postponement of litigation of the fundamental question of legality of their structure as a condition of modification, and we had reached the point where we felt that question had to be decided.

I simply want to point out that one of the reasons we are here, of course, is the fact that the only supporters of this decree or this method of regulation, as it now is, at this time, in the light of the five years experience, is the defendants themselves. There is no one who has been satisfied by, its operation in other elements of the industry, and the Government itself is satisfied, on the basis of experience, that it simply does not perform its job of enforcing the Sherman Act. Under those conditions, we, of course, have no choice but to proceed to get these matters adjudicated which are the subject of a widespread and, we think, legitimate complaint.

In that connection I might say that the general character of these complaints, in so far as small exhibitors are concerned, is largely that in this kind of restrictive system, their bargaining power is such, by virtue of their size, that in any event, under any scheme of regulation, so long as its fundamental administration is in the hands of the theatre-owning defendants, they come out on the short end, either in film rental terms, or in one manner or another. They have no protection, of course, against inroads in such territories as they may be operating. The theatre-owning distributors are, in effect, looking down their throats as competitors because of their right to audit the receipts of their businesses as a result of licensing them films on percentage terms. None of these exhibitors regards these arbitration rights as compensation for the absence of a right to do business in a free market, and we are not in a position to tell them that they do provide such compensation.

As far as your independent producer is concerned, it is perfectly true that there are many more independent producers now than there were before. We think the decree has resulted in improving the opportunities for independent producers to have their product exhibited, but the fact remains that they find themselves selling in a market which is controlled by their competitors, and they complain about that control.

Judge Bright: Aren't all markets controlled by competitors?

Mr. Wright: Not by the kind of concerted action that is involved in this case. That, of course, is fundamentally what this case presents.

Judge Bright: What do you mean by "concerted action involved in this case"?

Mr. Wright: Well, the market here that you are dealing with is admittedly a protected market. That is what every one of these defendants says is the fundamental purpose they had in gathering together these aggregations of theatre circuits which they have brought under common control, and they make no bones about the fact that as far as theatres affiliated with them, regardless of degree of affiliation, those theatres constitute a market as to which they have priority for their films.

That kind of market protection is the product of concerted action. It isn't, in our view, the kind of market protection which is possible under the Sherman Act. These people who complain about it, assuming that they may be wholly wrong in thinking that they might be able to do better in a market in which there is free competition than one which is protected by the existence of these various combinations, still have the right under the Sherman Law, as we understand it, to do business in a market which is free from protection of this character, achieved by the means that have been shown here.

Judge Bright: I still wonder if you mean by "concerted action" the effort on the part of each of these distributors to buy theatres for the exhibition of their product? Is that what you mean by "concerted action" and "protected market"?

Mr. Wright: That is the primary means of protection, the collection of these theatre circuits under their control.[7]

[7] A brief history of the acquisition of stock interests in theatre circuits by each producer-exhibitor is found in their answers to 1939 Interrogatory No. 58. These are contained in Ex. 45 for Fox, Ex. 48 for Loew's, Ex. 85 for Paramount, Ex. 91, 98, 101 and 107 for RKO and Ex. 116 for Warners. Stock affiliation is only one method of assuring such protection as shown by Ex. 474, a 10 year franchise expressly restricting playing time available to other distributors in Paramount Theatre at Los Angeles, which is operated by Partmar Corp., a corporation in which neither Paramount nor any other defendant owns stock.

A secondary means of protection is the establishment of a pattern of theatre ownership, which amounts to a virtual territorial distribution among them, so that each of them does exercise in many areas a 100 per cent control, in others a very high degree of control, as exhibitors, over the fate of any film. Now, the combination, the concerted action, of course, does not stop with the aggregation of these theatre circuits into a market for the films of the particular distributor affiliated with them or with the mere territorial division.

Judge Hand: Your theory is that if they find a place where there isn't so much competition by powerful interests, they ought to go there, or, rather, that they ought not to go there, they ought to go to the place where there is the most active competition? They cannot go to this other place either because they have a monopoly or because they would be in a position where the competition would not be as powerful.

Mr. Wright: Well, the affiliation and general pattern of theatre control is such that in many areas, or most areas, there is no competition among theatres for their films.

Judge Hand: I know, I understand those particular towns referred to.

Judge Bright: When you say there is no competition, Mr. Wright, do you mean because they own, say, all the first-run theatres in a given city, there is no competition?

Mr. Wright: That is right, as theatre outlets for films. I did not invent the term "closed situations." Mr. Frohlich, counsel for Columbia, referred to those situations as closed first-run situations. In those he said he had no choice of outlet.

Judge Bright: That would be so, say, if there were three first-run theatres in some particular community and each one was owned by a different distributor.

Mr. Wright: Yes—well——

Judge Bright: There would be concerted action or a protected market, as you call it.

Mr. Wright: The market is, because of the manner in which these various combinations behave vis-a-vis each other, actually protected even in the situations where there may be two of them in nominal opposition, that is, in the larger cities there are a large number of situations where two or more actually have theatres, but we say that on this record it is perfectly clear that in those situations there is no competition between them as theatre operators when it comes to licensing films. They are, of course, both selling entertainment to the public and are standing there competing with each other in that sense, but in the sense of representing alternative markets, or customers, for a distributor's films, that situation doesn't even prevail there.

And the reason for that lies in the very character of the practice, the licensing practice, which they carry on with each other—the constant and habitual use of theatres affiliated with one distributor as prior-run outlets for the films of another. That is, you do not have simply a showcase operation in any sense of the word. All of these distributors use outlets of other distributors for showcase purposes in some situations and their own in others; and it is not just a matter of using each other's outlets as a means of making sales to the public. The express agreements that they make with each other do much more than that. They provide express restrictions as to what can be done with their pictures by way of the terms on which they may be made available to others in the same area. They agree to impose substantial clearances; they fix admission prices that each is to charge, and the same distributors, of course, go further and in the contracts of such independents who may be attempting to compete on later runs, include price-fixing provisions which are calculated admittedly, to prevent a diversion of patronage from these prior-run theatres and which serve the express purpose of protecting them from theatre operating competition as such.

Judge Bright: Well, you have stated that there are express agreements among the distributors in a situation of that kind——

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Bright: Do you have any particular reference to some such express agreement?

Mr. Wright: The ordinary license agreement.

Judge Bright: By "express agreement" you mean, then, the license agreements that they submit to other owners?

Mr. Wright: The restrictions are accomplished both ways, both by the license agreement, that the affiliated units——

Judge Bright: What I am trying to do is to make a distinction, if there is any, between an express agreement between two distributors to do certain things with reference to other exhibitors in that area, or to refer to the express agreement as relating to the license agreements which are issued by these several distributors to other exhibitors in that area.

Mr. Wright: I am referring to both the license agreements which the defendants make with the affiliates of each other and with independents—let us take a concrete example. In selling first-run Philadelphia, these defendants make a license agreement, as distributors, with the Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, or whatever Warner subsidiary buys the films for that area, in which there is an express agreement as to the terms on which those films licensed will be made available to other exhibitors in a very wide area. For example, that Warner first-run clearance that is incorporated in those agreements gives first runs in Philadelphia priority over the entire State of Delaware and many counties in Eastern Pennsylvania, a large number in New Jersey. Now, that kind of agreement where you have the use of a common first-run outlet both by Warner for its own pictures and by another distributor for his pictures in which they apply the same clearance and establish the same restrictions, is, in our view, very clearly an effective agreement between those two producer-exhibitor defendants both as distributors and as exhibitors to restrict competitive opportunities of other exhibitors in the area involved in licensing and exhibiting the films of both.

Judge Hand: Of course, you want to upset the whole arrangement, what you call the general pattern; but you do not seem to pay any attention to local situations except as evidence of something larger. I do not know whether you do or not. I do not know whether you make any real complaint about Albany and other places, or whether you merely think they are sort of malignant symptoms.

Mr. Wright: I think that the latter is a more correct description. As to the first-run Philadelphia situation, for example, now, it is perfectly true that for a long period of time Warner had a hundred per cent first-run monopoly position in the town, because Fox leased its first-run theatre there to Warner for operation with a film franchise, and Fox was the only other producer-exhibitor who owned a first run theatre there. Now, even when that situation expired and Fox took its theatre back, in our view that situation actually is no more competitive today than it was then from the standpoint of the opportunity of an outsider to enter into that market either as a distributor or as exhibitor; and it is for that reason that we have not tried to center your Honors' attention on these particular pooling agreements which expressly accomplish an elimination of competition which we say is inherent in the nature of the structure of these defendants and their film licensing practice in any event.

Now, those agreements are clearly illegal, per se, and should be enjoined.[8] As Judge Proskauer indicated, he would be delighted to have you do that. That would not upset——

Mr. Proskauer: I would not say delighted.

Mr. Wright: Well, it would not upset the defendants' control of the market in any way, and that is really what is in issue here, market control; not just individually exercised market control but market control where each group supports the other's control by express agreement.

Judge Bright: Each time you refer to express agreements, you do not mean agreement between the defendants themselves but agreements by which they license affiliated theatres on a certain basis?

[8] Shawnee Compressed Co. v. Anderson, 209 U.S. 423; U.S. v. Union Pacific RR Co., 226 U.S. 61.

Mr. Wright Reply on behalf of Government

Mr. Wright: Well, in some cases those are agreements between defendants and in some cases a defendant and a defendant's affiliate are involved. That is, Warner Bros. as a distributor may make an agreement with Loew as an exhibitor, both of whom are defendants in the case. In another case, the agreement might be made with a Loew subsidiary. I do not make any particular distinction between agreements actually executed by a defendant or somebody that a defendant controls or is affiliated with by virtue of operating agreements or stock interest.

Mr. Proskauer: You mean license agreements.

Judge Hand: Well, we will adjourn now until 2.15.

(Recess to 2.15 p.m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, we were discussing before lunch the nature and character of the agreements that these defendants make with each other, and as far as I am concerned, I am going to devote the rest of the time here principally to attempting to make clear to the Court, if I can, the fundamental nature of this business and how it works. As far as the legal analysis goes there isn't anything I can contribute other than to cite the cases to you as they explain themselves. But the understanding of this industry's structure and how it got that way and how it works is really vital to doing anything in this case.

One important fact that I think has escaped the Court's attention—and it is vital to the whole case—is the fact that the whole structure of clearance and admission prices is one that consists of a licensing practice where one is geared to the other—that is, your time intervals are functions of admission price differentials and vice versa; and that that is not accidental and it is not the result of the exercise of individual judgment by distributors, but it is a product of express agreement and uniform adherence to that pattern—knowing adherence—over a substantial period of time.

Judge Hand: Supposing you had no clearance at all, took it out, forbade it, where would that leave you? Everything else the same.

Mr. Wright: If you left the theatre structure as it is, in so far as the ability of the producer-exhibitors to control this market the great danger is that it would do nothing at all. They would continue without the benefit of any express licensing restrictions to give each other exactly the same preferential treatment that they do today.

I merely want to point out that the significance of the licensing agreements and the licensing practice lies largely in the fact that it shows how this got where it is, that clearances and admission prices are not something handed down from above, they are not fixed independently by anybody. They are the product, have been the product, of systematic agreements between the parties involved.

Now these agreements which accomplish this dual purpose of fixing the prices at which these various runs occur and the intervals between them are all ostensibly based upon copyright privileges. You can't possibly justify the kind of price fixing for the purpose of diverting business from one unit to another that goes on in this case without resort to the copyright statute; and the fundamental issue of law that is presented here is a proper interpretation of that Act.

Now just let me give you an example of what would happen if you accepted the defendants' claim that they have got a perfect right as property owners to fix these admission prices for exhibition of their products independently of copyright privileges. They would say, that as the owner of a theatre, as the owner of the property can always license it for a percentage of the gross receipts that it yields; it is done every day in leases. All right, let us assume that up to that point you can do it. Now, does that give the owner of a theatre the right to fix the admission prices that the operator of the theatre, his lessee, may charge because he fixes his rental in terms of a percentage of the gross receipts? And go a little bit further and take two theatre owners who are also engaged in theatre operation. Can one of them lease his theatre to the other as an operator for a percentage of the gross receipts and then fix the minimum admission price at that theatre, while the other theatre owner leases his to the first one as operator for a percentage of the receipts and fixes the admission prices of that theatre? And then, can they go further and in leasing other theatre property to so-called independent theatre operators fix the price which they shall charge for their entertainment, so that the patronage will not be unduly diverted from the other theatres in which they have an interest both as theatre operators and theatre owners?

It does not require any citation of authority to show that that kind of price fixing is illegal per se when you are dealing with prices which are charged or affect any commodity which moves in interstate commerce, as films do. The only way that you can possibly justify this whole restrictive licensing scheme is to get it in under the Copyright Act.[9] And the reason you cannot get it in under the Copyright Act, in any circumstance is because, in any view of the case, these defendants as copyright owners when they are fixing a theatre's minimum admission price, are not fixing the price of the property that they happen to own; they are fixing the price that a theatre operator charges for an entertainment to which they contribute one element in the form of a positive print that he can run through his projection machine for the purpose of throwing on the screen a feature which is a part of the entertainment for which the price is paid.

It is perfectly clear, it seems to us, from any examination of the cases we have cited in our brief that you cannot possibly sustain restrictive licensing of that kind either when done individually—unilaterally, that is, by a distributor; of course it is not done individually when he makes an agreement—or whether it is done as it is here as a part of a general scheme to control a market.

We gave you the statistics which showed the extent of the dominance and the position in the industry of the various units that are involved here, not for the purpose of proving any conspiracy or concerted action in themselves, because they obviously do not do anything of the kind. For that we rely on the actual facts in the record as to what these combinations consist of and the express licensing arrangements they make with each other. That furnishes the concerted action.

Judge Bright: You said on the evidence in the record and the licensing agreements.

Mr. Wright: That is also in; I did not mean to imply that those were not in the record. I was referring to two kinds of evidence of concerted action, one kind—

Judge Bright: You rely on licenses as one evidence of concerted action. What is the other?

Mr. Wright: The other is the actual control through stock ownership and operating agreements. Under the Sherman Act the form that the combination to restrain trade takes is utterly immaterial. You can group your corporations together for a common purpose either by express agreements, a stock pooling arrangement, or simply by pursuing knowingly a common course of action to a common end.

Judge Hand: I do not know what you mean by stock ownership arrangement. Are you referring to the subsidiaries, the companies in which the main defendants have an interest? Because there is no stock ownership arrangement as between one another.

Mr. Wright: Well, that last statement needs to be qualified. There is a stock ownership by these defendants, two or more of them, in certain exhibitor corporations. That is, the Buffalo Theatres, Inc. which operate theatres in Buffalo is 40 per cent owned by Loew and 40 per cent by Paramount.

In addition to those stock ownership arrangements, there are situations such as Atlanta where Loew's move-over house there, the Rhodes, is operated by Lucas & Jenkins, which also operates the Paramount house there; and in the Rhodes Loew's has 50 per cent of the profits.

Judge Hand: Maybe if that is an abuse it should be broken up, I don't know. You are not interested in that apparently at all.

Mr. Wright: We are vitally interested in it, but we are interested in it principally as evidence of the manner in which these people work with each other. We say—

Judge Hand: I know, but nobody is vitally interested in evidence alone. I mean, at least I am interested in some result that it may point to. Now, you say that the only significance of the thing—we won't use the word "interest"—the only significance of the thing, as I understand it, is evidential.

Mr. Wright: That those agreements are in themselves illegal. We assert that. We say further, however, that if you confine your relief in this case to merely prohibiting express agreements of that particular character, or implied agreements of that particular character, you do not change the fundamental restraint of competition in this market which results from the structure of each of these defendants as such and their constant dealing with each other as preferred outlets for each other's film.

Now, as I was pointing out with respect to this element of dominance, that is an important element in Sherman Act cases in considering what should be done or what the economic effects of a particular practice are. We pointed out to you by those statistics the fact that these five producer-exhibitor defendants, if you consider them individually, are the five largest theatre circuits in the country by far. The figures as to the next largest independent circuit show the total rentals that they paid to be, I think, 10 or 15 per cent only of those paid by the RKO circuit, which is the smallest of the so-called Big Five.

Now, as distributors, they are also the five largest units in the industry in terms of the film rental dollars that they take in.

Now, the significance of that dominant position here is not merely that you have these five large units. In any industry you will find four or five leaders, or maybe two or three; but that dominance here is arrived at and maintained by mutual support, by the constant making of agreements with each other which restrict the trade of their competitors. For example, Paramount and Loew, as theatre operators in Atlanta, where they have only, I think, six or seven theatres between them—they are the first-run theatres—take out of that town in excess of 70 per cent of all the film rental that is paid by it, and that film rental is a fair reflection of the total receipts that are paid for the privilege of seeing pictures in Atlanta. Now, they are not able to achieve that degree of success in Atlanta simply by being the owners of fine theatres there. They are not content to rely on such superiority over other theatres in Atlanta, the 40 or 50 others, that the physical quality of their theatres or the ability of their management might give them. They go further, and in licensing their films to those theatres make express agreements which have the admitted effect and purpose of seeing that receipts from the area are channeled into their theatres and not diverted into the other 50 or 60-odd in which they do not have financial interests.

And they do that by agreements which expressly restrict the terms on which these films are to be made available to other exhibitors in Atlanta, and they go further and in their agreements licensing those films to those exhibitors actually fix the minimum admission prices which they can charge.

Judge Hand: Are their theatres better?

Mr. Wright: I don't think there is any evidence that they are. The Rhodes is a very small theatre. As to the move-over houses, we had testimony it only became a move-over house when they got a half interest in the operation, and that is characteristic anywhere. I think I took the witness Rodgers over the Columbia Theatre situation in Washington, D. C. a move-over house, and the witness described it as a small unprepossessing theatre.

The physical quality of the theatre does not determine in any way where its playing position is going to be in any particular area. That is determined by agreement.

Judge Goddard: Isn't that a pretty big statement? The defendants say that the distributor picks out the best theatres. You say it makes no difference.

Mr. Wright: I say the best theatre in any particular situation from the standpoint of revenue capacity is not just a function of size or location. Revenue-producing capacity is a function of the kind of restrictions that you impose to protect the patronage of that theatre just as much as it is of its size or physical capacity.

Loew's for example uses very effectively a small unprepossessing theatre, the Columbia, as what is called a continued first-run, a move-over house. When it gets through playing in their big house they put the picture over in this house and play it at the same admission price. They have got a low operating cost and they can give it additional playing time and they find it profitable to use it that way, and of course it has the first-run protection that the other first run houses have there in Washington in the films they show not being made available for whatever the first-run clearance period in Washington is. I think it is 21 days.

Judge Proskauer: May I ask if Mr. Wright did not concede at page 2451 that Atlanta was not typical of a general situation?

Mr. Wright: The only concession I made was that as to Atlanta the theatre pattern was different from other situations. You don't find the same theatre pattern in Atlanta that you find necessarily in other towns. You may find a different pattern of theatre ownership in every town in the country, but for our purposes that is completely immaterial. What you do find is that where these defendants have theatres—I don't care what kind of a theatre it is, whether it is a big one or a small one—you find them not only using each other's theatres as outlets for their films but you find them pursuing a deliberate conscious licensing practice which gives those theatres a prior playing position in the area where they operate and protects them from diversion of patronage by the price and clearance restrictions that are applied generally in the area both to defendants theatres and to other theatres.

Now the mere fact that the same kind of price fixing goes on in areas where only independent theatres operate or that in many cases they also license independent theatres in the areas where they operate does not for a moment rebut the inescapable fact that their position in the industry in terms of the film rentals they are able to pay as theatre operators and the receipts they are able to take in as theatre operators is a consequence of more than the mere physical ownership of property. It is a consequence of this systematic restrictive licensing practice which is calculated to produce exactly the results it does produce and keep these people on top of the business.

This question of how these agreements are made, that is, who first suggests what an admission price shall be, or whether or not the price is one customarily charged by the theatre, in my opinion are wholly immaterial in determining whether or not you have got a price fixing conspiracy that is illegal. The fact remains that you have a price structure controlled by agreement among competitors. These license agreements of the defendants expressly fix admission price and clearance by the very language of the printed form, which is that one method of penalizing price reductions is a corresponding reduction in clearance.

What was done in the Interstate case is simply a clear example of using your clearance and price restrictions to intensify the discriminatory quality of that control by eliminating price differential based on a difference in playing position. In that case the subsequent-run competitors of Interstate normally charge 15 or 20 cents and they play 7 to 14 days behind the Interstate subsequent-run theatres which charge 25 cents admission. Obviously, one way to be sure that they were less competitive, was to persuade the distributors to move up their minimum price to 25 cents in the independent contracts and keep the existing differential in time—the clearance interval in favor of the affiliated theatres, and that is exactly what was done with the effects that were noted by the Supreme Court.

That is only one way to use these restrictions to get at a competitor.

Another thing that you as an exhibitor can do to your competitor, is to provide in your license contract with a distributor that if your competitor plays at the same admission price you shall have protection over him. In either event you come out the same way.

Now there are express agreements in this record made between defendants in this case which say exactly that, and I pointed to one series of them in our brief (pp. 53-54) made with Warner theatres in certain towns in Wisconsin, where these distributors made an express agreement with Warner which says 30 days clearance over all theatres charging the same admission price as the Warner house, and an additional clearance if there is a differential, and so on down the line.

Now although that agreement I think is clearly illegal in itself on the basis of Judge Proskauer's concession yesterday, we don't make any special point of agreements of that character as a basis alone for relief, because even if you enjoined each of these distributors from making an agreement of that character with Warner in those towns or anywhere else, as long as you permit them to use those Warner outlets there as the first run outlets for their films they can and would without any express agreement give Warner the same kind of a preference by the manner in which they made their prints available.

Now, your Honors have been led to believe, it seems to me, by the discussion of these defendants, that you cannot have such a thing as run, or intervals between runs, or multiple runs unless you have clearance and admission price fixing agreements. That is utter nonsense.

You can go into any area as a distributor and decide to sell just as many runs as you please. In Kansas City, for example, the Fox theatres play simultaneous first-runs in three theatres on some occasions, one small one downtown, a big one in another location, and another smaller one out in a suburban area. Then they go into an exclusive second run and an exclusive third run at Fox theatres. Then they go out to independents. Your pattern varies from town to town. In a place like Baltimore, where there are only affiliated theatres which are first runs, when it gets through with the first runs, it may go into twelve or fifteen houses.

Mr. Caskey: What was that statement?

Mr. Wright: I say, in a city like Baltimore, where you have only—where the only affiliated theatres are first run theatres, I believe, with the exception of one Loew theatre, which plays an exclusive second run on some Loew pictures, 21 days, after first runs the films can go into a large group of independent theatres in Baltimore, all of which may play at approximately the same time or simultaneously. That is what is known as an open booking, or day and date, basis. On some pictures some of these exhibitors may play first, and on other pictures others may play first, but the general playing position of all of them is about the same.

Judge Hand: What does that day and date mean?

Mr. Wright: Generally simultaneous exhibition. That is, of course, you have to have more prints at that stage of release than you do at the earlier stage. You serve, generally speaking, you serve more and more theatres simultaneously as you go down the run sequence. The print limitation, of course, is one that is wholly within the distributor's control. He may make up just as many prints as he thinks he can profitably use. He serves, of course, forty or fifty theatres with each print.

The fact that one theatre pays less than the cost of the print is of no significance whatsoever in determining print use. And in using his prints in a way that he thinks is most profitable, he does not have to make an express agreement with any exhibitor in the area as to when he is going to make prints available to somebody else. All he has to do is to make an agreement with the exhibitors he licenses as to when he is going to make prints available to them. That does not require the use of the kind of restrictions that are employed in this business at the present time, and I think if you will look at the nature of those restrictions, and at their history, you can see that their purpose is not primarily one of an efficient distribution of the distributor's product but it is a matter of restricting and controlling theatre competition in an area.

When it comes to admission price fixing, he can license his films certainly for a percentage of the gross receipts and still do business without insisting that the licensee charge a specific admission price at his theatre. Neither of those gentlemen is presumed to be an idiot. He makes the contract with the exhibitor who normally would be expected to charge a price which will result in the maximum gross return, to his theatre while the film is playing there.

Judge Hand: But I should suppose the thing could be done perfectly well in another way, if they wanted to do it. They could provide that, instead of fixing a minimum price, they could provide some kind of rental, some kind of minimum rental, some kind of a guaranteed thing, which would require them to charge that price without saying so, and it would be perfectly proper, doubtless, to do that.

Mr. Wright: I see no reason why they cannot agree on a flat rental, if they want to, and, of course——

Judge Hand: It could be a flat rental with a sliding scale.

Mr. Wright: Yes, and in making such an agreement they would always, naturally, take into consideration what kind of a theatre they were licensing, and one of the qualities of the theatre you license is the admission price it charges.

Judge Hand: Is this anything more than a form?

Mr. Wright: Well, if the Court please——

Judge Hand: Formality, as to which way you do it?

Mr. Wright: I think it clearly is. The vice of these agreements is that they do place the exhibitor in a position where he has to maintain the price, come what may, and they do not do it with reference to just one picture, and it isn't in relation to the quality of the picture at all.

Judge Hand: He would have to, under my assumption, or else go broke, or else not make the contract, one of the two.

Mr. Wright: No, under your assumption, if your Honor please, you would have a much freer distribution of films than you have today. If a bad picture came along, it might not be played at a standard price. Presumably it might be reduced to a price which would yield greater returns.

Judge Hand: You are coming to something else, I think, and that is the combination of these different pictures. You do not like that. That is another story.

Mr. Wright: They cannot; it is not another story, if your Honor please, because it is all done together. You have got to view the transaction as a whole. You cannot view it as a restrictive licensing practice that might theoretically exist. I think you have to look at what they have done and the way they do it is to tie a group of copyrights together into a single agreement and make these stipulations for the entire group, and even when they use small groups, instead of season groups, they continue the same restrictions from group to group. So that what you have got is a use of the restrictions to fix theatre status and restrain theatre operating competition instead of the primary service of the distributor's interest in film rental as such, which he can serve perfectly well by controlling the use and disposition of his prints and his license terms and terms of percentage or flat rental without regard to agreements of that character.

The significance of the agreement element is that it shows the purpose of this system that has been built up.

Now, the letter that O'Donnell wrote to all the distributors in the Interstate Circuit case, when he said, "I am not going to buy your films and play them at 40 cents in my first-run theatres unless you agree that you won't show them at these other houses at less than 25 cents" is obviously an element of negotiation; a threat not to buy the film except on the terms offered is implicit in any kind of bargaining, whether you have a letter from the exhibitor or whether you do not.

The testimony that was given in this case in which the defendants attempt to explain uniformity of clearance is simply based on the proposition that they say, the exhibitor says this is the kind of clearance he gets from distributor A and he wants it from you, distributor B. Well, what is your alternative? The alternative is, of course, if you do not give it to him he does not buy your film.

Now, I think it is apparent on this record that if you look at the picture as a whole you can see what could not be made apparent in any of these cases where you had nothing but a local system involved, that the very purpose and effect of the system, as such, is a means of restraining theatre-operating competition and wholly outside any purpose of the Copyright Act or any privilege which the Copyright Act grants to anyone.

Now, I do not propose to attempt to analyze for you these copyright and patent decisions. All I want to do is simply call your attention to an additional one which came down the other day, which you can of course read for yourselves; and that is one referred to in Mr. Frohlich's brief called Scott Paper Co. v. Marcalus Mfg., decided November 13. Now, that case is to me a perfect illustration——

Judge Hand: Where is that referred to?

Mr. Wright: I believe it is in Mr. Frohlich's brief. There is no citation for it yet, because it was just decided November 13th.

Mr. Frohlich: It is 90 Lawyers Edition, page 88, on page 25 of the Columbia brief.

Judge Hand: Yes, I see it.

Judge Bright: What was that case? I have read it but I have forgotten. Just what was it?

Mr. Wright: It involved an infringement suit brought by an assignee of a patent. Marcalus had invented or said he had invented a paper-cutting machine which he assigned to his then employer. He then went into business for himself in opposition to the employer and he built a machine which was substantially the same as the one he had gotten the patent on, but which was an exact copy of one on which a patent had expired. When his former employer, the assignee of the patent, sued him for infringement, although he was estopped to attack the validity of the patent, because in assigning it he had represented that he had patented something, he was able to defeat the infringement action by showing that all he did when he made this infringing machine was to copy the prior art.

Now, the application of the ordinary doctrine of equitable estoppel that prevails in any other transaction or dealing with any other property would clearly have prevented him from prevailing with that defense; and yet the Third Circuit Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court let him prevail on the ground that the interest of the public in having free access to an expired patent was so much greater than any considerations of private contract, that he should not be held to have infringed when he merely copied this expired patent.

Now, that provoked a very sharp dissent by Mr. Justice Frankfurter, which merely points up the extreme lengths to which the Court has gone in insisting on interpreting the patent and copyright statutes with emphasis on their public purposes, just as interpreting the Sherman Act it subordinates claims of private injury to the public interest in maintaining business competition. The theory on which it seems to me it is proceeding in copyright and patent cases is that when you secure the benefits of a public grant of that kind, the possibilities for abuse are such that you are held to a higher standard or different standard of performance in dealing with it than somebody who might just be selling cheese.

Judge Bright: How far can they go under this Copyright Act, do you think? They can sell their product, surely.

Mr. Wright: Well, the outright sale presents no problem——

Judge Bright: They can license their product.

Mr. Wright: The problem here arises in connection with licensing restrictions. I think it is perfectly clear that in so far as you are licensing not a mere performing right but are renting a print, that you certainly cannot go beyond simply specifying how much money or the kind of flat rental or percentage terms that the fellow who uses it is going to pay you for the use. I do not think you can attach to his use restrictions of any kind which tend to prevent the use by others of the copyrighted product, prevent the user of a copyrighted product from using such other material of any kind, copyrighted or uncopyrighted, patented or unpatented in conjunction with it, or from operating his theatre business in any way that he pleases. That is, the mere fact that it makes it more profitable to you as a copyright owner to control an exhibitors activities as a theatre operator does not at all give you the right to incorporate in the provisions of a license under which you grant him the privilege of using the print provisions such as those you have here, which fix the price he charges for his whole entertainment and fix the terms on which you can make a print available to his competitor.

Judge Bright: Well, suppose A licenses the use of that feature to, we will say, a first-run house for 30 per cent of the gross——

Mr. Wright: Yes?

Judge Bright: —now, he can go to another chap who wants the feature also but says, "I can't pay 30 per cent of the gross," can you license that same feature to the second man for $250——

Mr. Wright: Why not?

Judge Bright: —on condition that he play it 30 days after the first fellow?

Mr. Wright: If you phrase the condition that way I think it would be invalid; but, clearly, I think when you license it to him you can specify the period when he is to have it in his theatre and control his use in that way. That is, you tell him, "I am renting this to you for a certain specific date."

Judge Hand: That is just another instance of things you say can be done; but things which equal the same thing equal each other generally.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I insist that they do not equal the same thing. You do have here an agreement restricting and exhibitor's conduct as an exhibitor and restricting the distributor's behavior as a distributor. The copyright owner, if he is to operate within his grant, may not make an agreement as to what he is going to do with A in terms of what he is going to do with B.

Judge Bright: Under your statement, to take a broad aspect of it, this copyright owner could not license his feature to the man who pays the high dollar and protect him against some kind of competition?

Mr. Wright: He certainly could not protect him from competition by making an agreement with him to do that. The only protection that he could ever get—well, he might get incidental protection from competition if the distributor decided independently that for his purposes he was going to license to A, and he was going to wait 10 days or 30 days before he licensed B, so he does not grant B a license to play until a specific period of time.

Now, conceivably you could justify the fact that A might be thereby protected from competition with B by saying that such an incidental restraint would be none of the copyright owner's business, but he is not in a position to say that when he makes an express agreement with A that he is going to give him this protection in dealing with B; and particularly in a system where he does not do this would be far more defensible if he were dealing with an individual copyrighted picture. But where it is done in groups of pictures from month to month, year to year, and you get a resulting structure of price and clearance restrictions which are geared to theatre status rather than to copyright ownership, it seems to me you are just way beyond any kind of price fixing that the copyright could conceivably be thought to sanction; and when you are in that price fixing field of an interstate commodity, you are clearly involved in a per se violation of the Sherman Act.

Judge Bright: Haven't you under the guise of the Sherman Act repealed the Copyright Law?

Mr. Wright: The Supreme Court—we have not done anything.

Judge Bright: I should have said, are you trying to repeal the Copyright Law by the Sherman Act?

Mr. Wright: We are not trying to do anything, if the Court please. This descent that Mr. Davis described down this path that leads to the place with a Latin name whose spelling is doubtful, is not being led by us.

The Court, it seems to us, is clearly leading the way down that slope and is only half way there now. The district and circuit courts are following along behind, and tied to them by opinions are defendants such as these with their feet firmly set against the descent. All we are doing is to render such assistance as we can.

Judge Bright: By pushing them.

Mr. Wright: Well, we are primarily here, it seems to me, simply to aid the courts, although occasionally of course we may nudge them with the fork.

Mr. Proskauer: The ferryman over the River Styx.

Judge Bright: It seemed to me, Mr. Wright, that one statement does not seem to jibe with the other. You say in selling to A for a percentage of the take you could not impose any restriction or impose any condition that you would not sell to B for use in less than 30 days after completion of performance of A, but you could in selling to B sell at a lower price and provide that he shall not use until 30 days after your former purchaser had finished with it.

Mr. Wright: I think you would be a little safer if you expressed your period of time in terms of the actual days on which he would play rather than to try to tie it to his competitor's play date.[10]

Judge Bright: I see.

Mr. Wright: Now, let's take a look at what this system is alleged to do for the public.

Now the clearance and run structure that you have got here does not assure anybody of seeing a picture at a particularly low admission price at any time. The general purpose and effect of the structure, as you have seen, is to try to keep the price level up all the way. The only departures that the distributors encourage is where they have something that they think is really good and where they market if individually they try to move up the price structure for that single picture. And I think I took the witness Thalhimer over the admission price in Richmond and there wasn't a single house below the price of 25 cents. And there isn't anything about the system that encourages anybody to get in at the bottom and render a low-priced service. The tendency is the other way. The low-price subsequent-run theatre gets no protection whatever. That was shown very clearly by the correspondence between Mochrie and this fellow in Macon who was following the first-run theatre on the RKO pictures and having to do it at the same admission prices.

Now the system as such is not only illegal right on its face as a system, but the kind of abuses in it that are shown in this record are in my view in themselves enough to con-

[10]The copyright owner would still not be saved from a Sherman Act violation if it appeared from other evidence that his purpose in fixing B's play date was to restrict competition between A and B as theatre operators. If the license to B said on its face that B could not play until 30 days after A, fixed B's minimum admission price, conditioned B's run upon its maintenance, and applied those restrictions uniformly to a group of copyrights of widely varying quality, these terms would appear to be conclusive evidence that this was his purpose. See the pre-suit (1936-37) and post-decree (1943-44) printed forms of license collected in trial brief App. B. (Ex. 275-290) and compare with pre-integration (1917-1918) printed form (Ex. P-5 and P-6).

demn it. It has been used persistently for the purpose of excluding your smaller independent operators from the more profitable phases of the business.

Judge Hand: You talk about excluding. They do an enormous amount of the business and get an enormous amount of the pictures. You think there is some unfair preferential treatment and that all these people are excluded. I don't understand.

Mr. Wright: There is no exclusion in any absolute sense, in any sense of keeping people out of the business, but there doesn't have to be. Under the Sherman Act if you use illegal means to accomplish a partial exclusion that is enough. And that is all you have here. You can go into the theatre business. There is no way of keeping these people from building theatres or buying theatres and operating them. The exclusion comes in the position that you get——

Judge Hand: They are increasing all the time and they are getting pictures all the time, and they are operating them all the time.

Mr. Wright: That is right. There have been 5,000 more theatres in the last ten years, and of course there are many more independent pictures, and you can open a theatre and you can show something on the screen. But that has not affected the control and dominance of this market that these defendants have enjoyed. I think the figures in evidence clearly show that it has not.

Now why is it with an increase of that kind in the number of theatre operations, Columbia finds itself today with fewer independents to sell in those first-run situations in towns over 25,000 than it sold ten years ago? Why it is that with this increased independent distribution and production in terms of numbers they have not penetrated this market at all in terms of making any inroads on the proportion of the dollar volume that your producer-exhibitors are able to get out of it?

Judge Hand: Undoubtedly they can't combine to keep these people out. The fact that they get most of the business—and there are piles of the business that they do not get—is conclusive of nothing.

Mr. Wright: I don't suggest that it is. I merely say that——

Judge Hand: You might just as well say about the chain stores and the country stores. Up where I was born they didn't have any chain stores at one time and now they have just about one country store left in the place. Why was it in that case? Because the chain stores came in and gave a great deal better service.

Now all these things are capable of that interpretation and you have got to prove the wrong and not that these are big fellows and they do a tremendous business and somebody else does not do as large a business, though he would like to do it.

Mr. Wright: If all we had, if the Court please, were those statistics as to size, there wouldn't be any case. Nobody says there would be, but I am pointing out that the dominance they share is a consequence of the mutual support that these people give each other by express agreement and by adherence to these established patterns of non-competitive theatre operation throughout the country, and your patterns of division of films among the affiliated operators, where they do operate in the same territory. Take the example here in New York; your RKO Circuit and your Loew Circuit. They operate in the same areas. They have all the prior runs after the first run here. Nobody gets pictures until after Loew and until after RKO. Well, there still isn't any competition for pictures between them because the Loew Circuit plays what is known as the Loew split of the major product, that is, pictures of Loew, Paramount, Columbia, and half of Universal; and the RKO Circuit plays the remainder of the eight defendant companies. And then they go to the independents. That is not just the result of size of those circuits. It is the result of express agreements made by these distributors with those circuits which gives them a blanket pric y for their theatres over the competing independent theatres.

You take the Paramount-Loew situation here in New York City. Of course, the reason that we again emphasize this theatre structure as well as the license agreements is that even without any written agreement whatsoever as to film licensing, as far as the record shows, Loew theatres played those Paramount pictures for three seasons while they were arguing over the proper division of the profits from their exhibition, and then they made a written agreement in 1945 which finally formalized the terms under which Paramount had been serving those pictures and Loew had been exhibiting them.

Now it is simply an illustration that you cannot possibly make Loew and Paramount competitors by any kind of mere licensing practice restraints that you want to impose on them as long as you permit them each to operate both as distributors and theatre operators and deal with each other as exclusive prior run outlets for the films of each other.

The question has been asked here, well, what kind of system are you going to substitute for this very tightly arranged one that now exists? I do not think that there is any obligation either on the part of the Government or this Court to devise for these defendants some other system than the one they have now got which would still leave them in control of the industry and give it a kind of competitive facade through appropriate regulatory provisions.

Judge Hand: That is technically so but it is not very helpful, and I do not think it is a good approach to the problem. You have a great big business here that is very complicated, very hard even to understand, and to say that it is nobody's obligation, who is proposing to break up the entire system, to suggest a good alternative, seems to me absurd.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, nobody is trying to break up an entire system. All that I am suggesting to you is that the function of this Department and of the Court is not to devise systems of operation for any business. I do not know enough about it to devise a system which would meet all or any substantial part of the objections to the present system those that have been made to me from various elements involved in it. I do not think, with all due respect, that the Court in the time that it has to study the industry, is in a position to evolve for the defendants any new system, as such, to replace an existing system. We find that we get into trouble and we lead the courts into trouble when we try to do that.

In the Hartford-Empire case, there was a clear case for dissolution of the Hartford-Empire Company. Many independents intervened and ask to have worked out some kind of decree where the Hartford-Empire Company could be maintained intact and limit the relief to licensing restrictions. So there was worked out a complex plan of royalty free licensing and it went to the Supreme Court as a substitute for dissolution. Then when it got up there, a minority of the court rewrote the decree and came out with an equally, if not more complex, plan of licensing—compulsory licensing on reasonable royalties—which is now in effect, but, interestingly enough, as to the trade association involved, ordered dissolution virtually on its own motion. And had the Government and the court confined themselves in the first instance in that case to the traditional procedure of dealing with the problem, breaking up the combination found to be illegal, instead of attempting to impose an elaborate series of restraints that let it continue to function and still do equity in the industry, we would never have gotten into the snarl that we did.

I say, of course, that we are bound to exercise the utmost diligence and effort to work out all of these problems with the minimum of fundamental readjustment in any basic economic structures that we can, but we do have the job of law enforcement. That is all we do. We are a law enforcing agency. The only instrument we have to work with is the Sherman Act as the courts interpret it, and when we come into court in a case of this kind, the relief that we most necessarily advocate has to be confined to traditional judicial methods of dealing with these problems.

When we are dealing with consent arrangements we can, to some extent, go further, but I simply want to call the Court's attention to one phase of this whole arbitration system which I think that it ought to know about. A suit was brought in St. Louis, to which we were not made a party, charging us with conspiracy with these defendants to restrain trade by consenting to the institution of this system. The same plaintiff sought to intervene in this suit. His intervention was denied. We opposed, the defendants opposed it, and he attempted to appeal.

Judge Hand: Were you a party, and the Attorney General?

Mr. Wright: We were not made parties to his St. Louis suit. He attempted to litigate the matter here. We opposed. He tried to appeal the decision.

Judge Hand: There was a defect of parties, I should think. There is no end to what the fancy of litigants may go.

Judge Bright: Didn't we get a brief here within the last two or three weeks from that party?

Mr. Wright: I would not be surprised.

Judge Bright: It was entitled in some case out in the Midwest.

Mr. Wright: St. Louis is where it is pending. The only thing I wanted to point out about that suit is this: I am naturally satisfied that there is nothing in his complaint. He is in no position to raise, in my view, the questions he seeks to review, the constitutional——

Judge Hand: He will claim you are arguing against him without a hearing.

Mr. Wright: I simply want to point out that if he had the right to raise them, the constitutional questions he is talking about are serious, that is, I have extreme doubt myself as to whether on any permanent or quasi-permanent basis this Court, quite apart from consent, even on the basis of findings of fact and conclusions of law, could establish or maintain any kind of an arbitration system which arbitrated competitive status in an industry, you are then going, it seems to me, beyond the purposes of law enforcement and getting into a scheme of regulation which has to have legislative support, if it is going to be valid at all. And that was one reason why we proposed in our modification to use the system as a means of arbitrating complaints of discrimination, complaints that runs had been refused, or restrictive terms imposed for the purpose of protecting some exhibitor from competition rather than for some purpose permitted by the Copyright Law and the Sherman Act and penalizing such conduct with an award of money damages, which would serve as a substitute for contempt punishment.

Within that kind of system I think arbitration or some such mechanics as that provided by arbitration may be used, but I have the gravest doubt as to whether in a proceeding of this character you can give any permanent status whatsoever to proceedings which have the effect of fixing business status in an industry.

Your Honors have heard both sides of the industry here in a sense. One of them says that they have got to have a right to practice a certain kind of restrictive licensing procedure in order to balance the advantage that these other defendants have per se from the ownership of theatres without restrictive licensing or any other forms of business practice. Now I do not think that it is the function of the Court or the Department to attempt to work out, in the first instance, some kind of scheme which is going to sanction illegal restraints over in this part of the industry so that the illegal restraints in this half won't let them get out of line. I don't understand that that is the function of any of us that are involved in this in this proceeding, and I call that to the Court's attention for what it may be worth.

Before I closed, I wanted to make clear to your Honor that I too had read the book you recommended, the Age of Jackson. I had my wife buy it for me for Christmas. And as far as I could make out, the only monopoly generally thought to be illegal there in Jackson's time was the Bank of the United States, and, as the book pointed out, in attempting to secure a recharter of that monopoly from Congress, Nicholas Biddle testified before a Congressional committee that although his bank could have destroyed any of the State banks, he had not seen fit to injure any of them.

That argument did not impress the people of Jackson's day as the basis for permitting that much concentration of economic power in private hands, and I do not think that it has any more validity today than it had then—in fact, considerably less since the passage of the Sherman Act.

Judge Bright: The statute of limitations has run against that anyway.

Mr. Wright: But the moral that I gathered Mr. Schlesinger—was trying to make by his book—was that the Jacksonians had won the battle for discussion of the political future of this country in democratic terms. That is, from then on, of course people did not advocate antidemocratic systems as against a democratic one, but now, of course, and ever since, both sides, if they have any question, always use the same terminology. We always talk in terms of democracy. Whether that helps any, I don't know.

Mr. Proskauer: No, it does not.

Mr. Wright: But it is pretty clear, I think, from the arguments made in this case that you can use Sherman Act terminology and come out with any kind of result that you want to come out with as long as you do not look at the particular consequences of the situation you are dealing with too closely.

What this Court and any other court actually does, when confronted with a question of this kind, as distinguished from what it says about it, really depends, it seems to me, on how the Court feels about that much-abused term "free enterprise", and that isn't anything I can influence by any argument I make or that they can influence by what they say, but I just want to quote what Harry Warner had to say with reference to this foreign market thing, which was referred to in Judge Proskauer's argument. What he says is this, at page 1560,

"In the past our foreign business has been exceedingly profitable, but with the cessation of the war our foreign markets are being severely restricted. Country after country is adopting quota systems and state monopolies in order to promote their own motion picture production. During the war England, our chief foreign market, was unable to produce its own pictures. Hence we were able to derive a very substantial revenue from England. At one time during the war England threatened to (and did for a time) block our funds derived from exhibition in England and was only dissuaded from so doing by being convinced that the American companies could not continue to supply England with quality productions if their English revenue were shut off altogether. With the cessation of hostilities, England is launching on production on a large scale and the dangers of a quota system or restrictive measures in some other form are pressing. The more our foreign revenues decrease, the more vital it will be for us to have the profits from our theatre operations in order to maintain our present standard of production."

I hesitate to single out Mr. Warner because, from my own view, I think his company has probably made more pictures worth making than all the rest of the industry put together, but he has, very obviously——

Mr. Caskey: That is the crowning proof.

Mr. Wright: (Continuing) —a blind spot in the way he feels about this business of free enterprise. He wants to sell American pictures in a foreign market free from restrictions, where they may be sold on their merits. He does not want that kind of market, though, at home. It is absolutely necessary for him, he says, to protect his market here by the kind of elaborate organization and the practices which you have before you.

Now, I just want to point out in behalf of the English, although I am no Anglophile, that they too, of course, have considered this problem at length. As Mr. Raftery stated, in 1926 they passed the Films Act which prohibits blind selling and block booking in England; and very recently in 1944 during the coalition government the Board of Trade appointed a committee to make a study of the film monopoly problem in England. That is one of the characteristics of this motion picture monopoly problem, that it is not confined to this country; it is universal. We correspond with people in Australia and New Zealand about it. But after discussing the similar tendencies to monopoly in England, the growth of integration there, and all the arguments that had been advanced by the proponents of integration in England, and that it was a necessary trade weapon in the foreign markets as a wedge in getting more English pictures shown over here, I think it is interesting to note what this English committee had to say about those arguments.

Mr. Caskey: What exhibit is that?

Mr. Wright: This is not an exhibit. It is a report dated 1944 entitled "Tendencies to monopoly in the cinematograph film industry".[11]

At page 31, in paragraph 111, after discussing these tendencies, the committee said:

> "Apart, however, from these general considerations of our national trade policy, there are a number of other objections to this country endeavoring to force its way into the overseas market for films by the exercise of monopoly power, which to our minds are conclusive. The first is that the primary needs of the British screen would be thereby sacrificed. Granted our assumption that a healthy, independent British industry is indispensable, then our view given without hesitation is that if monopoly is the price of securing an export trade in films, that price is too high."

[11]Report is dated July 3, 1944 and is by a three man investigating committee appointed by the Cinematograph Film Council, a division of the Board of Trade, pursuant to a request from the President of the Board dated December 6, 1943.

Now, that is from a country that has no Sherman Anti-trust Law, and has not, presumably, the anti-monopoly tradition that we have over here.

Now, of course, the whole problem of the relation of this industry to our foreign relations is one which our State Department rather than Mr. Harry Warner or the Court or the Justice Department are primarily concerned with. But I might also call your attention to the fact that the recent report of Dr. McMahon on the Postwar International Information Program of the United States which deals with motion pictures, at page 79[12] does show at least a sympathetic understanding of what we are trying to do in this case, and contrary to the view the defendants would have you take, I do not think this proceeding is regarded as any subversive threat to our foreign policy or foreign trade as it affects the motion picture industry.

Now, of course, this whole question of what is to be done in a situation like this is an extremely difficult one. The burden of the Court, which has to do something, is much greater than the burden of those of us who simply assemble and present the problem. And, of course, as to doing something, it was suggested by some cynics when the Hartford Empire case and the Crescent case came down at the same time —"Well, if you are dealing with a medium size organization, you can take it apart and give effective relief, but the minute you get up to something big, the courts shy away from it."

Now, I do not think the fact, as Mr. Davis points out, that Loew has got 60 million dollars worth of theatres means that any standard of law can possibly be applied here other than that which was applied to, let us say, Meyer Schine who has 6 million dollars worth of theatres. I do not think for an instant that it is possible to make any differentiation of that kind. If we were wrong in the Schine and Crescent cases, we are wrong here, but it seems to me the Supreme Court has said that we were right in those cases.

[12] As published by the Department of State.

Now, the natural tendency, of course, of any court in dealing with a problem of this kind is to shy away from the complexities that result in dealing in any drastic or effective way with large business organizations; but the fact remains that where the law requires it, it has to be done.

Now, I for my part think the Court has been extremely patient in listening to me and receiving this whole mass of evidence here. I am only sorry that I personally and our staff have not been able to do a better and a more effective job than we have of lightening that tremendous burden of actually comprehending the material and making it possible to assimilate it. If we can do anything more by way of a reply brief; I would be glad to file one. I know, however, that if we file 10 pages more and say anything or say nothing, that would immediately result in 50 or 100 pages of saying the same thing, let us say, ten times as eloquently.

Now, I do not want to impose that kind of a burden on the Court unless it be helpful, but I am completely at the Court's disposal in making any kind of an analysis or survey of the evidence or reply that the Court thinks would help.

Judge Hand: No. I have an idea that these arguments that you have been giving us will be very helpful, and I should think they ought to take the place of reply briefs and further briefs by them, and so on. I propose to go over these oral arguments which will be submitted to us very carefully.

Mr. Wright: It is entirely agreeable to us.

Judge Hand: We have been going through the main briefs, and, of course, they have the details more. But these oral arguments have been very interesting and very good, and they present the large outlines, the theories that have to be dealt with and met. Don't you think that is so?

Mr. Wright: Yes, I agree, your Honor. I have no desire to file except as it might help on some particular point. Now, we have prepared these digests of the license contracts and pooling agreements we put in evidence with indices, not as a substitute for the agreements themselves but merely as a convenient means of collecting them and giving you a quick idea of what is in them so you can determine which ones you want to examine and which ones you want to ignore.

If there is anything we can do beyond that we want to do it.

Judge Hand: Some people who attended the Nurenburg trial told me—one of the American staff—that Justice Lawrence would not receive any exhibits unless they pointed out exactly what they were relying on. He thought it shortened the process very much. But this case has been very well kept down, I think by everybody.

Mr. Proskauer: Before we adjourn, your Honor, may I as a recipient of the Croix de Guerre from the Government make a very brief observation which will not be in the nature of a reply or sur-rebuttal. I would like to close in the atmosphere of the era of good feeling rather than in the age of Jackson which was somewhat controversial; but I am not able to forget that in our progress we started with Biddle the president of the Bank of the United States and ended with Biddle who instituted this litigation. That seems to me to be not without significance.

While I don't want to make a reply, I do want to make an observation of not more than half a minute on something that really was new here and that was the observation about the power of this Court in regard to the——

Judge Hand: Will you begin that again?

Mr. Proskauer: I was going to say about the arbitration system, that is imposed on nobody. Nobody is compelled to arbitrate excepting ourselves. We are compelled by our consent. It is a privilege to the exhibitor and not an obligation on him. And therefore I think Mr. Wright's self-reproach that having been a party to instituting an un-constitutional court is wholly beside the point, and I think he should absolve himself from all doubts or fears on that point. Other than that I would like to ask the Court to oppose this new argument by the arguments made in anticipation yesterday and I ask the privilege of joining with Mr. Wright in an expression of deep appreciation to the Court for the patience and attention which has characterized this trial. You have made our burden very much lighter and I hope we have assisted in making yours lighter, too.

Judge Hand: We think everybody has. I won't say anything about the era of good feeling and about the age of Jackson, but I think that Mr. Wright will probably argue that there was necessarily a splendid period in between in which all the banks of the United States failed.

Mr. Proskauer: I hope it is not mal apropos to call your Honor's attention to the fact that there has been an intermediate period in which most of these moving picture companies failed.

Judge Hand: Of course your client will probably be so much pleased by being put at the head of the list by the Government and being so fully advertised that they will be willing to abide any sort of suffering.

Mr. Proskauer: No, sir. We fear the Greeks bearing gifts.

Mr. Seymour: May I just add that I am sure that all counsel have never been so graciously expedited as they have been by this Court. We felt the lash but it never left a sting or a bruise.

Judge Hand: I don't know whether you have been expedited or pushed. It is all right with us—isn't that so?

Well, thank you very much.

Judge Hand: Now, we have here various motions listed, and I shall call the calendar that has been made up of these motions:

Application of Lust Theatres.

Mr. Schils: Ready for the plaintiffs, your Honor.

Mr. Caskey: Ready to oppose.

Judge Hand: Application of W. C. Allred.

Mr. Jackson: Ready for the motion to intervene if your Honor please.

(3884)

Judge Hand: American Theatres Association.

Mr. Arnold: Ready for the application to be presented, your Honor.

Judge Hand: Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers.

Mr. Ernst: Ready for the application.

Judge Hand: Application of Vanguard Films.

Mr. Isseks: Ready for the application, your Honor.

Judge Hand: Radio Center, Inc.

Mr. David Sher: Ready for the application.

Judge Hand: Independent Theatre Owner and Operator Members, by Peter F. Blasi.

Mr. Levy: Ready for the application, your Honor.

Judge Hand: Application of Joseph P. Day.

Mr. Kenney: Ready for the application, if your Honor please.

Judge Hand: Application of Conference of Independent Exhibitors' Association for leave to be heard and file briefs.

Mr. Myers: Present and ready, your Honor.

Judge Hand: We will hear this Lust Theatre application.

Mr. Lust: May it please your Honors, we are an illustration in miniature of what this great litigation is about. We, you might say, are the dog at whom the stone has been thrown in this industry. We filed our motion on July 22nd requesting this Court to vacate and set aside and review an arbitration decision of the Appeal Board of the Motion Picture Arbitration tribunals that had been set up by this Court under its decree of November, 1940. We filed that motion for the reason that we had a situation in which a clearance was restrictively relegating us to a very inferior position causing us a loss of around $100,000 a year.

Now if the Court please, I thought you might appreciate an illustration of a visual presentation of what the facts in this situation are.

Judge Hand: We can't see that we have any jurisdiction over any such application.

Mr. Lust: Well, I believe your Honors do for the reason that it is the decree of the Court which was entered under the Court, by the Court, and the Court set up this agency, and I believe if your Honors will examine the authorities that are set out in our brief you will find that it would be contrary to equity for the Court to establish an agency and relinquish control over that agency.

Our position is— I am glad your Honor came to that point because I wanted to discuss it—our position is that under (3886) the holding of the Supreme Court by Mr. Justice Cardozo in 286 U. S., the Supreme Court said that where an equity court retained continuing supervision under the Sherman antitrust act, which is an act that applies on a nationwide basis, that the inherent power lies in the Court to control that supervision, to modify, vacate, or change the decree in any effect, and it certainly stands to reason that it retains the power to control the agency set up by the Court.

Judge Hand: Well, you stipulated here that these should be non-appealable and to decide by the decision. We would have to review everything the court has done. If anybody was aggrieved or claimed to be aggrieved we would have to review everything that we have done for the last five years.

Mr. Lust: I would like to call your Honor's attention to Farragut v. United States, which is cited in 89 U. S., or 22 Wallace. That was a case where Admiral Farragut had been directed by the United States Government to take the City of New Orleans and to force an entrance into the Mississippi River. He succeeded in doing so but he had the assistance of the Army.

Congress passed a law which allowed Admiral Farragut and his officers to claim prize money as a result of that seizure of ships and stores.

A claim of about a million dollars was lodged with the Government subsequently by Admiral Farragut and his (3887) officers, whereupon the Treasury Department intervened in the case and claimed that they were not lawfully entitled to it because they had had the assistance of the Army.

What I am coming to is this, that they entered into a submission to arbitration, which was more final and binding in its wording than the submission here which comes under a forced, coerced procedure that is laid on us by the Court. We say that this is a judicial process of the Court; that this arbitration association was set up as an arm of the court, similar to a master who, under the Federal Rules, must report back his findings to the Court, similar to a grand jury, where the Court retains control over the grand jury. And we cite in that connection the National Window Glass case, which we set up in our brief, which is a Sherman Act case.

In the Farragut case, the submission read that the arbitration should be final and binding as to all matters of law as well as fact, and that they shall become a decree of the Court. The arbitrators awarded $966,000 and another item of $46,000, whereupon the Government filed exceptions.

Admiral Farragut and his proponents then claimed that the award was final and binding, and the matter went to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. Justice Miller of that Court said that it was final as to matters of fact, but where there were mixed facts and conclusions of law, or where there was a mistake of law, it was not final and could have been reviewed by the lower court as well as by the Supreme Court of the United States.

We point, in our brief that we will submit this morning to any member of arbitration cases where it is said it is the universal and general rule that where there is miscalculation of statistics, as we have by the Appeal Board in our decision; where there is a misquotation of the record, as we have by the Appeal Board in our decision; where there is an assumption solely by the Appeal Board against facts definitely stated by the arbitrator, as we had in the arbitrators' decision; that those are mistakes of error which the Court will review in any arbitration situation.

Generally, your Honors will find, and we point out some of these cases in the brief that we desire to submit, that arbitration is set up by statutory enactment, by legislative enactment. I do not know of any other situation, I haven't been able to find any, any that have gone to the court, where arbitration was established by a court, as an instrumentality or means or enabling function of the court, but in the statutory situations it has been held that the arbitration is compulsory and unconstitutional unless there is a right of review in the court for mistakes of errors committed by the arbitrator. We cite the case of In re Compulsory Arbitration, 9 Colorado, which is not cited in our brief, and the case of St. Louis v. Williams, which is in 49 Arkansas, not cited in our brief.

In this industry itself, if the Court please, arbitration was established by joint action of the parties and was held illegal by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1932 in the Paramount case and the First National case.

There was the same joint action that is admitted of record by the defendants on this motion. The only difference between that situation and our situation here is that they did not have the benefit of a court decree.

Our position is that the Supreme Court has said in Swift & Company v. United States that this is not a contract situation; that a consent decree is not a contract; that a consent decree is a decree of the Court with all the force and binding power of the Court.

Therefore, when we submitted to arbitration, we submitted with the conviction that should there be a clear, arbitrary, capricious action by the Appeal Board, by this body functioning at long distance over and apart from the arbitrator, that we could then come to the Court and have the matter corrected, and I am prepared to point out to your Honors nine or more glaring errors in the opinion of the Appeal Board. All the Court has to do is to take the Appeal Board decision and contrast it with the arbitrator's decision and find that the Appeal Board acted without the benefit of the record.

I would like to call the Court's attention to this, that we have only had one opposition filed here, and that is by the intervenor Bernheimer. By the intervenor I mean the intervenor in the arbitration proceeding, the party who is contesting us. The eminent counsel here has not seen fit to file any opposition here to our motion, although it has been on the docket for three months.

As I understand the rules 8(d) and 12(h), of the Rules of Procedure, all our affirmative averments, including the averment of concerted action between the distributors and Bernheimer, have been admitted technically, and they have waived all the defenses except the defense of jurisdiction which your Honor directed my attention to.

The Bernheimer defendant has filed an opposition in which, first, he challenges the jurisdiction of the Court, but in the third part of that opposition he submits new matters for the inspection of the Court and submits an affidavit in support of it, and we would call the Court's attention to the (3891) fact that by submitting the new matter, he has submitted this matter to the jurisdiction of the Court.

Of course, we country lawyers like to observe our rules, and I want to call the Court's attention to, again, Rules 8(d) and 12(h), and the fact that no opposition has been filed to our motion.

Judge Hand: Now we will hear the opposition.

Mr. Lust: May I submit this brief?

Mr. Caskey: On behalf of the distributors who were respondents in the arbitration proceedings, we submit that the District Court has no supervisory powers over the Appeal Board as to any particular decision. Whether or not on an application of a party the District Court could exercise, by modification of the decree or construction of the decree, some jurisdiction over the appeal board or its practices is a question that need not be debated—certainly no jurisdiction of the District Court to review a specific determination of the Appeal Board. If any review is to be entered into, we think the Court will become convinced that the Appeal Board correctly decided the principals involved and applied the facts to those principles.

The Court: Application of Allred.

Mr. Jackson: If your Honors please, this is a motion by a number of independent exhibitors to intervene. There is a (3892) similar motion made in behalf of the American Theatres Association, in which Mr. Paul Williams and Judge Arnold appear as counsel. Their motion was made before the Allred motion, and I feel that in good faith, and in accordance with our talks with Mr. Williams and Judge Arnold, that they are entitled to proceed, if that is agreeable to the Court. I am not trying to avoid; I am quite prepared to go ahead.

Judge Hand: That is all right.

Mr. Jackson: We did have that understanding.

Judge Hand: That is quite all right.

American Theatres.

Mr. Williams: If the Court please, we have divided our time equally. Judge Arnold will present the over-all legal problems that are involved in the application to intervene, while I will attempt to give you a picture of the practical operation of the exhibition branch of the business, which we think is very material here. I have had the opportunity to observe it at first hand during the past two years, and we think it is very important that certain observations be made.

Being a member of this Bar for many years, I introduce Judge Arnold to you.

Mr. Arnold: May it please the Court, these intervenors, who are represented by myself and Mr. Williams, are two (3893) associations, the American Theatres Association, consisting of about 6,000 theatres of all kinds, and they are represented here excepting those theatres which are affiliated with the major defendants, and the Southern California Theatres Association, which is a large association in California, representing every type of theatre; and in addition to these associations because of, what we think, is the unlikely chance that it might be held that the Associations were not bound by the decree, we have a list of individual intervenors, representing chains, small independent theatres, theatres of every type and every situation, who intervened as individuals, and we claim intervention as of right under Section 24(a) for the sole purpose of objecting to the Court's suggested plan of distribution of pictures by competitive bidding.

I will argue that briefly. We think that we meet all the requirements of Section 24(a). In the first place, there is no question but that our intervention is timely. It was filed almost immediately after we had notice of the proposed decree. In the second place, there is no question but that the interest of these independent theatres is directly and immediately affected by the proposal of mandatory competitive bidding. It will control precisely and in detail the business of these intervenors. It will not only destroy existing arrangements which are perfectly legal and on which those exhibitors now depend, but it also will set up a new affirmative regulation of the industry operating for the indefinite future.

So there is no question about our interest. Nor do I think there is any question but that we will be bound by this affirmative provision of the decree.

And, finally, I think there is no doubt—and indeed the Government admits—that we do not have adequate representation in this situation. The Government itself has proposed, our at least gone along, with the court's proposal on competitive bidding to the extent that it compels independent exhibitors, the Government's proposal, would compel independent exhibitors to bid against each other in situations where the major defendants have no interest whatever.

Now, we take no position on the proposal of the Government that the defendants shall not exhibit each others pictures in their own theatres. Our organization has not been consulted on that point, and so we can take no position on that. But whether or not that be an appropriate provision in the decree to compel us to competitively bid in the situations in which the defendants are not interested, has no relevance to the purposes of this suit.

The Government objects to our intervention on the sole ground, that I can see in their letter to your Honor, on the ground that in an antitrust suit everybody is more or less bound by the decree, and we are not bound by this decree any more than in any other antitrust suit where people are incidentally affected by the dissolution of a combination or by the changing of the contractual relationships between parties which the court has declared to be illegal. But we insist that this is not a situation of a party being incidentally affected by the dissolution of an illegal arrangement between two other parties.

This is a situation where the court has gone outside the condemnation of illegal arrangements and has attempted to introduce competition in this industry by telling these innocent parties that they must compete, and as a practical effect, since the distribution outlets, since the channels of distribution are controlled by the defendants, we will be completely and entirely bound by a decree which directs how the pictures shall be sold. We do not think that Rule 23 means that we be bound in the sense of res adjudicata. Of course that would not make any sense because if we were bound as res adjudicata we would have to be parties. This rule, and I think the cases in our brief which I won't bother the court to recite—this rule means bound in a practical and substantial way, so that legal rights which we have in the absence of a decree are prejudiced, damaged, or taken away. And there is no question but what those legal rights are taken away by this decree.

Assume that some other court would in a future proceeding brought by one of these independents, declare that the suggested plan of the court was erroneous. Nevertheless, the defendants in this suit would, we think, as to past action, have the defense that they were compelled to sell pictures by competitive bidding by the order of this court.

And furthermore, if this case goes to the Supreme Court, the effect of stare decisis would be even more conclusive on us than res adjudicata.

The Government suggests that our rights can be taken care of adequately by a brief amicus curiae, and perhaps since the court is kind enough to hear us, that might be true in this court but it is not true in the Supreme Court. We need intervention as of right because one of the most important privileges or rights which we want in this litigation is the right to appeal, and the right to appear in the Supreme Court. It is very doubtful if we could appear in the Supreme Court if the case were appealed amicus curiae without the consent of all the parties, and there is the equal possibility that the Government and the major defendants might get together and might not appeal. So that we are not protected by the suggestion of appearance amicus curiae.

Now if the court please, I want to respectfully suggest what I consider are the errors which this court unwittingly made in suggesting competitive bidding.

I think there are three fundamental considerations which this court overlooked. The first is that the regulation which the court proposes is for the benefit of the wrongdoers, and its principal impact is on the innocent parties who now seek to intervene. Why did the court suggest competitive bidding in this case?

It held that these great integrated producer combinations were lawful or at least could operate without dissolution; that they were lawful organizations, that they did not sufficiently dominate the market so that they should be dissolved. And yet it is clear that the court was concerned about the nature operation of those organizations. It was concerned about getting competition in the industry, and so it adopted the plausible device of reaching out and saying "These innocent independents shall furnish that competition and they shall do it for the benefit of two classes of people—first the majors, so that the court would not be compelled to make a more drastic remedy against them, and second for the benefit of the public perhaps because the court suggests that the defendants may be able for some time to operate the theatres better than newcomers.

Well, the burden, we submit, cannot legally be put on us to furnish that competition. We are not guilty parties. We are not subject to the order of this court. And while the order in form directs only the defendants, in substance it imposes a system of distribution of pictures on us for the benefit of the wrongdoers.

Now the second error or misconception which is behind this suggestion of competitive bidding is the notion that competitive bidding can create competition. I think that is a fundamental error in the economics of this decree, and you cannot, of course, in an antitrust decree, overlook the economics of the industry.

I would assert that competitive bidding may be the result of a competitive market, that is, as in wheat or corn, or cotton, or where there are parties of approximately equal bargaining power and where the supply can increase to meet the demand, and where no group dominates that supply. Then, of course, competitive bidding is the normal and natural competitive result. But where groups are not of equal bargaining power, where the supply is restricted or tightly controlled, competitive bidding does not create a competitive market. Instead it intensifies the monopoly domination of that market.

And the third error, it seems to me, is in the court's conception that there is a product here for which competitive bids can be made. We suggest, and we think our brief conclusively establishes, that there is no standard commodity here; that pictures are not being sold. It is only rights which are of various characters and there is no possible standard except the business judgment of the defendants.

And if the Court attempts to classify all these various rights so that there will emerge a set of standards or units, we think that the Court will have entered into an unworkable administrative code which will not and cannot work.

And we finally suggest that the result of these errors is to impose the system which will destroy the independents for whose protection this suit was originally brought.

The exhibitors do not want this system. They do not want to go in on a scarce market and cut each other's throats for these pictures which are not enough to go around. There were 437 of these pictures in 1937, 300 in 1945, about ten years later, and there will be less in 1946. Indeed, I think one of the best illustrations of what is going to happen is found in the Film Daily of September 11th where Darryl Zanuck, vice-president and production chief of Twentieth-
Fox, predicted that 40 per cent of the scheduled pictures would be shelved if the proposal of the Court were entered into.

Now, he apparently likes that. He seems to think that there will be fewer medium grade pictures, but I do not think that this Court is in the position to deprive this vast number of theatres of their product on some fanciful theory that the public will get better entertainment. In my view, of course, the more pictures that are produced the better chance of getting a good one. And, furthermore, the commercial success of a picture does not necessarily determine its artistic quality.

Now, what does this mean? It means that the exhibitors will have to pay more and more for a scarer and scarer product. Now, why should that handicap be put upon them? Suppose, for instance, that the great tin can manufacturers bought up Del Monte and Van Camps and discriminated against and drove out of business the smaller canners; and suppose the Government brings a suit charging that illegal discrimination because of the domination of the can manufacturers and their combination with the major brands; and suppose the Court finds the discrimination to exist, and then goes further and says, "We will cure that discrimination. We will put in a provision that the little canner and Del Monte and Van Camp competitively bid for these scarce tin cans."

(3901)

Well, of course, it might stop the discrimination, but it would do so by driving the little people out of business. Where a product is scarce and tightly controlled, competitive bidding will create monopoly instead of competition. In those situations if codes are to be introduced, or legislation, the only way to preserve competitive bidding is by rationing.

And I further suggest, if the Court please, that this competitive bidding, if it were to apply at all, is on the wrong end. I suggest that it cannot be applied by court decree, but let us take a regulatory situation: You may recall that some time ago great finance houses like Kuhn-Loeb and Morgan-Stanley were charged with dominating the market for railroad bonds and fixing commissions which were unjustified. The Securities and Exchange Commission under jurisdiction of an Act inquired into that situation and decreed that these bonds should be sold by competitive bidding. But that did not mean that the railroads went to Kuhn-Loeb and Morgan-Stanley and made their competitive bids as to which would pay the highest price for that financial service. No, it was the finance houses which submitted the bids to the railroads. If competitive bidding were possible in this situation,—and I do not think it did, because, as I have said before, we have no standard commodity—but if it were possible in this situation, the only appropriate exercise of it would be to have the major defendants bid for the playing time of the independent exhibitors. The Court has used this device of competitive bidding in a way that I have never seen it used before. That is, they are supposed to be protecting the independents, but, actually, competitive bidding protects only the recipient of the bid.

Now, I am aware that probably in the Court's mind was the thought that competitive bidding could be used, would be a normal channel to get somebody into the market who was excluded from the market by favoritism; that through that device you had a yardstick which would prevent the exercise of favoritism by these defendants in the future.

Well, in the first place, you do not have any such yardstick, as I will show a little later, but instead of benefiting these independents, it compels them to go into this cutthroat race and pay more and more and more for their pictures.

They must have a constant supply. It turns the independent exhibition into a complete gamble. And not only is the bargaining power of the majors greater because of their financial resources; it is also greater because they do not have to pay for their own pictures.

So they go in with some 20 to 30 per cent of the supply already; and the answer and the only answer to competitive bidding of a weak group for a scarce product is more and more consolidations, chains, and the elimination of the weaker persons. And it was that kind of concentration which was the original evil out of which this final suit resulted.

Now, as I say, in the first place I do not think the Court has the power to put on an innocent party the burden of changing their practices in order that a large combination shall have the temptation to discriminate; and, second, if the Court had that regulatory power, it would be an uneconomic regulation, because competitive bidding is not in itself a competitive market; it does not create a competitive market. It may be the result of a competitive market where the bargaining power is equal and the supply is large. It will create monopoly when introduced in a situation of scarcity.

Now, the third misconception which underlies this suggestion is the idea that there is a possible standard other than the business judgment of the recipient of the bids which will be the major producer in this case—that there was a possible standard to determine this commodity, and what is the best bid for this commodity. The Court in its opinion suggests a number of the factors in the sale of motion pictures which makes such a standard impossible. There is clearance; there is the type of theatre; there is the general plans for distribution; there is the question of whether a long run and a low percentage is better than a short run and a higher percentage. There is the question of whether a percentage price is better than a flat price. The Court has its choice of letting this thing drift without formulating an attempted code for these standards, or to formulate a code. And in either event, I suggest that the decree will be a failure, because, in essence, I do not think that anything more than the business judgment of these defendants can determine the best bid.

And, furthermore, experience, I believe, shows that competitive bidding put in operation for the benefit of people who dominated the market results in collusion just as fast as any other form of market exercise of power.

In the Tobacco case I think the tobacco companies thought for a while that they had a perfect protection against the antitrust laws because all the tobacco was bought on competitive bidding.

It was a much easier commodity to standardize than motion pictures. Nevertheless, there were about 120 grades. And it was elaborately regulated. Every basket of tobacco had a ticket on it with the price and the purchaser; and the millions of tickets went to the Department of Agriculture. Yet it was that very system which created the monopoly which the Court found the tobacco companies guilty of in the Tobacco Case.

And what the competitive bidding did in this case was to furnish a smoke screen behind which these coercive practices could continue.

I suggest in this case, since business judgment will inevitably determine the bid, the Court has, by this proposal, in effect said that the defendants may use their judgment as to how to distribute these pictures, and as long as that judgment seems to be based upon their financial returns, all the remedies of the antitrust laws are taken away. These independents today are operating, protected by the threats of prosecution, triple damage suits.

Assume that this industry has not learned enough today so that it will continue the practices condemned by the Court. Make that assumption, and the competitive bidding will protect it, I mean, the competitive bidding scheme, will protect it in the continuation of those practices by taking away all the other rights.

Assume that the industry has learned enough so that it is not going to drive independents out of business in the ways which it did in the past, then we have put in a system where the independents are compelled to drive themselves out by cutting each other's throats.

Well, if the Court please, I think I will turn the rest of the argument over to Mr. Williams. I have given you the general conditions. I expect him to give you specific illustrations which will amplify the point.

Mr. Williams: May it please the Court, I feel under a somewhat acute and searching obligation to bring to this Court the plight into which this litigation has placed the exhibitors of this country, and when I say "exhibitors" I mean the independent exhibitors.

I happen to be the man who was directed by the Attorney General in 1936 to make a thorough investigation of the motion picture industry with recommendations. This litigation was the outgrowth of that investigation.

The original complaint in this action was my work, and I was in charge of this case into the consent decree negotiations up until the point where I thought that by that consent decree a provision relating to the sale of pictures was being imposed upon these exhibitors which had no relationship to the action which we were bringing, did not restrain or impede or stop the illegal practices with which the defendants were charged; but, on the other hand, would place them under a burden which would make their plight even worse than it was before. That was the provision whereby the producers were prevented from selling pictures in blocks of more than five.

Judge Arnold, who was then in charge of the Antitrust Division, was caught in the unfortunate position of having two sets of advisers with different viewpoints. I, having charge of the trial, believed that that position was injuring the very people whom we were seeking to aid. The consent decree section, on the other hand, it seems, had been having conversations looking toward a consent decree and genuinely believed that that was in aid of the litigation. So there was the split. I remember going to Washington on one or two occasions and trying to convince Judge Arnold that nobody in this industry, nobody, no exhibitor——

Judge Hand: I think this is rather absurd to tell us all about your——

Mr. Williams: All right.

Judge Hand: —housekeeping there. It is very complicated and apparently involved deep divisions among yourselves.

Mr. Williams: Anyway, I had one view and they had (3908)
the other, and I could not go along, and that was what I thought was the end of my relationship to the case, but here I am, back again, trying to tell your Honors the difficulties, not only that that provision brought to the exhibitors, but what competitive bidding will do to them.

A great deal of law has been written in this case and in all of the cases about what the defendants, the distributors, may not do. May not I invite the attention of the Court to what exhibitors may legally do in the purchase of pictures?

I agree that the provisions against the tie-in clauses and all of that are right. The rationale of those laws, as I understand them, is to prevent a seller of goods, who has a patent, or a copyright, or an exclusive right to sell something from forcing a buyer to buy something in addition to that which is beyond the copyright or patent.

But, look at it from the other angle: If an exhibitor wants to buy more than one picture, if he desires to buy a season's purchase of pictures, is there anything in the law whereby he should be prevented from doing so?

Now then, under the old system an exhibitor was permitted to buy a season's run of pictures. Under that practice the various distributors in the spring would have a program for the ensuing year. They would present that program at a convention and develop it, and then the exhibitor could buy those pictures in a year's block. The practice in some of them had grown up so that they forced the whole block. But I call your attention to this provision in the consent decree commanding block booking in sales of not more than five. The exhibitors then were up against the practical difficulties of having to buy blocks of five without the possibility of eliminating any pictures, which is an altered form of block booking.

Now out in my association there day after day after day exhibitors have to buy pictures which they cannot use as a result of that provision. Now then, what the exhibitors of the country want is the right to buy an annual sale of pictures with reasonable rights of elimination, and I want to ask this court if there is anything unlawful in such a procedure and if there is nothing unlawful about it should they not, if they are able to persuade the distributors to sell on such a basis, to buy in that way?

But I venture to think that the distributors, having tasted of this new method of selling pictures in groups of five, would decline to do so for the simple reason that it has given them a means of knowing the specific value of each of their pictures, of getting more revenue out of the exhibitors on account of that, and eliminating the chance of mistake in assessing the true value of every picture.

As the court knows, the making of pictures is a fickle thing. No matter how much money or how much effort you put into the making of pictures, nobody can tell what public acceptance any one of them will have. Under the old system, where they bought annually, the kind and character and quality of each picture was designated so that an exhibitor might have a chance of getting in and making money on pictures that were misjudged. Under this decision, the consent decree, and particularly on what this court proposes to place on exhibitors, all of that will be removed.

Now then, as to competitive bidding where the right to buy pictures is alone limited to the highest bidder, I think if that regulation is put into effect it will remove from this industry every element of stability that has yet reached it. There is more than price that goes into the business judgment of who in the long run will make most money for any distributor—the kind and character of the theatre, the honesty and integrity of the exhibitor, past experience and all of that.

Now I don't mind that these customer relations shall be binding forever, because I think you can safely leave it to the business judgment and the desire of the distributors to make money in the long run to go to the theatre that would be entitled to it. But I think to remove all of these other considerations from the buying of pictures is to introduce a chaos into this industry that is greater than any that ever existed before.

Already out there in my country, in California, independent exhibitors have been so concerned with the opinion of this court that those who have been in business for many years are putting their theatres on the market and getting out. They don't think that the future of the industry under such a regulation that this court is proposing to impose on them would warrant them in continuing in the business when there is an inflated value for the sale of theatres out there.

Now then just a few more words and I will have ended. They feel that the placing of this method of sale upon them, that is, a regulation that is beyond the power of the court, that it tends to encroach upon the legislative field, that if any such regulation is to be made of the industry it should be the Congress and not the courts that should do it, and that the true function of the court as stated in the old Standard Oil case is to enjoin that which is illegal. If there is a monopoly they have the power to dissolve it and then let free enterprise and free bargaining run its course.

I believe that within this industry they have the power and the desire and the willingness to correct most of these things if the free sway of enterprise and competition is permitted to them. But for the court to regulate or for the government to regulate it with all of its complexities and all of its difficulties would be to add chaos to what already has become chaos.

Now then I just urge the court to think of that. I know men on both sides—the distributors and all of them. They are men of ability, good will, and I believe that they have it within their power outside of these things that are unlawful, which ought to be stopped, to sit down together and work out something which will be for the good and benefit of all.

The Court (Hand, C. J.): Now Mr. Jackson.

Mr. Jackson: If your Honors please, a great deal of ground has already been covered and I shall try not to duplicate what has been said.

Our motion is in behalf of a number of Southern independent exhibitors to intervene. It is exactly like the preceding motion which has been presented. We too take no position in regard to any of the issues in the case other than this question of auction sales of pictures, picture by picture, theatre by theatre. We are interested in coming into the case for the reasons which have been given and which will be given, to ask your Honor's reconsideration of that feature of the proposed decree and also because your Honors have reserved jurisdiction of the case and questions may come up in the future which would affect independent exhibitors, and then there is of course the question as to whether if there is an appeal we would want to be heard in the Supreme Court on this question.

Our immediate petitioners here, some 20-odd in number, are mostly smaller exhibitors, and, in turn, they are acting in behalf of some 2200 independent exhibitors whose theatres are located in the Southern States. They are unanimous in their opposition to the introduction of auction selling. They feel it will do them irreparable damage; that they will lose their good will, and many of them are likely to be put out of business.

There are one or two technicalities in respect to motions of this kind which I think should be spoken of briefly: in the first place, Rule 24 requires that an application should be timely. On that point, of course, this question of auction selling was never an issue in the case——

Judge Hand: I do not think you need to argue that.

Mr. Jackson: All right, sir.

The next point along that line, as to whether the petitioners are represented—on that, very briefly, the Government is presently opposing intervention, saying our interests would be cared for as just a part of the public; and prior to the trial of the case this question was never litigated, so that the issues are not factually before your Honor on the basis of evidence, and the defendants in the case are entirely indifferent, apparently, so far as I am aware, to whether we intervene or whether we do not intervene, or whether there is auction selling or whether there is no auction selling. So I think it is quite clear that we are not represented.

Now, on the question of being bound by the judgment, I should like to refer just very briefly to one additional fact which has already been discussed, and I won't go into it, but I think that is fully recognized by your Honors in your opinion where you said:

> "As to these non-party interested exhibitors, while our decision will not be res adjudicata as to these not parties to the litigation, the parties are necessarily and properly bound and indeed the decision is a judicial precedent against the others on the question of law involved in those situations we have referred to where they have unreasonably restrained trade or commerce."

So it seems to me that the binding effect of this decree if it incorporates auction selling on those independent exhibitors has been already recognized by the Court and accepted.

On the question of delay, in view of what your Honor (3916) said a moment ago, there is no need to discuss that. We acted promptly after the decision came down, and when as soon as these exhibitors realized the full impact of this holding, this requirement that they buy at auction sale, they gathered together in meetings of their associations, and that took some time. They then retained counsel; counsel had to study an extended record and read a great many briefs, and then when retained properly made the motions which are before your Honors.

There is apparently, so far as I can see, no occasion for delay in connection with taking further testimony. I know of no contradiction to the petition which has been filed, and even if testimony had to be taken on the petition, it could be taken with great expedition and very promptly.

On the question——

Judge Goddard: Have you any testimony you would like to offer?

Mr. Jackson: I beg your pardon?

Judge Goddard: Is there any testimony you would like to offer?

Mr. Jackson: Not unless our petition is controverted. If our petition is controverted factually we would like to offer testimony. Otherwise we rest on our petition and the allegations which it contains.

Now, as to the only other point I shall ask your Honors to hear Mr. Barton, who is far more familiar with the actual operating of this business than I am, and who can be of greater value than I can be to the Court. I think he will supplement the remarks which have already been made by Mr. Arnold and Mr. Williams to some advantage; and the only other point which I have in mind to make at the moment is that it seems to me that the relief other than auction selling which the Court has directed and will direct, is adequate, and it would seem reasonable to suggest that the relief in these other respects should be tried out before this new practice, this intervention, should be put into effect, at least.
(3917)

I introduce Mr. Barton.

Mr. Barton: May it please the Court, inasmuch as auction selling is not an issue in the case and was only briefly and casually referred to in the arguments, I want to present to the Court three points which I ask the Court to consider as though I were making a motion for a new trial on after discovered evidence; and since the petition does not controvert, it will not be necessary in our opinion to take any additional evidence. There is certain corroborating testimony already in the record.

The points are these, that auction selling is impracticable; that if auction selling is decreed, it will work harm, and we say irreparable harm to our clients and to other exhibitors similarly situated, and, last, it will be of no benefit to the public.

Now, the first point, the impracticability of auction selling: As the Court knows, the exhibitors have to form their program in advance. They have to determine whether they are going to have——

Judge Hand: Let me ask you whether you can think of any other system that would give a wider opportunity for pricing these films.

Mr. Barton: Our reply to that, sir, is that if the Court will permit its mandates in respect to the other points to operate, that they will satisfy the demands of the Government; and I should be very glad to take those up one by one and show you how we think they would be effective to satisfy the same matters of which the Government complains. We cannot suggest any other system, except let those take effect, and then let the barter and trade and free competition and such things also take effect, and we believe that will satisfy the situation.

The exhibitors are unanimous in feeling that that is the case. That is the first time I have ever seen them unanimous. The south and the north and the east and the west have gotten together in opposition to auction selling, believing, as

I say, that these facts that I want to present to you had been before the Court at the time it considered auction selling, the impracticability of it, and the damage it will do to the exhibitors, and the failure to help the public—had they been before the Court, the Court would not have made this direction; and we have no other plan to offer except the one I suggest. What the Court otherwise decreed will be adequate for the purpose.

Now, shall I proceed?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Barton: Now, if you are going to have competitive bidding—we have called it auction selling because there are a few references in the record to auction selling—the first question is how many auctions ought there to be, in each city, at the same time, or at different times? How many times a year?. Are the auctions to be held in the spring or fall, or every month, or when? Will all the producers be asked for bids at the same time or at different times? These are practical suggestions that the exhibitors have brought to us. Will bids be made by mail, or will you have a room in which the bidders will get up and say we offer so much for this picture, and he offers so much, and probably knock it down just like you do real estate or personal property?

How are you going to arrive at the minimum price when one man says he wants his picture for varying runs, as they say, we want it for five days, ten days, twelve days; we want it for what we call preferred playing time, that is, holidays; or we want it at this time or that time? Another man says, We want to bid for the picture on varying runs. Things of that sort. In other words, if we understand the decree, the exhibitors say to the producer, "We would like to bid for this picture, submit a bid, and we want to submit the bid to run for certain days, or for so many days"; another man says other times and for so many days. All these varying requests have come to the producers.

How is the producer to determine how many offerings he is going to make at a minimum? Is he going to make one or a dozen? Is he going to try out the first suggestion of an exhibitor, and then a second, and then a third? It just ties itself up until we see no out for it.

Under those circumstances, if there are no bids at the minimum price what is this producer going to do? Is he going to make another offer, after his minimum price is so high and nobody wants it at this price? Is he going to come and say, "I offer it again"?

Then, if the Court please, let us consider the number of bids. Exhibitors now offer 50 to 300 features a year, depending on the number of times they change their programs. They need from 150 to 900 shorts. That means that each exhibitor, depending upon the number of changes in his program, has got to make from 200 to 1200 successful bids, and I say successful. He will have to put in innumerably more bids in order to be assured of from 200 to 1200 successful bids.

By what standard is the producer to determine when bids shall be accepted? Here are a few of the varying things that may enter into a bid. One exhibitor may bid a flat amount, another, a greater or lesser flat amount. There may be all sorts of flat amounts. They may be for varying percentages of gross receipts, 20, 25 up to 40. There may be varying sliding scales in the bid. There may be varying practice and varying guarantees.

What is to be the measuring rod by which a producer can determine which bid he should accept?

By what standards of the sellers, the distributors and the producers, to determine the adequacy of the theatre as to location, size and equipment? Among a few of the other things that will have to enter into his judgment, those would be some of the consideration. All those things are going to delay in awarding bids. A seat not sold is gone forever; a picture not sold, when it is popular and when people know about it, and expect to see it, loses a great deal of its value.

By reason of all these complications that I have suggested to the Court, inevitably there will be delays in awarding pictures, and that means that these pictures are going to lose a great deal of value.

In addition to that, an exhibitor will not be able to arrange his program because he does not know until his bid is awarded what picture he is going to get. He will never know whether he is a successful bidder for a dozen pictures, or whether he hasn't got enough pictures.

Here are five or eight or ten distributors asking for bids. He puts in all of these bids. He won't know whether he gets a dozen awards or one award. He will be in a complete state of confusion as long as this system lasts.

And then out of all this, inevitably, there are going to arise innumerable controversies. The unsuccessful bidder is going to say to the distributor, "You treated me wrong and we want to see your books. I would like to know how you gave Mr. Jones over there a picture when I thought mine was the best bid." There you have a controversy. And even if it goes to arbitration, it is a controversy, and, inevitably, out of the impracticability of this situation, innumerable controversies are going to develop.

In the meantime, what is going to happen to the picture? You may hold up an award of the picture by some court action, or arbitration, or any number of things may happen, not only to the detriment of the exhibitor but to the detriment of the distributor, who wants the picture displayed while the picture is ripe and ready for public introduction.

So much for a number of the things which make, in our opinion, auction selling or competitive bidding impractical. We just don't feel it can be worked out practically.

We have worked with it, we have tried to figure out some way, and we all came to the unanimous conclusion that it cannot be made to work practically. But suppose someone can work out a way to make it work practically, or we think it works practically? Or we think it could be made to work? What is going to be the effect on the exhibitors?

You may say, or somebody may say, that then these points I am going to bring up are somewhat speculative, but they are unanimous judgment of people who have been in the business for years; they have risked their fortunes and they have spent their lives in the business, many of the kind who started off with six runs for a nickel in the little stores which were gradually converted into motion picture houses, and then have gradually developed from that stage into a comfortable and modern theatre. They know what the effect of certain actions will be upon their business from experience. They are men of experience who know that if this is done, this result will follow, and they say, with unanimity, that if auction selling is imposed upon them, these results, among others, will follow.

My friends have already alluded to the fact that it will foster monopolies. It is perfectly obvious that the theatre operator who has the most resources and the best theatre, and usually the two come together, is going to make the highest bid, most successful bid. He is going to get all the good pictures, and, as the Court knows, all pictures are not good. A producer may spend a good deal of money on a picture and think he has a swell production which will have vast popular appeal, and then when he shows it in the theatres he finds it is a flop; or he may spend little money on some picture and it grew to be a great success. If the Court wishes, I could give you names of pictures. But, to get along, ordinary business practice will inevitably result in the best financed operator getting the best pictures, leaving to the less financially strong house the poorer pictures.

Under the present system, by the course of barter and trade and negotiation, the smaller houses do get first run pictures. They may have, over a period of years, a course of dealing with some producer which has been beneficial to the producer and beneficial to the exhibitor. The public is accustomed to going to see certain types of pictures, and he will have had a good first-run picture one week and next week he may have a poor first-run picture. Under this system it is inevitable that the big man is going to get all the pictures and the little fellow is going to be reduced to a second, or sub-run house, or what is known in the trade as a slough house.

Under this decree, may it please the Court, the defendants enjoy an immediate advantage. They may display in their houses the pictures they produce.

On the present production we roughly estimate that they may have as much as six month's production. They can show pictures without auction bidding, without going into the market and subjecting themselves to the hazard of the auction block; they can show six months of pictures, and by stretching it in the bigger cities, we estimate they will probably have enough production to show a whole year; in the smaller cities and towns, of course, that isn't true.

They already have one strike against the independents (3926)
because they know that the independent has got to bid and bid well to get that picture which they have put on the auction block in order to have something to show against his picture. It is human nature that they are going to charge more for it. It is human nature that those film rentals are going up.

All the factors that I have narrated are going to enter into distribution.

You have to have, I don't know how many people, auctioning these pictures off; you have to have a lot of exhibitors getting ready to submit bids, and all those things are going to increase the cost of the films.

And then, under the decree of the Court, a distributor cannot take into account those things which apply in any business enterprise, in any course of dealings, that is, to name a few, the reputation of the man with who you are dealing for honesty, integrity, fair dealing, efficiency, cooperation, and a record of his past transactions.

Now, to cover the risk that you are bound to take. You may say he is a responsible bidder, but he may have a lot of money and be a very difficult exhibitor to deal with. To cover that risk, inevitably you are going to add something to the price, your minimum price, and that is another reason why your film rentals are going up.

And then I come to a most important item, it is not a matter of contract, but as a matter of verbal understanding and of trade practice indulged in and, necessarily so, by all the producers and all the exhibitors. A producer comes along, a salesman, and says, "I have a fine picture, one of the best pictures. It is going to do a whopping business, and

I want this price for it." Under the present system the exhibitor says, "I don't think all those things are true. I will pay you this." And they trade, and finally arrive at a price, but the distributor also says to him, "If this picture does not turn out to be what I say it is going to be, what I prophesy, then I will give you an adjustment." Those adjustments arise from the fact that the picture is not what the producer thinks it is going to be. It may be because of the territory in which it is shown. For instance, "Young Mr. Lincoln" was popular in the North; in the South it was not a particularly popular picture. They thought Woodrow Wilson was going to be a great hit, but I understand it was not the box office hit they expected. Those pictures were sold on some high basis to exhibitors, and when they proved not as productive and not as popular as was stated, the producer comes along and says, "I will adjust what you have agreed to pay me." They found that good business. That is uniform throughout the industry. It is an accepted trade practice. I mean the return of thousands and millions of dollars to the exhibitor, because these exhibitors are people they want to keep in business. They have found in experience that they are good exhibitors, they know how to do business, and it is profitable from both ends that these adjustments should be made. But there may be other reasons for adjustments in addition to the poor drawing power; there may be bad weather, a circus may come to town, or there may be a fire; there may be a power failure, a strike, and various other attractions which take away from the drawing power of that picture at that particular time.

You can't always book a picture, may it please the court, for the precise time you want it because prints are limited. In those events there are post-exhibition adjustments. Now those would not be possible under this system.

Now there are a number of additional injurious factors. I have already alluded to the fantastic number of bids that each exhibitor would make, I have spoken of over-buying and under-buying. I have not mentioned double features. There is considerable difference of opinion in the trade as to the advantage or disadvantage of double features, but if he has got to buy pictures by auction bidding, he will not be able to show two pictures because both pictures will cost him a higher price. He is able to do it this way because he buys one picture at one price and the other at a higher price, and averages the two. But under this auction selling he will be unable to arrange his program. He may buy all Westerns. It would be ruinous for an exhibitor to buy all Westerns, buy one Western after another, except certain exhibitors in small towns where they have action pictures on Saturday nights. He may buy all historical pictures or he may have multigraphs. He will not be able to arrange his program. An exhibitor has to schedule his program so that it will be attractive. If he is a second-run house he will perhaps want to follow within a reasonable time after the first-run house. He would want to do something to make his program more attractive. It is a showmanship business, and you have got to properly prepare your program. And these exhibitors do not know how they will be able to arrange their program because they don't know what pictures they will have and what pictures they can expect to have.

So much for the damages it will do to the exhibitor.

Now coming to the public, I have already pointed out to the court that inevitably the small first-run houses will be converted into second-run houses and sub-run houses. At the present time you can go to a neighborhood house and see a good first-run picture because it is not in a competitive area and does not interfere in any way with the downtown house.

I think in this particular situation there are two theatres. You might call them faith and hope, because they have been built up by the exhibitor from faith and hope over a period of years. One has a seating capacity of 700, another say of 800, making a total of 1500. At the present time they are able by negotiation to exhibit first-run pictures day and date, that is, simultaneously. There is in that same town a picture theatre of 1200 seats.

Now under auction bidding, if they each ask for first-run only and there is only one first-run awarded to that town, as is usually the case in a town of 150 to 200 thousand, that big theatre is going to get that picture. That is just an illustration of a point I made before. But it seems that the neighborhood houses are going to sink down. They can't vary their prices according to their pictures. The public is accustomed to paying a uniform price at a theatre and seeing one week a good picture and the next week a picture that is not so good. Should they be fortunate enough to get a good picture they will pay a higher price but in the meantime they will have slumped down to a second or third or sub-run house, and the public has got to journey down-town to the larger and bigger houses.

I have already said that inevitably the cost of films is going to increase. Well, there is only one thing to do about that, that is to pass it on to the public. So admission prices will inevitably increase.

I have spoken of the inevitable deterioration of picture houses because with the uncertainty of what picture they will have they will not be able to arrange their pictures attractively, and that is the assence of showmanship business.

And finally, as far as the public is concerned, no one as far as I know has asserted that the auction selling program would give the public better programs or lower admission prices.

Now may it please the court, some six years ago I appeared here at the behest of certain exhibitors some of whom I now represent, and on their behalf I pointed out what we considered harmful provisions of the proposed consent decree. It was generally stated then among the exhibitors that they did not believe the consent decree would be sufficient to accomplish the purposes desired by the Government. As you know, the consent decree was entered. Our prophesies came too true. Mr. Williams has pointed out the results of the block booking provision which we violently opposed. As a result this trial was had last fall, and your opinion was handed down. The exhibitors were pretty unanimous, and in their forecast they were pretty correct. As I said before, I have never seen such unanimity among the exhibitors. They were unanimous with few exceptions and those exceptions can be explained away by economic facts. You can't put a theatre in a field and expect the public to go there. You can put a theatre in an open field where you can drive out with a girl, that sort of thing, but you can't build a million or a million-and-a-half-dollar theatre in an uneconomic location and expect it to do business.

If the court had time, we would go into these rare cases, but the rest of the exhibitors, independents, affiliates, and the like—and under the court's decree I anticipate there will be very few affiliates—they are all pretty unanimous. There are now about three thousand theatres that are wholly owned or might be affiliates. Under the decree the affiliates have got to divest themselves. Either they have got to sell or not sell or buy. What you are actually doing under this decree when the time comes if the owners of the affiliates should have to buy out the owner's interests, they too would be affiliates. And under this decree to reach these defendants you are imposing the stricture of auction selling, this uneconomic thing on some fifteen or sixteen thousand other theatres to reach probably what will be only fifteen hundred theatres. And I say there is abundant law in the land to take care of these situations if unjust conduct should result.

The Crescent case, the Interstate case—those cases—plus the injunctive provisions that the court otherwise proposes in this decree will, we think and believe, be adequate under the circumstances.

And I say in conclusion, why require these independents to buy their pictures by auction selling when we believe it is not needed to secure the desired results, when we believe it will not accomplish the desired purposes, and as far as we know, no one wants it.

The Court said of its consent decree in this recent hearing, the only people the court knew that wanted it was the Government and the defendants. No one wants the auction selling that I know of. It will work irreparable damage to the exhibitors whom the purpose of this proceeding is to benefit. And finally, it will not help the public.

We ask that you strike this provision out of any decree you may enter.

Judge Hand: Now, Mr. Barton, you made a very interesting argument here I think. What I would like to ask you if you are willing to answer is whether your clients were satisfied with things as they were. I believe they didn't like the consent decree—the five picture business—but they were satisfied before that, or are they people that have been complaining?

Mr. Barton: As far as I know, no, sir, none of my clients have complained of the present system of doing business, and they feel that they can by barter and trade and the sense they may put in their transactions properly and efficiently conduct their negotiations with the distributors.

Judge Hand: Then fortunately or unfortunately you do not represent the class that objects to the status quo. They are well satisfied. But there seems to be a very large class that does.

Mr. Barton: As to those—and there may be among my clients—these 20 representatives of two or three thousand theatres, there may be a number of whom I do not know who do object. You asked me if I personally knew. But they have said in meetings that they believe that the other strictures which the Court proposes to impose will be adequate to take care of the situation. They think more harm will result to them from auction selling than will be gained by that.

Does that answer your question?

Judge Hand: Yes.

I think we had better hear the opposition now to these motions to intervene.

Mr. Wright: Do I understand that the defendants have no objection to these interventions?

Mr. Davis: No, you do not understand. Our position in a nutshell, if your Honors please, is this: We cannot consent to these interventions by virtue of which the intervenors would become parties to the suit. We do not think they follow either the mandatory or the permissive clauses of Rule 24. We are, however, perfectly willing that the Court shall hear them as amici and shall receive any information or light that they can give the Court with reference to the formulation of the decree. We have not seen fit to traverse the petitions. Indeed, a pleading to a petition to intervene, by way of a denial, traverse or whatever, is procedure entirely unknown, I think. We neither admit nor deny, therefore, what their petitions contain. We stand upon the proposition that our entire good will may be heard by the Court, but we see no reason for making them parties to a litigation which already has a considerable number of parties, and quite a large volume of legal talent, agreement among whom is not always easy to obtain. I do not see why these intervenors should look forward so hopefully to the right to appear and be heard on argument in the Supreme Court. They can be heard in the Supreme Court as amici. They probably would not be heard orally. My impression is that if the case ever reaches that posture it will be possible to produce from the ranks of the Government and the defendants all the oratory to which the Supreme Court would be willing to submit.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I think Mr. Davis has stated what is substantially our position, that the letter that we wrote the Court as to Mr. Arnold's petition, of course, also applies to the Allred petition.

There is just one further thing I want to add here, and that was the point raised by your Honor that these people and any of them represent no one but themselves. There are a very substantial group of exhibitors who have interests quite different from theirs, who have views quite different from theirs as to what ought to be done here. Now, we submit that all of these views should be entertained by the Court in the form of such amicus briefs that they would care to file, but the effect of making them parties would simply be to hopelessly confuse the litigation without in any way aiding the solution that the Court has to arrive at.

Mr. Frohlich: Your Honor, on behalf of Columbia I should like to be heard for a moment with respect to the intervenors. Columbia has no objection to the A. T. A. or Mr. Jackson's clients, or Mr. Williams' clients intervening. I think they should be in this case in view of the radical nature of this decree and the effect of it upon thousands and thousands of smaller exhibitors. I think they ought to be here; they should be heard; they should be permitted to have such standing as will let them argue in the Supreme Court, and I am sure that no harm can be done to any of these defendants by this intervention. I think the Supreme Court will listen patiently to 15,000 exhibitors in this case.

Mr. Arnold: May I only say in reply that I did not argue the cases. Our cases are found in the memorandum to our motion to intervene, and I take it the Court would rather read those cases than hear me talk about them.

Mr. Davis: May I in connection with that remark of Mr. Arnold say we have an eight-page memorandum in which these cases to which he alludes are somewhat discussed on the question of law. The question of whether or not these interventions follow the scope of Rule 24; and with your Honors' permission we will hand up this memorandum.

Mr. Proskauer: May I ask what your Honors' desires are with respect to the substance of these suggestions that have been made? It has been our intention not to discuss them on these preliminary motions to intervene, but to refer to them when we come to discussing the decree itself; and if that is agreeable to your Honors, we will follow that course.

Judge Hand: Well, I should think that is the thing to do. I think that we should either allow them to intervene or allow them to file briefs. As I look at the thing now, it would be the latter, just amicus briefs, and not intervention. As I understand the law, I do not think it is necessary, but we still look at these briefs that will be submitted, and then there will be presentation of these objections, in either event, of course, on the settlement of the decree.

Now, of course, the decree itself is objected to, this auction selling business, by the defendants other than the major defendants in the case. The major defendants either no longer particularly object to that, or are in despair over their condition or the condition of the Court, or something.

Mr. Proskauer: No, your Honor. We say nil desperandum. We are not in despair. I think we will make that clear when we come to discuss the decree.

Judge Hand: The application of Society of Independent Motion Pictures. That is just a motion.

Mr. Ernst: Yes, to file a brief amicus, and I want to be heard just for a few minutes.

We represent the independent producers who have been scarcely mentioned in the proceeding here today. This is a group of about 20 producers none of whom has the power to dominate the market either by the control of theatres or by horizontal agreements with others. They are not parties to the case; there is no accusation against them. The testimony shows that they in effect are the ingenious outside free enterprise operators who have been able to survive in a market place dominated either by brick and mortar or horizontal agreements.

In answer to your inquiry, in effect, what other horses there are in the race other than the horse of competitive bidding, it seems to me there are two horses in the race, as to one of which we make no comment. That was the horse put in by the Government with respect to the divorce of brick and mortar from production. And on that we make no comment. But it does seem to me that now no matter what the decree shall be, this Court should make certain that those independent operators who together amount to a product equal to one major, should not have their hands tied, because they have been guiltless, and it may well be that your choice now is a kind of public service commission, arbitration board, running an important industry forever and a day, or the injection of free enterprise and competition into the industry by the independent exhibitors and the independent producers being allowed, as all people in business are allowed to do in the United States, dealing with copyrights, dealing singly, and without the domination of brick and mortar theatres, to make arrangements either auction bidding or no auction bidding, auction bidding with a concealed multiplicand or a disclosed multiplicand, fixing all prices by agreement. And it seems to me that the only hope of this industry, once having passed your major premise on brick and mortar, is the hope that free enterprise can be injected by this prominent, ingenious group of independent producers who make the pictures peculiarly of merit, as testified to by one of the attorneys for the defendants.

I may say a word about the public in relation to this concept: You have a clear analogy to this kind of an industry in the book field. In the book field there are special editions gotten out, $10, $12, limited editions, which are in effect clearance and run, because without clearance and run to protect the $10 special limited edition, there could be no such editions, as against the 25-cent reprint if it came out at the same time. There is no trouble within the book industry to establish and perpetuate a free competitive market for consumers, because by and large there has neither been any group of producers who have been able to dominate an area by retail outlets, and there has never been permitted horizontal agreements of the courts to thus control the marketplace.

What we have in mind is just one simple thing, that whatever decree is written, there must be taken into consideration the fact that the opinion is more than an opinion in regard to eight defendants. It lays down, perforce, a pattern for an entire industry. This is the one corrective impulse in the industry, that if it is allowed freedom of play in the marketplace, freedom vis-a-vis exhibitors who are also free and operating individually and not in cahoots with the conspirators, that impulse may be your greatest corrective toward freedom.

For example, there is no reason why if the position of the independent producers and independent exhibitors is not fully protected, no matter what the decree may be, why the independent producer won't be able to shop around for an exhibitor or the exhibitors shop around for independent producers, either on an auction basis, a disclosed price basis, an agreement admission basis, a clearance basis, as long as no one exhibitor and no one of these producers has the power to dominate the marketplace.

Now, what will that mean to the consumer? It means that some exhibitors will be able to stand up and put a sign on their doors, a dollar admission. What does that mean to the public? That means that the exhibitor is doing what he has a right to do, to say to the public you are going to average up. When you come to my theatre you are going on an averaging basis. You are not buying pictures by picture; you are buying for a dollar, whether the picture cost a fortune or nothing, whether it is good or bad. That certainly is within the realm of free enterprise if the exhibitor wants to take that hazard.

On the other hand, exhibitors say, "No, I want to compete picture by picture, and I will find an independent producer who will let me have his picture at a 90-cent or a dollar admission." Now, what is the hazard of that competition? That merely means that if that independent exhibitor has dealt with a Disney or Goldwyn, or a Selznick, or a Cagney, or any one of these great independents, both the producer and the exhibitor have taken this hazard. They have pegged the price at a dollar by agreement which is lawful, but they run the risk that across the street there will be a picture at 90 cents which will find more public favor.

That is exactly what happens in other fields, and it seems to me clear under the cases that there is no illegality in such an agreement if there is no horizontal accord and if there is no domination of the marketplace by the ownership of brick and mortar. And even if it be short of domination of the marketplace by brick and mortar, the brick and mortar cannot but have an effect on the horizontal dealings in the neighborhood of the theatres owned by the majors.

I should imagine that all we are asking for is just one simple consideration. Not being guilty, being competitive, being the ingenious branch that has been able to stand up against such a monopoly of conspirators, no general pattern of the industry should be laid down without leaving clearly open that none of these restrictions have any impact on independent exhibitors who want to buy from these independent producers, and independent producers who want to sell to the independent exhibitors. And that, if you please, having passed your major premise which has driven you to auction selling, the major premise as to the brick and mortar, as to which we say nothing, it seems to me that is the sole corrective left to encourage the expansion of that market so that the public will buy picture by picture, and exhibitors will be free to buy by auction or not, by price, by run, by clearance, any terms they see fit, as long as the seller and the buyer have no position in the marketplace capable of domi ating any competitive area.

Judge Hand: Vanguard Films.

Mr. Isseks: May it please the Court, I appear on behalf of Vanguard Films, an independent producer of motion pictures. Vanguard has made a motion for leave to file a brief amicus curiae. This brief is directed to one single problem, namely, the need of a road show exception to the (3945) provisions of this judgment. And I submit to your Honors, from my understanding of the briefs filed by the parties, and the record in this case, I believe that insufficient consideration has been given to that problem. The facts appearing in the petition filed by Vanguard show clearly that if there is no such exception for road shows, there will be an undue burden on all producers of outstanding, exceptional and costly feature motion pictures, and there would be, particularly, a tremendous hardship on my client, Vanguard Films.

Now, your Honors, it is most significant that the consent decree which had provisions restraining the five major defendants from certain practices in connection with the distribution of motion pictures, excepted specifically road shows from any phase of the consent decree.

Now, your Honors would like to know why my client, Vanguard Films, has a real and vital interest in the question of exempting road shows. Vanguard Films has as its executive producer David O. Selznick, who has been known for many years to the public and to the industry as a pioneer of high quality and exceptional motion pictures. It was he who produced "Gone With The Wind" which as of 1939 cost more than any picture made up until that time. Vanguard is a very small producer of motion pictures. It makes either one or two pictures a year. It is not controlled directly or indirectly by any of the eight defendants. For more than a year prior to June 11, 1946, the date of this Court's opinion, Vanguard had in production a picture called "Duel in the Sun." The picture today cost five and a half million dollars. Practically all of that expense was incurred on June 11, 1946. It was contemplated that that picture would be road shown, and if there is an injunction here against price fixing as to any picture, including a road show picture, Vanguard will be seriously harmed because it planned to road show that picture beginning December 15th, after first having a premiere in Dallas, Texas. In addition to the cost of making the film, which was about five and a half million dollars, Vanguard has already spent a million dollars in advertising. Vanguard planned to do something that was traditional in the industry.

Now, your Honors, as I understand it, and as I understand the record may even show in this case, for many years when you have an exceptional picture, and particularly when you have a costly picture, you road show it in selected theatres, in selected cities at increased admission prices, and the producer through his distributor fixes the increased admission price. I should have pointed out, your Honors, that we release under contract through the defendant United Artists. I also understand that the record shows that since about 1938 only four pictures have been road shown.

Judge Goddard: Altogether?

Mr. Isseks: Four.

Judge Goddard: Altogether? Does that include all road shows or only those of your client?

Mr. Isseks: No, of all the defendants, I understand. I understand in finding of fact 31 submitted by the five defendants, it shows that only four pictures were road shown. If I am wrong I will be corrected. I will tell you what they are: Gone With The Wind, For Whom the Bell Tolls, Wilson, and the Song of Bernadette. One of those was produced by my client—I think maybe two—but the producer, as a rule, your Honor, has not road shown pictures unless they are very expensive or very unusual.

Now, as I pointed out to your Honors, the consent decree excepted road shows completely, although there were restrictions in the decree. The Government in its original petition made no criticism of road shows, although they defined it. The Government in the amended petition made no criticism of road shows although they defined it, and I understand during the trial of the case, your Honors, the Government did not attack road shows as such.

Judge Hand: Is Vanguard entirely independent?

Mr. Isseks: Yes.

Judge Hand: Affiliated with no one?

Mr. Isseks: It distributes through United Artists. It is not controlled directly or indirectly by any of the eight defendants. We do release under United Artists under a contract made in 1941.

Now, during the trial of the case I understand the Government made no attack upon road shows. They did, of course, offer evidence that special privileges were given to certain large groups of theatres, either affiliated or non-affiliated, where there were special road show privileges; and it is significant that the Government's brief on page 10, in pointing out that while commercial exploitation of the ordinar feature film involved other forms of entertainment, they specifically state that road shows do not involve any other form of commercial exploitation.

Now, your Honors, I come now to the legal questions involved——

Judge Hand: Why do you have to fix the price?

Mr. Isseks: We want to get our money back, your Honor; that is what it comes down to. I will explain it to your Honor very simply. When you have——
(3949)

Judge Hand: Why is your client in such a pitiful state as compared to the other people——

Mr. Isseks: Your Honor, my situation——

Judge Hand: ——they do not say that this will ruin them.

Mr. Isseks: I think they have submitted a road show exemption, your Honor. The five major defendants have submitted one which would benefit them only, and I think that does not go far enough because it will really increase any economic advantage it now has. Our exemption, we suggest, is not only for ourselves; we suggest it should be applied to the industry, or, in the alternative, to the three minor defendants; or in the third alternative, to those pictures which were in production on June 11 and which were costly.

I come now, your Honors, to what I think are the legal questions involved: The only possible objection to road show exemption would be that the defendants—and I include all the eight defendants—would be able to fix the admission prices of the picture in a theatre. Now, we submit, your Honors, that there is no case holding, including your Honors' decision, that the fixing of admission prices by a single producer, including the defendants, or a single distributor, including the defendants, constitutes a violation of the Sherman Act.

Now, certainly, your Honors, the General Electric case which your Honors cited in your opinion has held that a patentee may fix the price which his licensee may sell the article to the public; and the Supreme Court, your Honors, in the Interstate Circuit case, which your Honors cited in your opinion, at least inferentially indicated that a distributor might fix the admission price at which his exhibitor would show the feature film, provided that the admission price did not include the admission price for that of another feature film.

Now this Court in its opinion said:

> "Nor need we now decided whether a copyright owner may lawfully fix admission prices to be charged by a single independent exhibitor for the exhibition of its film if other licensors and exhibitors are not in competition. As other licensors and exhibitors are always in competition"—— the word here is "contemplation", but I think it is a misprint and should be "competition"——

"as far as we can see the question would appear academic."

Now, your Honors, I submit it is not academic as far as exceptional, costly pictures are concerned.

(3951)

Judge Goddard: What is the difference in principle between a less expensive picture and one that cost a great deal of money? What is the difference in principle?

Mr. Isseks: I think your Honor has to meet the economic conditions in the industry. Your Honors have gone on in the sentence preceding the one I read and said that any copyright owner may fix the admission prices and fix any other condition in his own theatre, which means that the five major defendants have an economic advantage over us. They can now take—take Paramount. Paramount can take its costly picture and put it in its own theatre and charge any admission price it pleases because it is a copyright owner. We can't do that. First of all we have to distribute through one of the eight defendants; secondly, we do not own any theatres, and it seems to me that where there is economic advantage which they now have and which the decree is going to continue, we ought to be put at least on a parity with them, and we say when you come to an expensive picture—and there is a public interest in expensive pictures—and your Honors are aware that this industry has had advantages in the art only by reason of the fact that somebody has come along and taken either a work of art or a play, or a well known book, or something of public interest, and he has made an unusual picture out of it. In doing that, he has to first make it long, as a rule, and secondly he has to spend a lot of money——

Judge Hand: Well, you say you are entitled as an independent producer who has not been a bad boy—there is nothing against you up to date—to fix these things——

Mr. Isseks: Your Honor, I go further. That is one of our——

Judge Hand: ——and that these other bad people can't perhaps, can't under our decree.

Mr. Isseks: I say they can as to their own theatres, and I say if they can as to their own theatres, they have an economic advantage.

Judge Hand: Yes, they can as to their own theatres, that is right.

Mr. Isseks: And they can raise prices as they please.

Now, under your Honors' decree, United Artists, which has no theatres—I think they may have a half interest in one or two theatres on the West Coast—but under this decree, their economic advantage as to their theatres is going to be continued, as to road show pictures, expensive road show pictures.

I ought to point out the tradition of road shows. A picture is road shown because only in that way can the man who makes the expensive picture recoup his unusual cost; and there is only a limited number of patrons in the country, a limited number of seating capacity, and if he has got this high cost, he has in the past, and as the consent decree recognized, been able to go out and do something different.

Now, your Honors might say well, if you permit this exemption broadly applying to all the defendants, everybody, they might use this exception as a means of evading the prohibition against fixing admission prices. We suggest four ways, four conditions that could be added to your definition of road show which appears on footnote 1 of your opinion. One condition goes to requiring a picture to be costly, a certain cost over the average cost. Another condition would be to fixing increased admission prices. A third would be with regard to tying in other pictures. You would have to road show only one picture; and the fourth condition would be only that one producer could road show two pictures a year, although, as a matter of fact, you never get that high. History has shown that only four have been released by these eight defendants in the last five or six years.

Now, your Honors, I just have two other things I want to say: I think I have touched on them already, but it will only take me two minutes. There are three ways of handling this. I think it is a very vital and important thing to the independent producer, particularly to my client. One way of handling it is to have an exception for all the defendants and those who must distribute through defendants, have a flat exemption that this decree shall not apply to road shows as hereinafter defined, and define it, and I urge that.

The second way of doing it would be at least to make the independent producers on an equal level with the five majors, and that is to have the exception apply to the three minor defendants and those who released through those three minor defendants. As your Honors know——

Judge Hand: Is this in your memorandum?

Mr. Isseks: Yes.

(Continuing)—the third thing, your Honors, is that your Honors limit the exception to pictures on June 11, 1946, or at least in production, so that people like ourselves and maybe others like us won't be hurt by your Honors' decree.

One other comment I think is important. I think the Government and the defendants ought to state their position on this. It does not appear in the briefs. You can look at your Honors' opinion, and look at the briefs filed, and look at the record, and there is nothing to show what the Government's view is on this road show problem, and there is nothing to show what the defendants' views are.

Now, they have submitted something which I do not think would help the independent producer or the three minor defendants; it would help them only; and as to that if I have any position here at all, I object.

Thank you very much.

Judge Hand: Do you want to say anything about this, Mr. Wright, or do you want to take it up on the settlement of the decree?

Mr. Wright: I think since we have the next two days to say what we have to say, I rather hesitate to encroach on the time of the other non-parties. I suppose they all ought to be heard first.

Judge Goddard: Can you say whether you are opposed to the position just heard?

Mr. Wright: Well, there are a number of qualifications. As to a road show exemption per se, we are opposed.

Judge Hand: Radio Center.

Mr. David Sher: May it please the Court, this is an application for leave to file a brief amicus submitted in behalf of (3956)
an independent theatre known as the Mosque Theatre, located in Newark. It is directed to a single proposition, and that is if auction bidding is to be instituted, it is suggested that such bidding will not be effective unless coupled with the proposal suggested by the Government in its decree to the effect that the five major defendants shall not be enabled to show each other's pictures. The brief points that out if that proposal is not included, these defendants will be able through their own production to have a competitive advantage in the auction bidding which will neutralize the entire value of that bidding. It is a short brief, your Honors, and we ask to leave it.

Judge Hand: Very well.
(3957)

Judge Hand: Independent Theatre Owner and Operator Members.

Mr. Blasi: Your Honors, with your permission I would like to present Mr. Herman Levy of the Federal Bar of Connecticut, who is counsel for the Independent Theatre

Owner and Operator Members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and I ask your Honors to hear him.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Levy: Thank you. My name is Herman M. Levy, of New Haven, Connecticut.

If the Court please, I think my task this morning has been made quite brief because so much has been said that I had planned on saying against auction bidding.

I would like to state that my organization represents 2700 or 3000 independent theatre owners who are represented by my firm, some of them interlocked with other organizations holding memberships in the A.T.A. and the Southern group in our organization.

We have been wondering whether the words used by the Court:

> "The license desired shall in such case be granted to the highest responsible bidder having a theatre of a size and equipment adequate to show the picture upon the terms offered"—— whether those words used by the Court meant auction bidding. The term "auction bidding" was coined, or auction selling or auction bidding as a term was coined after the decision was announced. Who started it, we don't know. Certainly the words were not used in the decision.

Now did the Court intend by those words—and we ask this as amicus curiae—to start a restricted system of competition in the industry where a salesman would go from theatre to theatre comparable and adequate to get a bid of one theatre and refer that bid to the next theatre and to the next, and in that way get the highest competitive bid? It is hard to believe that that is what the Court intended. That is what existed in this industry some twenty-five years ago when a salesman would take a picture and go from house to house. If that is what is intended, that is what we are afraid of this morning. And if the Court meant that plan as the only plan for doing business, then we state that that plan will bring about two disastrous results both of which the Sherman Act was intended to avoid. First it will mean increased film rentals. That is self-evident. Two houses buying pictures under the old system, house A was a favored house, it had been there a long time and got the pictures first-run. House B got the second-run in town. Now with auction bidding, with both houses able to bid at the same time, it is obvious that house A will pay more money to hold on to its run, and house B will bid to the point of over-bidding to get a run it never had. That means reckless bidding. If film rentals go up, that increase will have to be passed on to the consumer. Certainly that was never the intention of the Sherman Act. And yet the conclusion that the consumer will pay more for admissions is inescapable because film prices will positively go up. The degree of increase nobody can today anticipate. And secondly, in our opinion, competition will become restrictive if the courts say—and that seems self-evident—that you may sell your product only on this basis and no other.

Now the Court asked an attorney in this room who spoke earlier, what alternative he had, and I subscribe to his alternative. The Government complained not that the distributors own and operate theatres but that in the operation of those theatres certain unlawful practices had been developed. Now we say to the Court, this Court has found those practices unlawful. Why may they not be enjoined from indulging in those practices and open the door to any kind of legitimate competition? Once the Court has found unlawful acts, then the Sherman Acts says the court must open the door to competition, not in any restricted sense, that this is the way and the only way you can do business, but any way, whether these exhibitors are independent or affiliates, might find, and if the means that they find are unlawful means, then it is for the Department of Justice to step in again. But until that time the court should open the door wide to competition in any legitimate way that they may find.

In the event the Court is not satisfied, and apparently from the decision I must conclude that the Court is not satisfied, with the alternative of merely enjoining unlawful practrices and leaving the door open to any competition that these theatres may evolve with their customers, then I see the Court sees fit to set forth in its decision what shall be the tests in determining clearance, and it lists seven of those. It says the defendants may use these tests in determining what is clearance. Then I say to the Court with the exception of the elimination of one or two, why not amend the decision of the Court to read that in the sale of those pictures, the exhibitors use those tests. I am merely adding on a certain proposal that the exhibitors have added in their proposed decree that in addition to those tsets there should be the test of financial stability, comparable customers, the customer's position and integrity in the community, and their past history with this distributor. But we submit that those suggestions of the distributors plus the one selected by the Court under the decree to be used for clearance, make an alternative plan and leave the door wide open for the bartering and negotiation that we are asking for this morning.

Now if these suggestions are good enough and legal enough for clearance, then they must be good enough and legal enough for competition in the buying of pictures, and we submit that those same things plus the few that I mentioned, could be incorporated in this decree and then open the door wide open to any legitimate competition that these defendants and theatre owners can evolve.

Judge Goddard: May I ask, Mr. Levy, what about the stipulation of admission fees?

Mr. Levy: We are opposed to that, on the other hand. We are opposed and the Court has found that illegal.

Judge Goddard: That is your third relief, as I recall it, in consideration for clearance.

Mr. Levy: Yes. Those, of course, elements of the seven which have been found by the Court to be illegal we would not expect to be included. However, under the consent decree, the distributor granted a run and clearance based upon a very important element that your Honors have left completely out of this decision, and that is the amount of revenue that the distributor could get from a picture.

If I represent a house, or own a house, or operate one which can give to a distributor more revenue for his picture, on whatever the terms, I feel that I am entitled to that picture. Under the decision as it now stands, if I read it correctly, and if not I suppose someone will subsequently correct me, the amount of revenue derived by the producer is no factor in helping me to get a picture, even though mine is the biggest house.

I know it cannot be by admission prices in the contract, but it certainly could be, as it was in the consent decree, by the amount of revenue to be obtained, and that, if the Court please, a distributor knows pretty well from his past history, what one house will do and what another house will do.

Contained in this brief, and I shall not go into it in detail as I would like your Honors to read it, are certain practices that we feel the door has been opened to, in the decision as it now stands, and we took those up with Mr. Wright and submitted to him our analysis of what evils could develop under the system which is proposed by the Court. He found some of those with merit and has included them in his proposed decree. And as a friend of the Court, if your Honors please, we ask your Honors to give your serious consideration to those proposals of Mr. Wright and ours for inclusion in the decree.

Under any system of competitive bidding, if your Honors please, a man could very easily overbuy, if money is the only factor, overbuy and backlog, and overbid and operate at a loss. That overbidding and operating at a loss is remote, I question. The federal court in Illinois, only recently, in the A. & P. case, found that that organization operated at a loss to get rid of competition, and without going into detail of overbidding, backlogging and overbuying and so forth, operating at a loss, we do submit and ask the Court to consider those points and to include them, if it meets with the Court's philosophy in the final decree.

That brings us next to the subject of arbitration. My clients are keenly disappointed that the Government has asked for the liquidation of arbitration. It has been our position for years, for 15 years that I know, as an association to stand for and foster arbitration and conciliation rather than litigation. As your Honors pointed out in the decision, litigation is a very serious and expensive procedure. We ask that the Court give serious consideration to arbitration, despite the Government's objection, at least, as the Court stated, for those people who wish to arbitrate their matters; and I understand the Government's concern is that the distributors may or are planning to use arbitration as an escape for the penalties of violation of the decree. We say that that is not what this Court intended, and if it did open the door to that, then certainly the right of exhibitor A to arbitrate with Fox or Paramount should not be correlated with the Department of Justice's duty of enforcing the decree that is entered. The two are not mutually necessary, in my opinion.

We feel, finally, if the Court please, that the plan offered, whether it be the plan that has been accepted as the auction bidding, house to house bidding, picture by picture bidding, or any other form of restricted competition, if that is what this Court intended, I would just like briefly to show how such a plan opens the door to litigation in an industry that has been sorely tried by litigation since I can remember.

Judge Hand: Hasn't that been pretty well developed by these other speakers?

Mr. Levy: If your Honor feels it has, I am perfectly willing to withdraw that remark.

The Court: If you have any new thought, all right.

Mr. Levy: I am not sure that it is new. I thought it was more forceful, but I will withdraw my comment. I will then withdraw those comments and rest upon my predecessor's remarks, but I would like to say this: If this plan is a workable plan, if this is what the Court intended and it is a workable plan, why are both the proposed decree of the distributors and the proposed decree of the Government silent on the rules and regulations of auction bidding? Not a word, as I can see it, is in either proposed decree. Your Honors stated in your decision that the parties to this suit shall submit their findings to the Court for its assistance. The Court will have no assistance on auction bidding. And the reason I feel is because it corroborates the unworkableness of this plan. As soon as you start saying, "This is fine" on paper, "house B can now get first run by bidding $25 more than house A." It holds only with house A and house B, and you cannot get it to work with another town.

It is unworkable, in my opinion, and impossible to draw up a set of rules and regulations that can govern the system of auction bidding.

One final point, and that is that this organization last July started a poll of the independent theatre owners in the United States. It was not limited to our membership; anybody at all, whether he was for auction bidding or against auction bidding, belonged to an organization or not, was asked to answer four questions on controversial matters raised by the Court, auction bidding, arbitration and so forth, and we offer those without comment except to say that of almost over 250 answers received, the vast majority of them were from small independent theatre owners, owning not more than five theatres, and most of them one and two, and of the 280 votes on auction bidding, 261 are opposed and 19 for. I won't go into the other answers. They are all tabulated and they are offered only for the purpose of argument.

And then I would like to say something which is not in the brief, and which has been brought up by the discussion here and which has been discussed thoroughly, the provision of road showing. As far as our independent exhibitors are concerned, we have no objection to road shows when, as and if their pictures be road shown on a national policy, and not one city picked out, or one there and another there; but if the national policy is launched by the distributor, wherein the picture will be road shown all over the country, we feel they are entitled to that and have no objection to that.

I thank you very much for permission to argue this matter.

Judge Hand: Joseph P. Day. I do not see that you should be heard on an application merely to enlighten as to how you can auction. There is no reason you shouldn't file something, if you want to.

Mr. Kenney: If your Honors please, our only request is on the basis of having studied the thing and with the feeling that we may be able to be of some assistance, that we be permitted to file a brief. It was not our intention to ask for permission to argue.

Judge Hand: Conference of Independent Exhibitors. That seems to be another application.

Mr. Myers: It is an application, your Honor, for leave to file a brief as amicus curiae and to make a brief oral statement.

If your Honors please, I speak for the Conference of Independent Exhibitors Asspciations. With our humanitarian instincts we have brought together 22 independent theatre associations covering 28 states, and the Territory of Alaska, so that they could all join in one brief and in one brief statement to the Court, and, to that extent, expedite these hearings.

Strange voices and strange champions for the independent exhibitors seem to arise on these occasions, and to the extent that they advance arguments that coincide with our position, we welcome them, but we must, in order to keep the record straight, we must point out that included in this very short brief of ours and this very short statement are all, with possibly one exception, of the independent exhibitor associations of the United States in the sense that they are comprised wholly of independent exhibitors and are not a mixture of independents, affiliates, producer-owned theatres and the like.

I have regretted that there seemed to have been put forth to the Court here this morning an utterly negative attitude toward the Government's position and what it is seeking to do in this case. True, our independent exhibitor organizations are opposed to the competitive bidding system as outlined in the Court's decision. They do not think it is workable, they think it will work injustice, but that ground has been so thoroughly covered that I do not intend to impose on the Court by rehashing any part of it.

We have gone a little beyond that and we look forward to the contingency, however remote, that such a system might come into operation in this industry, and, therefore, have ventured to suggest methods for making it as workable and as little burdensome upon the industry, and particularly upon our exhibitors, as possible.

In the first place, we do not think that it is possible for this system to promote competition in this business so long as the producer-distributors-exhibitors have this great backlog of their own product to exhibit in their own theatres. We do not think independent theatres, under those circumstances, could possibly compete successfully for the product against the affiliated theatres. So, we align ourselves with the Government in the suggestion that any competitive bidding system, in order to be effective, must be accompanied by an injunction against the cross-licensing by these defendants —the Big Five I am talking about—of the playing of each other's pictures in their theatres.

It might very well be asked, "Haven't they a right to do that?", and I am not prepared to say that they haven't a right to play each other pictures in their theatres, abstractedly considered, but in Sherman Act cases many things are enjoined in order to make effective the relief which the statute calls for, which may be entirely legal in and of themselves. The Sherman Law, as it has been well said, is a limitation of rights, rights which may be put to evil consequences. Therefore, I think it is an entirely appropriate thing, in order to make this bidding system effective and just, that it should be accompanied by an injunction against cross-licensing. And if the defendants say that is a harsh remedy, we must bear in mind that the opinion of this Court says that the bidding system is, in substance, an alternative to the very harsh remedy of complete divestiture; and if, as seems likely, the defendants prefer the competitive bidding system of divestiture, then I should think they should yield whatever is necessary to make that system workable.

It has been well said here this morning, and very eloquently said, that there cannot be a comparison of bids on a percentage basis. Frankly, I have been with the independent exhibitors for some 17 years and I have studied this from every angle, and I have conferred with them almost constantly since the Court's opinion, and I want you to know that we are sympathetic with this proceeding here and not taking a position of opposition to it; but we cannot see how bids, based on a percentage arrangement, can be compared justly or fairly, or how any such attempt can avoid these very discriminations which were practiced before and which are the underlying basis of this proceeding.

So, instead of using that merely as an objection, we venture to suggest that if the defendants want competitive bidding, as an alternative to divestiture, there again they should yield to the extent that all competitive bidding be on a flat rental basis and not a percentage basis.

Flat rental contracts, as your Honors know from the printed forms in the Government's brief, are payable on the barrelhead. So that not only allows of a complete comparison, but also it eliminates incidentally, some of the most evil incidents of percentage playing and some of the most irritating and irksome things in this business, and that is the checking of theatres, the espionage over the operations of the independent theatres, auditing their books and finding out all about their business, designating the days of the week on which pictures may be played; and, incidentally, it would also eliminate all the controversy, so far as those engagements are concerned, concerning the admission price to be charged, and as to the responsibility of the exhibitors and the size and suitability of his theatre for the pictures on the particular run.

Again, on the assumption that the competitive bidding system might come into effect in this industry, we offer concrete suggestions for making it as workable as possible.

We do not think this business is going to be conducted to the chant of the tobacco auctioneer. We think, if there is going to be competitive bidding it will have to be done as we have known it all our lives, the system of sealed bids, the requirement that they be submitted within a definite time after the picture is offered, for the offering of those bids at a particular time and for inspection of bids by the disappointed bidders, and other concrete suggestions, all contained in the brief, your Honors, which I hope will be helpful in the consideration of the matter.

In conclusion, I would say that we do join in the other statements made here, the reasons advanced why the competitive bidding system as outlined by the Court would be unworkable and would work a hardship on the independent exhibitors. We don't like it, we don't want it, but if it is to come, we want it to be as workable and as little burdensome as possible.

Mr. Proskauer: Before we adjourn, would you permit me to inquire of Mr. Myers: Have you even taken a poll of your members as to whether they want to abolish percentage?

Mr. Myers: Yes, Judge Proskauer, I think that has been done in every territory affiliated with our association; and (3973) if you are a student of the trade papers, as I know you must be, you probably read that there was an open forum of the independent exhibitors of the United States in Boston last month, and it was not at all confined to our members. With 600 independent exhibitors in the room that afternoon, they took a poll on the subject, and I rather imagine the press and Warner Bros. by this time has received a copy of the resolution they adopted on that very subject of percentage selling.

Mr. Proskauer: The recommendation is that that would be disastrous.

Judge Hand: Everybody has been heard who wants to on these motions? And has everybody filed briefs who wants to? On the motions of moving parties, I mean.

Mr. Kenney: If your Honor please, as I stated before, we had no desire to be heard on argument, but that we wanted to file a brief. May I ask a time limit on filing a brief as amicus curiae?

Judge Bright: Didn't your client submit a long letter on the subject, outlining his mechanics?

Mr. Kenney: The entire mechanics of the plan were not outlined in that letter. They have now been further elaborated together with certain forms which are to be devised, which are the heart of the plan itself.

Judge Hand: You may submit it by tomorrow.

(3973a)

Mr. Kenney: I gather your Honor does not want it in printed form.

Judge Hand: I don't care whether you print it or not. We will adjourn until tomorrow morning at 10.30.

United States District Court

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA Petitioner, vs.
Defendants.

Equity
No. 87-273.

New York, October 22, 1946,
10.30 o'clock a.m.

HEARING RESUMED.

Mr. Wright: May it please the Court, the principal arguments that the plaintiff desires to make in connection with the judgment proposals and proposed findings that are now before the Court have already been submitted in written form.

Mr. Proskauer: We don't hear a word you are saying.

Mr. Wright: I say the principal arguments that we desire to make in connection with the proposed judgments and findings that the Court now has before it have already been made and submitted by us to the Court and to you and to the friends of the Court in written form.

We have no desire to enlarge upon those arguments or to reiterate them orally at this time as we assume we will be given an opportunity tomorrow to reply to such argument as the defendants may make today.

Therefore, our time today will be devoted to a discussion of the points raised by the non-parties who were heard yesterday.

In evaluating those points we think the Court should give some consideration to the position of those groups in the industry as disclosed in their various petitions and briefs.

You will note from their petition that Mr. Jackson's and Colonel Barton's group and their activities in this connection are being actively supported, financially and otherwise, by certain unnamed Paramount partners. Their position is perhaps closer than any of the others to that already assumed by the defendants in this suit. The associations respectively represented by Mr. Arnold and Mr. Williams have members who are defendants in this suit or affiliated with these defendants. But those members are not participating in this particular proceeding. The same is true of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, represented by Mr. Levy, on whose behalf a brief has also been submitted, but the representation there is also confined to the independent members of that organization.

Now, as stated by Mr. Levy his memberships overlap that of the others just mentioned to some extent.

Thus these groups who are silent on or opposed to the basic relief, affirmative relief sought by us, are composed (3976) of independent exhibitors who by their membership and cooperation with these organizations affiliated with the defendants are already—are now and always have been committed to the proposition that collaboration with the defendants is more profitable for them than maintenance of an adversary position of basic opposition to monopoly as proposed by this suit.

The Government's proposed judgment, in so far as it grants affirmative basic relief directed to that monopoly position, is fully supported by the only completely independent groups who have appeared here, that is, the briefs submitted by Radio Center, Inc. and the Conference of Independent Exhibitor Associations.

The two briefs submitted on behalf of independent producers are confined to independent producers who market their films through the distributor-defendants. They are independent in the sense that they finance their own productions, but it seems clear from the allegations of their petitions and briefs that they have no independence whatsoever when it comes to securing an outlet for their films.

All of them insist that it is economically impossible for them to release their pictures through any other distributor than a defendant. All of the exhibitor briefs insist that independent exhibitors cannot operate without the films distributed by these defendants.

In fact, most of what is said in the briefs of all those groups is based upon the proposition that the defendants today collectively enjoy an effective monopoly over the distribution of films in this country.

As to this point, there is no possible ground for disagreement between them and the Government. However, there is a sharp divergence between some of their views and ours as to what the Court should do in such a situation. As we understand the Sherman Act, the Court has no choice, when confronted with a monopoly of this character, but to adopt effective measures to destroy that monopoly.

Neither the Justice Department nor the courts are authorized to establish a policy of monopoly for the industry with which they deal. Congress alone may decide that a given monopoly should be subjected to some form of regulation or given an exemption rather than dissolution. Congress alone has the power to create the necessary administrative machinery for such regulation.

The briefs of the independent producers advocate affirmative relief which is only consistent with the continued retention of the existing monopoly of distribution that the defendants now have, and for that reason alone ought to be rejected. If certain advantages which the holders of that monopoly now enjoy prevent the independents from competing with them, the proper remedy is to remove those advantages rather than to compensate the independent elements with a special immunity from antitrust law requirements.

Now, while it may be true that the price-fixing prohibitions of the decree strike harder at independent producers, than they do at the major defendants, by virtue of the latter's complete power to fix prices in their own theatres, it is hardly an admissible solution to permit illegal price-fixing on behalf of the independent producers who release through these defendants.

Of course, in so far as these independents may release their film through non-defendant-distributors, they are not subject to any of this decree's restrictions. The kind of exemption they seek, while granted to benefit independent producers, would in effect take United Artists completely out from under the decree, as they release only independently produced film. They are a distribution agency only. The (3979) same is true not only of price-fixing privileges, but all of the exemptions from the decree which these independents ask this Court to grant them, as well.

The road showing of pictures, for examples, presents the problem of admission price-fixing and clearance restriction in acute form. A road show is, by definition, an exhibition at extraordinarily high admission prices supported by an extraordinarily long clearance, to wit, as much as twelve months before the picture becomes available for general release. That kind of film exploitation hardly seems consistent with the objectives of the Sherman Act. However advantageous it may be to a producer in recovering his investment, such a benefit cannot possibly remove such price-fixing from the condemnation of the Act.

With reference to the road show exemptions suggested in the Vanguard petition, as I have already pointed out, we are opposed to any road show exemption. However, if there is to be any exemption of that kind, it should, in our view, be limited to films released through non-theatre-owning defendants, as suggested in the second alternative of the Vanguard petition.

Now, as far as the particular picture "Duel in the Sun," which apparently gave rise to that petition, is concerned, we believe that the provisions of the decree probably ought not to be made to apply to that picture, but the kind of exemption for this purpose proposed in the third alternative stated in the Vanguard petition is one which would exempt not only that picture, but a substantial number of unreleased pictures now in the hands of the major defendants, by virtue of a very substantial back-log that all of them had built up at the time this decision was rendered. That alternative is therefore objectionable in that form.

Now, we have been informed by counsel for United Artists, which is to release the picture, that it proposes to appeal from the price-fixing provisions of the judgment in any event, and we assume that a stay of such provisions during such appeal would probably take care of whatever special hardship might be presented by that picture.

Now, the various briefs filed on behalf of the exhibitor non-parties simply reveal what might have been supposed, even in the absence of such briefs, that some exhibitors support the Government more wholeheartedly than others in this proceeding, and the degree of support in general reflecting the degree of absence of affiliation or association with the defendants. We recognize, of course, that all of them are unanimous in opposing so-called auction selling, except the independent theatre operator in Newark, who owns the largest theatre there and who favors auction selling plus a ban on cross-licensing as the best solution, short of divorcement, for his particular situation.

The phrase "auction selling", which has been rather freely used by all of the parties who appeared here yesterday to describe the method of licensing proposed in the decree suggested by the Court, is not one which appears in the opinion. Nor does it appear in the decree we proposed. We have not understood the Court's opinion as advocating the institution of an administered system of actual auction sales of motion pictures. We read it merely as advocating a competitive disposition of runs by which two or more competing exhibitors might seek to exclude each other in providing that in order to prevent discrimination in awarding such runs, that the high bid, or high offer, in financial terms, should prevail.

Now, in order that our position as to the competitive disposition of exclusive runs and auction selling provisions, if you prefer, be made perfectly clear, we again point out that in our view without the prohibition against cross-licensing included in paragraph 8 of Section 3 of our decree, a so-called auction selling provision would be more harmful than beneficial to the enforcement of the Sherman Act against these defendants.

Therefore it seems to us that the choice now before the (3982)

Court, assuming that divorcement is unacceptable, is between the restricted system of competitive disposition of exclusive runs, including the ban on cross-licensing offered by the Government, or no so-called auction selling or competitive bidding system at all, unless the Court is prepared to adopt a system of selling films which only the major defendants desire.

Judge Hand: I did not understand what you were talking about in that last statement. In fact, I could not hear it clearly.

Mr. Wright: I am sorry, I will repeat it:

I say, it seems to us that the choice that is now before the Court, assuming that divorcement is unacceptable to the Court, lies between the system of competitive disposition of runs plus a ban on cross-licensing among the major defendant theatres, which we offered in our decree, or no auction selling or competitive licensing of runs system unless the Court is prepared to adopt a system of selling films in this suit which only the major defendants in the suit desire to have put into operation.

Now, we believe that——

Judge Goddard: That is not clear to me.

Judge Bright: You mean that the defendants would like to have it according to their proposed findings?

(3983)

Mr. Wright: I say what the Court has before it are two proposals which would give effect to the so-called auction selling or competitive bidding principle: 1, advanced by the defendants, which is objectionable not only to the Government but to the minor defendants, and to all of the exhibitor parties who have appeared here.

Judge Bright: Can you tell us briefly what that includes?

Mr. Wright: The defendants' proposal?

Judge Bright: Yes.

Mr. Wright: They have a rather elaborate system outlined for auctioning pictures with a statement of considerations which, as we view it, would be to permit them to continue to select virtually any customer that they wish to select in any particular situation.

(3984)

Mr. Wright: Now, what we proposed was a system of resolving the contest between independents——

Judge Hand: Do you really think that what they are proposing goes entirely outside of our decision, do you, in regard to this——

Mr. Wright: Yes, I do.

Judge Hand: They won't be permitted to do that if it is no.

Mr. Wright: I submit further that it not only goes outside the decision but it is not a system which any of the people who are supposed to be benefited by it have said will benefit them.

Now we believe that our paragraph 10, Section 2, taken as a whole, that is, the section in which 10(a) provides for some run at reasonable terms, 10(b) provides for competitive distribution of exclusive runs, Section (c) and (d) are in the language of the opinion providing that the licensing be without discrimination, theatre by theatre, picture by picture, and (e) is a provision providing that pictures must be in our view that kind of general prohibition as to methods of licensing cannot break up affirmatively and effectively a combination such as has been found here. We think the Supreme Court has plainly indicated that mere injunctive relief of that character is not sufficient to deal with situations of this kind.

Mr. Proskauer: May it please your Honors, we had anticipated that the course of procedure here today would be to have some general comment expressing the view of the defendants, and that then we would take up the respective decrees that had been submitted, if your Honors desired it, section by section, and endeavor to arrive at the decree which your Honors feel you should enter in this case. We did not conceive that we came here to retry the case. I shall have a word or two more to say about that as I proceed.

At the outset I wish to indicate a wide divergence in viewpoint between the Government and ourselves as we approach this problem.

The Government's memorandum in favor of its proposed decree begins in submitting a formal judgment which differs from that outlined in the opinion. That is of the essence of what we are talking about. The Government's proposal has no resemblance to the decree outlined in the opinion, and they frankly admit it. It is true that they say that they expect the Court will consider proposals which are supported by the findings, even though they do not accede with the relief outlined, and to that extent we would concede frankly that they are entitled to be heard.

But let us just, in order that I may fix the starting point for this consideration, take up one or two things that the Government has inserted in its decree:

"Clearance in favor of theatres owned by the defendants completely enjoined."

That is in their Section 11, Paragraph 5. Now let me say I am not going to elaborate on these things now. If it meets with your Honors' view, we will take those up in detail when we come to consider the decree itself as submitted by us and by them.

In your opinion you suggested certain standards by which the reasonableness of clearance was to be determined. Those are discarded by the Government. All reference to arbitration is omitted; and, finally, out of the air, the Government pulls an injunction as to which, of course, I shall have more to say, absolutely restraining any one of us from showing anybody else his picture in his own theatre. Nothing of that sort was decided by this Court, and I shall call your attention to phrases in your opinion which utterly negative any such suggestion of finding or the reasonableness of any such relief.

Now, when the Government comes to criticizing our form of judgment, they say that we "have submitted a rather complex device conferring upon these defendants privileges and immunities which they do not now possess. If forced to choose between the decree proposed by the major defendants and a decree of dismissal, we should cast our vote for dismissal." I suggest that this particular form of in terrorem argument is hardly appropriate in this case.
There is nothing we have suggested in this decree that is not grounded in the Court's opinion, and there is nothing that he can specify under that charge which gives it the slightest vitality.

For example, he says here today to your Honors that we had outlined details of a system of competitive bidding where the opinion did not make any such suggestions. But I call your Honor's attention to the words of the opinion:

> "The administrative details in such changes will require further consideration."

And we in pursuance of that deemed it to be our duty to formulate and suggest to the Court and to our adversary the details which the Court called for for further consideration that would make this competitive bidding system that was evidently firmly grounded in the Court's mind workable and efficient—at least as workable and as efficient as we knew how to make it.

We are a little resentful, if I may say frankly, your Honors, of the suggestion not perhaps we were lacking in good faith enough to attempt to mislead this Court, but that we were stupid enough to believe that we could do it; and we could do nothing better to give evidence of the intense earnestness with which we seek to implement what your Honors have decided than the preparation of this document which brings into the sharpest relief the agreements and the differences between the Government and ourselves.

Now I have said that we are not here to appeal from your Honors' decision. Surely this competitive bidding system your Honors must know is not palatable to us defendants. It calls on us to do a difficult and very arduous and very perilous, from the business standpoint, task. Your Honors wrote that that is what there should be and we are not here to ask you to reverse your opinion. If you should decide that you want to modify that we are perfectly willing to consider with your Honors and give you the benefit of such aid as counsel should give the Court of even further alternative suggestions. But that leads me directly to the issue which Mr. Wright tenders us in absolute repudiation of what your Honors have written.

The suggestion is made here that Colonel Barton's client includes some Paramount partners.

Well, your Honors, all these associations are made up of all kinds of people. Two things are evident from what occurred here yesterday—that you cannot put these people into watertight compartments, and that there is also a great area of good will which the Government ignores between the 15,000 absolutely independent theatres in America, which have grown up and are coining money today, between those 15,000 people and these five major defendants from whom they draw most of their pictures. And the time has come, I agree with Mr. Wright, to cut the heart of this thing and see whether Mr. Wright by his blind intransigence can persuade your Honors to destroy this industry.

He constantly talks about monopoly. Let's see what your Honors decided.

In the vast area of production the complaint is dismissed. There is no suggestion of monopoly or restraint.

Now when we come to exhibition and distribution this is what your Honors wrote:

> "The five major defendants cannot be treated collectively so as to establish claims of general monopolization in exhibition."

I emphasize the next words; we have relied on them:

> "They can only be restrained from the unlawful practices in fixing minimum prices, obtaining unreasonable clearances, block booking and the other things we have criticized."

I relate those words to Judge Bright's question as to the validity of the suggestion that Colonel Barton and Mr. Levy made here yesterday that the injunctive provisions de hora the competitive selling plan gives the relief which cures the evils which have been found here.

It is still an object all sublime to make the punishment fit the crime.

What have we been found guilty of? And if I omit anything I hope somebody will correct me.

Price fixing.

Mr. Davis: Admission price fixing.

Mr. Proskauer: Admission price fixing, I mean; not the prices of pictures. You have enjoined us from that. That cures that.

played within thirty days of availability, that the license shall so specify.

Judge Bright: Section 10 of what?

Mr. Wright: Paragraph 10 of our Section 2.

Judge Goddard: Of the decree?

Mr. Wright: Our proposed judgment.

Mr. Davis: Page 6 of the folder.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Wright, will you restate the two alternatives you suggested. I didn't get them clearly.

Mr. Wright: The alternatives with respect to auction selling that are now before the Court, as I say, are these: Our paragraph 10 of section 2 that you have before you plus the ban on cross-licensing embodied in paragraph 8 of section 3, or the major defendants' proposals as to cross-licensing which are embodied in their proposed judgment.

Now as I said, we believe that our Paragraph 10 in Section 2, taken as awhole, does constitute a workable set of standards for licensing films on a non-discriminatory basis, but that such a set of standards is obviously inadequate by itself to meet the problems posed by this suit.

Now any attempt to grant relief simply by superimposing a licensing system upon an industrial structure which remains essentially monopolistic by virtue of the control of distribution and exhibition facilities in a relatively few hands, cannot satisfy the Sherman Act.

Judge Hand: Now you call a thing monopolistic essentially because you can add together a number of people's interests and by treating it as one make it monopolistic. If their conduct is the conduct of united action, that is one thing. That we have attempted to interfere with and break up. You are just going back to the old proposition which would really mean that there was a monopoly of production, that the Sherman Act was violated by everything they did. It would mean the revival of issues, I should think, that you have apparently abandoned.

Mr. Wright: Not at all, your Honor. What I have said concerning a monopoly of distribution is in no way inconsistent with our disclaimer that there was an actual monopoly of production facilities.

Now we of course disagree strenuously with the Court's view, as we pointed out in our comments on their proposed findings, that the conduct of the defendants in this case was such that you could not aggregate them for purposes of estimating their control over this industry.

We think, in view of the Court's findings of a conspiracy among them, not only to fix prices but clearances and runs as well, you are compelled to aggregate them in any estimate that you attempt to make of their power in determining whether or not that power rises to monopoly proportions or proportions which require you to enter a decree which strikes at the power itself rather than merely to deal with certain aspects of its exercise.

Judge Hand: I do not see why you haven't the same proposition as to production exactly.

Mr. Wright: You do not have the same concentration of facilities in the hands of the defendants. You have independent people producing it.

Judge Hand: I do not see why not. I should think you would have great concentration, perhaps not proper percentage, but you can say that as to distribution, you can say that as to anything, any of the things they do. If you consider the fact that most of their pictures, of the best pictures, are theirs, which you are always saying, and if you add them together and treat them as a unit, there is a monopoly in production, I do not see any reason why you should not go after them along all lines and stop everything they do, sell out all their pictures, sell out all their theatres, sell out everything.

Mr. Wright: As I understand the Court's ruling, the thing which would prevent us from aggregating their production facilities for purposes of finding a monopoly is that the Court did not find that they conspired with one another in conducting their production activities. What the Court found was a concert of action among them with respect to their distribution activities.

The Court: Of course, you said they did not conspire with regard to production, that they had competition, and that you did not make any such contention.

Mr. Wright: I am assuming that for the purpose of this argument.

Judge Hand: As a result of your investigation into the matter.

Mr. Wright: I say that assumption is implicit in the argument I am making today. I am insisting that the critical point at which the supply is controlled is at the distribution level. At that point, it seems to me, perfectly clear not only from the evidence in the record but the positions taken by everyone else who has been heard here, that these defendants have actually complete control of the product.

The Court rejected our proposed solution of that problem by way of divorcement relief. We do not propose to argue that matter here. We do insist, however, that this Court must, in any event, make a basic attack on this problem by any injunctive relief which may be decreed. Such a basic attack is, we believe, embodied in our proposed ban on the use of the major defendants' theatres as outlets for each other's pictures.

This provision is, in our view, the only provision short of divorcement which gives any hope of supplying the industry with the additional independent distribution and exhibition outlets that are essential to break the existing distribution and exhibition monopoly.

Judge Bright: If that relief were granted, wouldn't that exclude the major operators from exhibition during large portions of the season?

Mr. Wright: I don't understand what you mean by that, no.

Judge Bright: If they were only permitted to exhibit their own product in their own theatres.

Mr. Wright: That is not what the proposal calls for.

Judge Bright: I thought you said you would prevent them from exhibiting the other defendants' product in their own theatres.

Mr. Wright: The production of the other major defendants. They would always be free to exhibit their own product plus the product of the minor defendants plus the product of non-defendant distributors.
(3990)

Judge Bright: Could they get enough product to continue operation?

Mr. Wright: I think the record shows quite clearly that they could. After all, you have testimony in here as to these independent exhibitors who were existing with only one, two and three of the defendants' product in this suit and, in many cases, with none of the product that is controlled by the five major defendants.

There certainly is nothing in this record which would support any claim that a theatre could not be operated with only the product of one major defendant plus the three minor defendants plus independent distributors. In normal distribution of the product, in a competitive situation, where you have these eight major companies, one would play four of the defendants' product and another one would play the other four. That is a characteristic, normal pattern.

Judge Bright: I was just wondering whether you were not seeking indirectly to divest them of their theatres.

Mr. Wright: Well, it might be that in certain situations they might prefer to give up a theatre rather than to accept that restriction. If so, I see no reason why that makes the relief any less acceptable. The choice is theirs.
(3991)

Judge Goddard: What is the fact, how many pictures does a defendant, average defendant make?

Mr. Wright: I think the figures in the record for the 1943-44 season show that the major defendants were making about 30 apiece.

Judge Goddard: That would not provide, would it, for the year's play?

Mr. Wright: No, except in a limited number of first run situations, where it would, yes. It all depends on the character of the operation, as chosen. Of course, there is no freeze on the number of pictures that any defendant chooses to make in any event. That is not a fixed matter. That may vary very widely, as in the past, from 20 to 60 pictures or more.

Judge Hand: To what extent do you attack first run discrimination only? I do not exactly know; I suppose you would say you never were attacking it, although the statistics were based on it.

Mr. Wright: It is the focal point of the attack because the first run distribution is again in exhibition, the critical area where control over the entire exhibition and distribution pattern in particular areas is exercised. It is through the first run theatres, through the first run theatre operation and, of course, ownership of these defendants is largely concentrated in first run theatres in metropolitan areas.

Judge Hand: You have not asked anywhere only to prohibit them from exhibiting on first runs?

Mr. Wright: We do not so limit our ban on cross-licensing.

Judge Hand: You mean in your proposed decree?

Mr. Wright: In our proposed decree. Its effect would largely be confined to that except in metropolitan situations, the larger cities, where the defendants, as well as controlling first run, have a substantial number of second, third and fourth run theatres, but its principal impact would be upon the first run situations.

All of the independents who have been heard here have assumed in their arguments that this monopoly of distribution would continue under the decree proposed by the major defendants, and we think they are right in that assumption. We think it is plain that the monopoly wil continue unless those major defendants are prohibited from mutual use of each other's theatres for exhibition of each other's pictures, and thus compelled to seek new exhibition outlets.

(3993)

Judge Hand: You mean, on any run?

Mr. Wright: That is our proposal, yes.

Judge Hand: On any run? I thought you just said it was not your proposal.

Mr. Wright: I said our proposal is not, in terms, restricted to first run exhibition. I said its practical effect would be largely for that in first run situations because those were the situations in which the defendant theatre ownership is concentrated.

As I say, we think it is plain that the prohibition of their mutual use of each other's theatres for outlets of each other's pictures is the only way, short of divorcement, that you can compel them to seek new exhibition outlets and to open their theatres to new distributors.

There is no assurance, of course, that any relief short of divorcement will terminate that monopoly, and we think that fact is implicit in all the argument that your Honors heard yesterday. We are not pressing the divorcement argument at this time only because we assume that we are all here to seek the best solution available within the terms of the Court's expressed desire to enter a decree which does not grant a divestiture on the scale necessary to effectuate divorcement.

Judge Hand: As things are, not perhaps as they would be under a changed decree, what would there be left for, well, we will say for Paramount, the first one named here, if it was confined to its own theatres? Of course, you have stated, in general, what would be left. I mean, in particular, what would you statistics show would be left that would please the public, let alone minister to their advantage, in the various localities? Of course, if they got some perfect star picture, they might run it in one big place the whole year. You must be prepared, I think, to make some kind of estimate and not just rely on the fact that these people are doing wrong, they must be destroyed.

Mr. Wright: The record clearly shows, your Honor, that that kind of prohibition would not destroy them. It would not compel them to dispose of any theatre except in perhaps a very few situations, in which they might require the product of more than four of these defendants. There is a great deal of flexibility involved there because they may step up, they may well step up their own production and distribution in order to take care of those needs. This proposal of ours gives them complete flexibility in that regard. (3995)

Mr. Wright: I can say this, your Honor, that as to first-run situations, the record is perfectly clear that there is no first-run situation that I know of that can't, or that it appears in this record you could not survive with the product of four major defendants. You can just consider what is the situation where there are two first-run exhibitors. Obviously they can't both play all of the products first-run.

Judge Hand: Of course if Paramount had the only theatre in a place and that was all that was necessary to supply the demand, it would really prevent that place from having any of the shows, the good shows, of Warner, Loew's—any of these people.

Mr. Wright: It would not prevent that place from having those pictures very long. There would be another theatre there in very short order. In the places which are now closed towns in the hands of these affiliated defendants, theatres would be opened very promptly.

Judge Hand: I shouldn't wonder if that was true in some of them. On my hypothesis, though, it would not do anything. I said one theatre was enough for the town. If one theatre was enough to furnish all the accommodation except good shows—I mean by "good", variety of shows chosen from these defendants—why, I am by no means clear that the mere inability to see some shows would build up (3996)

another business if there wasn't the material for it in the population to make it pay.

Mr. Wright: What your Honor is talking about is a situation that simply is not found in this record. These defendants do not operate theatres in one-theatre towns. In almost——

Judge Hand: Oh, I admit that.

Mr. Wright: In almost all of the tows where they are, they are sufficiently large to support multiple theatres. That situation that your Honor poses is wholly academic insofar as this record is concerned.

Now in any event, a situation consistent with the Sherman Act cannot, we believe, be secured in this industry merely by imposing on the independent buyers competition among themselves for a monopoly control of product. Prohibition of course licensing among the major defendants would tend to create a free supply of film product.

Now we note that counsel for some of the defendants expressed disappointment over the abandonment of arbitration in our proposal. That was Mr. Levy, I believe. But at the same time he seemed to agree with us that arbitration should not be a decree-enforcing device. Of course if these defendants and any exhibitors with whom they deal may individually decide to arbitrate their grievances, they are free to do so.

In the absence of coercion attributes resulting from a collective application of such a system, there is nothing in arbitration, per se, which is necessarily inconsistent with the Sherman Act. However, all of this being so, there is clearly no occasion to incorporate in this decree any provisions of that character. The purpose of the decree that is entered here must be to enforce the public policy of the Sherman Act, as such, rather than to implement mere private rights of persons affected by it.

If, as these independents say, and as the distributors now urge, arbitration is not intended to substitute in any way for the normal devices which would customarily be employed to enforce a decree of this character, then certainly there is no reason for this Court to deal with this matter in any way in its present decree other than to terminate the existing arbitration system.

One word of caution should perhaps be noted with respect to any attempt to create a workable judgment by selecting some provisions offered by the Government and others offered by the defendants. The decree offered by us has interdependent provisions which are necessary to make it work. For example, dissolution of joint theatre holdings among the defendants themselves, if uncontrolled judicially, might seriously weaken the efficacy of the relief granted against cross-licensing. The unqualified ban on theatre expansion and the insistence that the defendants completely eliminate themselves from the present situation where their interests are jointly held with independents, is also a necessary complement of the ban on cross-licensing. It is apparent from the defendants' proposed judgment, which offers no plan for actually disposing of any theatre interests, but provides that they may either buy out or sell to the independent interest, or retain the status quo, that they contemplate a stalemate in most of the situations where they are now in partnership with independents. This Court, of course has no power to compel any independent to sell his interest or buy a defendant's interest, and all the defendants would have to do in those situations where the independent declined to sell or buy at a price agreeable to them, under their proposal, would be to sit back and inform the Court that no dissolution was possible at the end of whatever period is set for their completion.

Now, we are here primarily to expedite the entry of this judgment, whatever it may be, and unless the Court wishes to question me further now, I think the best thing to do now is to sit down.

Judge Bright: I have one question to ask you, Mr. Wright. It was proposed here yesterday that this competitive bidding system be eliminated entirely, and that the other injunctive provisions of the decree would take care of whatever evil may now exist in the industry. What do you think of that?

Mr. Wright: We think the other injunctive provisions are plainly inadequate to take care of evils found by the Court, and we think the Court's opinion quite clearly reflected that point of view when it suggested competitive bidding as an alternative to divorcement, at least to be tried until found wanting.

Judge Bright: Well, do you care to specify in which respects it is inadequate, the other injunctive provisions?

Mr. Wright: Well, in general all that those provisions do—now I am referring to the other injunctive provisions advocated by the defendants——

Judge Bright: Indicated by the opinion.

Mr. Wright: Well, the opinion did not, as I understand it, set limits on the injunctive relief which might be granted. As I understood the opinion, the only relief which was flatly rejected at this time was divorcement, and I suppose we are really here to decide what form of injunctive provisions should go into effect.

(4000)

Now we have proposed this affirmative injunctive provision prohibiting joint use of defendants' theatre outlets by each other. So that we say is a provision which does attack this unlawful power at its base, and would be, in our view, an effective provision.

Now all of the other provisions merely relate to the form of licensing procedure that is to be used in the future, and Unlawful clearances. You have not only enjoined us from that; you have prescribed the methods by which reasonable clearance are to be determined.

Those and master agreements. You have enjoined us from that.

Block booking. You have enjoined us from that.

You said nothing about runs, but if the time comes when your Honors want to consider any alternative to this competitive bidding plan I think my colleague, Mr. Whitney Seymour, has a suggestion to make that would cure any possible suggestion of evil as to the creation of runs.

But the point of what I am saying is: We challenge the right of the Government to come in here and talk about destroying this monopoly, which to them means just the destruction of a great business, as though we had been found guilty, really, of an octopus-like monopoly which was strangling business and trade and called for such radical uprooting as a court would feel it could give despite the misery caused because of the seriousness of the offenses and their widespread nature. We have been found guilty of doing just those four things. You have enjoined us from doing that.

He suggests that those arbitration provisions—and he actually charges us with that in his brief—that we put in these arbitration provisions to escape the consequences of violation of your Honor's decree.

I don't believe that counsel for the Government of the United States should say a thing like that when there isn't a word in our proposed decree that makes arbitration a substitute for either contempt or treble damage suits, or anything else.

Mr. Wright: Why is it in the decree, Judge?

Mr. Proskauer: I will tell you why it is in the decree, but first I would like you to be man enough to say that what I have said is true.

I hear no answer.

That question that counsel puts to me——

Judge Hand: I don't see from what I know about the case and from the argument of either of you that this arrangement of arbitration affects the Government at all. Of course they can accept it or reject it. They have said, and we really put it in because all sides said, that it had worked so splendidly and that it had been a great advantage to have that tribunal. It does not get rid of the proponents of the decree. It does not get rid of treble damage suits; it was never intended to.
(4008)

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, we accept everything you said. My heat was occasioned because of the charge of working subterfuge on this Court.

Judge Hand: I know, but there is no answer in the world to what I have said. Of course they don't have to stipulate anything if they don't want to, and nobody does. We made that plain in our opinion. We thought you all regarded it as an advantage to dispose of things without multiple litigation.

Judge Proskauer: That is the spirit in which we considered it, your Honor, exactly that.

Judge Goddard: Judge Proskauer, you don't take the position that if the parties to a controversy resort to arbitration that that grants immunity, do you?

Mr. Proskauer: Certainly not. We repudiate that completely.

Judge Goddard: I thought that from what you said.

Mr. Proskauer: What we resent is that we are charged with having taken that position.
(4009)
Now that leads me to the end of what I want to say.

Your Honors have said in this opinion "That it does not follow that we should break up the exhibition business, root and branch. Such total divestiture would be injurious," and I don't read on. But the Government seeks divestiture despite all the showing that was made on this trial and the showing that has been made to your Honors and the decision that has been made by your Honors, and they come in with a provision founded in nothing in the opinion which enjoins us from licensing pictures to one another for ten years, and if there was ever one thing that everybody connected with this industry who would be candid and honest would agree on, it would be that such a provision amounts to complete divestiture.

I am answering the question that Judge Bright put to Mr. Wright.

My people estimate that if we in our theatres, Warner Bros. in their theatres, could not buy any pictures of any one of the other majors that we would be closed 65—is that the figure?

A Voice: Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: —approximately 65 per cent of the time.

This record is replete with testimony, in the inter- (4010) rogatories and from these various documents, of the number of pictures produced, the number that are required to run a firstclass theatre in the city, and this proposal which Mr. Wright and Judge Thurman Arnold take out of thin air amounts to this: You can keep your theatres, but you can starve with them. We won't let you have the same right which anybody else has to go and buy pictures from Paramount or Fox or RKO.

Why not? We have not been found to be guilty of any monopolization with them. And if the considerations which move your Honors to deny Mr. Wright's claim of divorcement are sound, as we believe they are, those same considerations must move you to strike down or where it has been asked for for the first time in this case this particular injunctive relief, which is a slow death—even worse than the immediate decapitation with which he threatened us. It is impossible, your Honors, for any one of these defendants to continue theatre ownership successfully under any such decree and there isn't the slightest occasion for it.

Judge Hand: These people yesterday said that this system, this competitive bidding system, would leave them worse off than they are now because the major defendants would always be able to outbid—I infer that is their argument—and always get the pictures. Have you any comment to make on that argument?

The other objections they made may be more or less serious. They are just as serious to you as they are to them, and just as serious to everybody else as they are to them, that is, the technical administrative objections that they urged. I considered that they might be troublesome. I do not imagine that they are insuperable.

What does the trade, so far as your knowledge goes, outside of these protests that we heard in argument yesterday by a limited number of associations, think of some system of competitive bidding? We never said it should be put on an auction block anyway.

Mr. Proskauer: No, of course not. I have never referred to it as auction block.

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: I have to answer your question less directly than I am accustomed to answering questions from the bench. We do not like this system that your Honors proposed. We think it is going to impose very great burdens on us. I am not here to defend or to attack it but——

(4012)

Judge Hand: Let me interrupt you at this point: It is hard to have any other system without what amounts to conditional licensing.

Mr. Proskauer: I was going to come directly to your Honor's question. I do not think there is any force, personally, in the objections to it that you mentioned in your question, because, for a defendant in this case to overbid for the purpose of crushing out a competitor, being the kind of thing that A. & P. was found guilty of in that suit, is clearly a violation of the law, and I suppose a clause could be formulated which would enjoin us from doing the thing that we would never dream of doing. I think that that particular criticism on it is one that can be readily met. The other difficulties, as I told you, are very great and that is why, when we left court here yesterday, we all sat in a huddle, almost all afternoon, trying to formulate some suggestion that might be made to your Honors, if you asked us for it, to tighten this thing up if you drop this competitive bidding system.

We are not asking you to drop it but if you do drop it, we believe, as I have suggested, that if you read your own opinion and find out just what it is you are trying to stop, you will find you have stopped it dehors if perhaps you (4013) would add complete protection on the subject of runs as well as of clearance, and this whole job is done, you have an industry then that is functioning.

But answering your question directly, I think you can enjoin us from unreasonable overbidding.

Judge Goddard: Judge Proskauer, you said that if the Court asked for it you had some suggestions to make with respect to auction bidding?

Mr. Proskauer: No.

Judge Goddard: You did not?

Mr. Proskauer; Not, not with respect——

Judge Goddard: Or some alternative.

Mr. Proskauer: No, it was simply a tightening up, a tightening up of the provisions which enabled me answer Judge Bright's question in the affirmative, that the injunctive provisions of this decree gave all the relief which the Court's opinion called for, and when we come to that, I am going to ask Mr. Seymour to take it over because he has been the father of it.

Mr. Arnold: I simply rise to correct the record. I think it is important that it be clear what my client's position is. Judge Proskauer inadvertently, and no doubt because he connects me with schemes which he considers uneconomic, says that we supported, Judge Thurman Arnold and Mr.

(4014)
Wright supported the Government's section on the limited cross-licensing. I want to make it clear that I said yesterday, and I say again today, that the Association which I represent is split on every subject except one and that is competitive bidding will never work under the proposal made by the Court, nor should we be compelled to come in and competitively bid against each other under the proposal made by the Government. That is our position, and I want it perfectly clear.
(4015)

Mr. Proskauer: I am very glad to have the correction and to proclaim that for once on this occasion Judge Arnold has put himself into a good economic situation.

Mr. Arnold: I put myself into an economic situation where my clients differ.

Mr. Davis: I want to say that having gone through this trial and sat on this side of the table, my sympathy goes out to Mr. Arnold in the fact that his clients are split. It is a phenomena which throughout this case has not been at all unusual.

I only want to say one or two things in concurrence with what Judge Proskauer has said. I think practically all of us on this side of the table regard competitive bidding as an experiment, doubtful in outcome and difficult in administration, but we are all quite willing to accept the judgment of the Court in that particular and do our best to implement it. I think I would be somewhat lacking in candor if I did not say that the attack made upon it yesterday had somewhat shaken my own confidence in the final outcome. But we are not here—and I repeat this—we are not here to retry this case. We are not here appealing for a modification of the Court's opinion, and I beg the Court to believe that in the draft decree which we have submitted we have made an earnest and as intelligent an effort as we are capable of to implement the Court's opinion and put it down in writing.

My brother Wright does not accept that either as to motive or as to result; and as I sat here this morning studying his aspect from the rear, it occurred to me that the only trouble with my brother Wright is that he is out of his century. He belongs back in the time of Cato the Censor, when every speech which he delivered in the Roman Senate closed with the words "Carthago delenda est"; and every remark my brother Wright makes in this case closes with the remark there must be divorcement. He begins with a major premise which finds no support in the record—there is a monopoly—and not varying at all from that major premise, he reaches the inevitable conclusion there must be divorcement. And I respectfully submit, however that may exhibit the great virtue of consistency, it is at this particular point in this case very little assistance either to the Court or to counsel.

Now we shall discuss, if your Honors so please, in due rotation, clauses of the decree that deal with divorcement, but I say now that the striking dissimilarity between the Government's draft and ours—I said "divorcement", I meant competitive bidding—the striking dissimilarity is that the Government says in effect there shall be competitive bidding, period; make what you will of it; do the best you can with it. That I respectfully submit is not a decree appropriate to this case, and we have undertaken to foreshadow and outline as best we can the machinery by which this system is to be put in operation. Our machinery may not be the best; it may not be perfect. Suggestions may be made by which it can be improved, but the decree must be vocal on that question if it is to amount to a decree at all by which the conduct of these parties can be guided.

But mounting of the general declaration that there must be competitive bidding, the Government proceeds further and says there must not be competitive bidding, however, between the major defendants at the bar. I respectfully submit, having in mind the fact that the purpose of the Sherman Law is to promote and not limit competition, I respectfully submit that that is the most bizarre proposal that has ever been made in an antitrust case. It is not a proposal to enlarge the market or free it; it is a proposal to restrict it. It is not a proposal to multiply the purchaser of any commodity, it is a proposal to limit them.

Here, for instance, is Loew's, Incorporated, with 131 theatres out of 18,000. It is proposed to remove from the market of Loew's Incorporated, 3000 theatres, and those the (4018) best. Here is Loew's producing eight and a fraction per cent, and distributing, of all the films produced. It is proposed to deny to Loew's the right to market those films in 3000 theatres, and those the best out of the entire 18,000. And that is supposed to be the protection, the enlargement, the increase of competition under the Sherman Act.

Now I submit that such a non sequitur as that has never been seriously proposed in any litigation of this character, and it falls by its own weight.

I think whatever else I have to say I will reserve in the course of the discussion of the decree.

Judge Hand: Do the other defendants wish to be heard?

Mr. Proskauer: We would like to know your Honor's pleasure as to how to take up this decree.

Judge Hand: How about the findings?

Mr. Caskey: We have those too, your Honor. They are submitted in the blue volume, and we would prefer to take them up after the discussion of the decree, because some of these findings will be dependent upon the indication of the Court's opinion in the decree.

Judge Hand: It is your desire to take up the decree first?

Mr. Caskey: Yes. We would like to take it up section by section.

(4019)

Judge Hand: Well, I do not know that we have any objection to that.

Mr. Cooke: If the Court please, I would like to be heard on behalf of Universal. I do not know that this is the appropriate time. I do not like to step into the middle of this fight.

Judge Hand: Go ahead if you would like to be heard.

Mr. Cooke: We take this position, your Honor: first in respect of competitive bidding, we agree that much has been said here about the ineffectiveness of competitive bidding and its unworkability. We go further than that and we say that the imposition of such a regulatory system is not within the judicial power, that these provisions are legislative and not within the powers of an equity court.

Now, in that connection——

Mr. Davis: Mr. Cooke, would it be possible for you to either raise your voice or turn around?

Mr. Cooke: Yes, surely, I will step back and speak from here.

In the Bausch & Lomb case, the Supreme Court was presented with this problem: the Government on appeal asked that the Softlite Company file with the District Court a written instrument providing that it will sell its product without discrimination to any person offering to pay cash therefor, and in refusing to include such provision the Supreme Court said:

> "Congress has been liberal in enacting remedies to enforce the anti-monopoly statutes but in no instance has it indicated an intention to interefere with ordinary commercial practices. In a business such as Softlite, which deals in a specialty of a luxury or near luxury character, the right to select its customers may well be the most essential factor in the maintenance of the highest standards of service."

Now certainly that is a fortiori true of this business, and therefore I approach this problem with the idea that there is very serious doubt of the legality of any competitive bidding system, as to whether the District Courts are authorized to impose such a system.

Now, Section 4 of the Sherman Act confers jurisdiction upon the District Courts to prevent and restrain violations of the Act. That is to suppress any unlawful practices and to take such measures as may be appropriate to prevent their occurrence. We do not conceive that that means that a straightjacket can be put upon a business as to the manner in which it does business; that it may be required to sell to the highest bidder and not to old customers; that it may be required to sell theatre by theatre and picture by picture—and the latter is very important to us on account of the manner in which we offer our pictures.

Much has been said in this case about block booking, but there is nothing in the record, no evidence that we condition the sale of one picture upon the sale of another. We do offer our pictures as a whole, the entire season's product. Some of those who spoke to exhibitors yesterday said that that was what they wanted with reasonable rejection rights. Now the Government has conceded in one of its findings that it has proposed, that we do give considerable freedom in permitting rejection.

Now I speak of a competitive bidding system first because it seems to me that the Court's entire opinion depends upon the validity of it and its effectiveness depends entirely on whether that is in or out. Now if it is out, all you have is an injunction against certain trade practices, and we are enjoined with the others against participating in those trade practices.

Of course, if we are going to adhere to the letter of the opinion and not going to consider any changes therein, why I have not very much to say, but it seems to me that there are very serious differences of opinion here.

Now take the matter of clearance: the major defendants are satisfied with the consent decree standards that the Court has outlined in its opinion. The Government says that the public interest is what should control. I take a very different position, and I think the Supreme Court takes a very different position. In the General Electric case, and in the more recent General Talking Pictures case in 1938, it seems to me that the Supreme Court very clearly laid down the rule that should be applied. It may not be so easy to apply it to particular facts, but the rule is perfectly clear; and it is not a rule that has relation to the public interest, because the public interest has been satisfied in the issuance of copyright or patent, as the case may be. That is this—and I quote from the General Electric case—and this relates to an admission price specification:

> "If the patentee goes further and licenses the selling of the articles, may he limit the selling by limiting the method of sale and the price? We think he may do so provided the conditions of sale are normally and reasonably adapted to secure pecuniary reward for the patentee's monopoly."

Now that to my mind is the test of whether any of these restrictions are valid. The Supreme Court has said it very deliberately in 1938 again in the General Talking Pictures case, has reiterated. Are the conditions reasonably related to the reward we are entitled to secure under our copyright. And it seems to me, if that be true, that the very foundations of this whole scheme are undermined.

Now the reason I mention that is that our basic position is this: our basic position is that the root of the evils in this industry are not the trade practices; that if there are any evils in this industry, the root is entirely elsewhere. We take the position that any one of these trade practices are perfectly legal in and of themselves. Of course, if they are used in the course of a conspiracy to dominate the exhibition business, or to restrain trade, they can greatly aggravate the effects of such a conspiracy, there is no question about that, and they should be enjoined. But we take the position that we should not be enjoined. We take the position that the relief to be accorded should be along the lines of that in the Crescent case.

In the Crescent case the Supreme Court said franchises were perfectly legal in and of themselves, but it enjoined the franchises in that particular case, the continuance of them. That is, it enjoined the monopolistic aggregation that had secured those franchises. It did not enjoin the distributors. In fact, it put that question completely to one side. (4024)

Now I find myself very much in agreement with the Government on a number of very basic things here. For instance, this question of a collective monopoly: of course there can be a collective monopoly. Peculiarly enough, it happened that a day before your Honors' decision came down on June 10th, that the Supreme Court in the American Tobacco case held precisely that, as the Government says, and I was in that case, and therefore I have a strong consciousness of it.

Then there is this matter of discrimination. I confess I am attacking the roots of your Honors' opinion because I feel that I have to, and I have submitted a memorandum to your Honors which displays my views in that connection. On discrimination, so far as I know, there is no law, no antitrust law against discrimination. Your Honors have said in the opinion on the basis of the Interstate Circuit case, that any discriminating contract is unlawful. Now I do not understand the Interstate Circuit case to have held that at all. What I understand the Interstate Circuit case to have held is this, that if a distributor uses his copyrights for the benefit of an exhibitor, in the interests of an exhibitor, an exhibition chain, and for its purposes, that that goes outside of what he is permitted to do under his copyright; but he is not using it for the benefit of himself to secure the reward to which he is entitled under his monopoly, but he is using it for the benefit of the exhibition chain, and therefore such agreements are unlawful. In that case the distributors had a certain given course of business, and Mr. O'Donnell on behalf of these exhibition chains down there, occupying a very dominating position, came along and demanded that they change their practices with respect to the subsequent run exhibitors; that they require them to increase their prices to 25 cents and not double feature. And therefore when the distributors acquiesced they did so not for their own purposes but for the purposes of exhibitors.

Now the only antitrust law I know against discrimination is the Robinson-Patman Act, and that concerns only commodities of like kind and quality.

Your Honors have said that we are in this case for one reason, one outstanding reason, that we treated in our license contracts the major defendants in respect of certain, what I consider, subordinate matters, better than we did independents.

Now I don't think there is any way in this record of testing whether we did or not, because the most important element is the film rentals we get from a contract, and there is no evidence in this record that I know of that permits you to in any comprehensive way determine whether or contracts with the major defendants were more favorable over all than with the independents. But aside from that I take the position that we have the right to discriminate between customers. Much more important the Supreme Court has taken that position in the Colgate and the Raymond Brothers cases which were cited with approval in the Bausch & Lomb case a few years ago. And that is aside from copyright.

Now under copyright the Supreme Court said in the Interstate Circuit case that an exclusive license was perfectly legal. Now how can anything be more discriminatory than that, more discriminatory than an exclusive license, where anybody who does not get the license is barred from getting the picture? And if that is true, and if that is perfectly legal—and that is flatly what the Supreme Court said—I cannot see how discrimination in the minor matters on our part and on the part of a non-monopolistic distributor can possibly be illegal in and of itself.

Judge Bright: Mr. Cooke, aren't you reargiuing the case instead of helping us to settle these findings?

(4027)

Mr. Cooke: That is why I suggested this might not be an appropriate time for me to speak. But I believe that with competitive bidding out, if it is to go out,—there seems to be some question about it,—the entire balance of your Honor's opinion is upset.

Judge Bright: You don't think it ought to go out, is that the idea?

Mr. Cooke: That competitive bidding ought to go out?

Judge Bright: You don't think it ought to go out?

Mr. Cooke: I do, Judge Bright, yes.

Judge Bright: With the rest of the opinion.

Mr. Cooke: If by that your Honor means that I categorically disagree with the fact as found in the opinion that the root in the evil in this industry is the trade practices, yes.

Judge Bright: You said it was somewhere else. Where else was it?

Mr. Cooke: I am not taking a position on that. I think that is a matter for the Court.

Judge Hand: You think there are no evils or don't you want to take a position on that?

Mr. Proskauer: They are such little ones.

Mr. Cooke: I think the Government is amply able to take care of itself on that. My basic position is this: that in respect of each of these practices—clearance, admission prices, and run, and these subordinate discriminations—that in respect of each one of them they are legal in and of themselves.

(4028)

Now I think, Mr. Wright, if I understood him correctly, said that road shows—fixing of prices for road shows would be all right with distributors who did not own theatres. He conceded that. He conceded a difference between the two.

Now one of your Honors asked yesterday what was the difference in principle between fixing a price for a road show and fixing a price for any other picture. I don't see any difference in principle, and I think the position that we have a right to specify that there be no change in price during a run, that we have to negotiate our film rentals on the basis of admission prices as they are. We have nothing to do with admission prices. We have no theatres. We negotiate our licenses on the basis of things as they are.

Judge Bright: You specify admission prices in your licenses, don't you?

Mr. Cooke: Surely.

Judge Bright: Then why do you say you have nothing to do with them?

Mr. Cooke: Nothing to do with fixing them in the first (4029)
instance.

Judge Hand: You say in your licenses they must be maintained.

Mr. Cooke: That is right, sir, and we claim under the General Electric case that we have a continuing interest in that situation and therefore we have a right to require that those admission prices be maintained.

Judge Hand: All those are serious arguments, but you seem to have one position—that we were wrong about everything whatever rights other parties such as the Government and the major defendants may have had.
(4030)

Mr. Cooke: No, I do not take that position, your Honor. I take the position in respect of certain things, yes: in respect of clearance, I take that position; in respect of discrimination, I take that position; in respect of there cannot be a collective monopoly, I take that position—most emphatically!

In view of the Supreme Court decision in the Tobacco case, I do not see how your Honors can say there cannot be a collective monopoly. I am not saying this is; I am saying there certainly can be. And, goodness, the Supreme Court in the American Tobacco case held that American Tobacco, Reynolds and Liggett-Myers were a collective monopoly in so many words.

Mr. Davis: In connection with the purchasing of tobacco.

Mr. Cooke: In the purchase and sale of tobacco.

Mr. Davis: Of concerted action in the sale of tobacco.

Mr. Cooke: Certainly, fixing prices in buying and selling of tobacco.

Judge Hand: Of course, if you have concerted action, there is no question but what you can have it among a number of people and then you can say that is a collective monopoly. Nobody ever yet has denied that in this case, that I know of. They have merely denied the fact in certain aspects of the evidence.

Mr. Cooke: That is a different matter.

Universal, as your Honors know, is unwilling to enter into any arbitration system. The reasons for that are not arbitrary or capricious in the lease. They are very sound and substantial. We do not regard the matters that the major defendants have suggested for arbitration are at all appropriate for arbitration by reason of the way we look at clearance, for example. We do not think it is appropriate for arbitration to determine whether a specific clearance granted has a reasonable relation to our award of licensing our pictures. We do not think that block booking is a proper subject for arbitration here, as the major defendants have said, particularly as there is no evidence in this case of any conditioning of the sale of one picture upon another.

Judge Hand: We have said in our opinion that if you do not consent to it, it could not be done in any way that would affect you no matter who else consented, so you are over that bridge. You need not argue about it, if you don't propose to have anything to do with it.

Mr. Cooke: I just wanted to advise your Honors we had some reasons for it other than being perfectly arbitrary about it.

(4032)

Judge Goddard: What are your reasons, Mr. Cooke?

Mr. Cooke: In respect of clearance?

Judge Goddard: No, in respect of arbitration.

Mr. Cooke: As I say, I think clearance is totally inappropriate to arbitration because—— Judge Goddard: Now would you determine the controversy, go into court each time?

Mr. Cooke: Well, the consent decree standards for the arbitration of clearance I regard as completely inappropriate because I do not think they have any bearing on what the problem is. The problem is whether we have imposed a restriction which is reasonably related to our award. It is a perfectly selfish test. We have been granted a copyright here.

Judge Goddard: You mean that there will be no controversies?

Mr. Cooke: Well, I suppose there will be controversies, yes.

Judge Goddard: How would you dispose of them?

Mr. Cooke: They ought to be disposed of by the Court.

Judge Goddard: In other words, you suggest they go to court each time instead of arbitration, which here has worked out pretty well?

(4033)

Mr. Cooke: We disagree completely with the basis for arbitration in respect of clearance.

Judge Goddard: I think I understand.

Judge Hand: He disagrees with the standards.

Mr. Cooke: I disagree with the standards. They are objective standards that have no relation to the test that the Supreme Court has laid down, reasonable relation to our award under the copyright monopoly.

Then, I haven't heard much said about it, I understand the Government to take the position that this competitive bidding system will not be workable without arbitration. How could the Court supervise an elaborate bidding system? And it seems to me that that knocks out the props from under the whole thing. If you are not going to have arbitration, because the Government won't consent to it or we won't consent to it, how can you operate your competitive bidding system?

There seems to be a lot of sentiment to the effect that it won't work, aside from its legality.

I think the Associated Press case—I think what Mr. Justice Douglas said in the concurring opinion in that case as to what was decided—shows very clearly it is a very serious question here as to whether a court can require non-discrimination as to all applicants. In that case they required the by-laws to be amended so that papers in the position of the Chicago Sun would not be prejudiced in their application for admision by taking into consideration the fact that they were competing with the Chicago Tribune, but they expressly stopped short of ordering the Associated Press to supply its news to all non-members without discrimination. Surely the Associated Press is more of a quasi public institution than the motion picture business is or Universal is.

The Government has here, and this is perhaps more appropriate when we consider the decrees, the Government has a provision here that we offer non-exclusive runs at reasonable rates. At reasonable rates! Well, in the Hartford Empire case that is precisely what the Supreme Court said that they would not do, require future patents to be licensed at reasonable rates. Precisely! Although they did require patents that had been used in the conspiracy to restrain trade to be licensed at reasonable rates.

Judge Bright: Is there anything in our opinion that said that a copyright owner was not entitled to a reasonable reward for his copyright?

Mr. Cooke: No, I don't think so, your Honor.

Judge Bright: Wasn't your client involved in the toils (4035)
of this case because you acted in concert with the others, in agreeing upon certain clearances and fixing certain admission prices and things of that character?

Mr. Cooke: I want to come to that.

Judge Bright: Isn't that the fact?

Mr. Cooke: That is the last subject which I shall deal with.

There have been two recent cases in the Supreme Court, the Falcone case and the Direct Sales case that point out very clearly the test to be applied in a situation like this.

Our basic position is that we dealt with the market as we found it. Of course we sold our pictures to the major defendants. They were our market or our best customers, unquestionably. What were we to do, were we to treat them as outcasts? Were we not entitled to deal with them? Certainly not. And the mere fact——

Judge Bright: We tried to tell you what you should not do and what you should do.

Mr. Cooke: In the Falcone case the Supreme Court held very clearly that merely dealing with somebody who was engaged in an unlawful enterprise, and I am assuming for the purpose of argument that, as your Honors have found, the major defendants were so engaged, for the purpose of argument only, that one had the right to deal with persons engaged in an unlawful enterprise.

In that case certain dealers in cans, sugar and yeast had sold the same to bootleggers, and they knew they were bootleggers, as Mr. Justice Stone pointed out. The convictions were reversed, nevertheless, above. And in the case, two or three years later, the Direct Sales case, the Supreme Court pointed out the differentiation, that when one joins mind and hand with co-conspirators or actively cooperated in promoting their conspiracy, he was guilty of participation therein; but if he simply dealt with the members of a conspiracy, sold goods to them, even though he knew about it, that he was not guilty.

I can see, your Honors having heard this evidence in the case and applying those tests, that you might determine the thing one way or the other, but it is our position that that is all we did, that in making a master agreement with one of the major defendants, that we were guilty of no violation of the law; that there is nothing inherently unlawful about a master agreement; there is nothing inherently unlawful about a franchise; that it all depends on the way it is used.

In the Crescent case, when they dissolved the exhibition chain, the Supreme Court ordered it dissolved and it ordered an injunction against franchises but it did not enjoin those who had granted the franchises. It enjoined those who had received the franchises, that is, the monopolistic chain.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, may I make a suggestion? I understood the defendants had proposed to discuss the decree first, but, in the light of what your Honor said, Judge Hand, in response to Mr. Cooke on this question of a collective monopoly, it seems to me that there is a basic finding offered by the defendants on which they rely, arising out of an apparent contradiction in the opinion, which has to be resolved, really, before there can be any intelligent discussion of what kind of decree is going to be entered.

I understood you to say just now that you had no doubt that there was collective action, the parties to such action could be aggregated for the purpose of estimating their monopoly position. And the argument of the defendants, which, as I recall, was their argument at the trial, was simply that they could not be aggregated because they had not engaged in concerted action.

As I understand the Court's opinion, there is an express finding that these five major defendants have engaged in concerted action, a conspiracy, if you please, to fix prices, to control clearances and runs, in which the three minor defendants were also participants.

The defendants have submitted as a finding a statement which appears later in the opinion that you could not aggregate the businesses of these major defendants for the purpose of determining whether or not they had an exhibition monopoly, and they have also submitted, I believe, a finding to the effect——

Judge Bright: Do you know what finding that was, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Further along, near the end.

Judge Bright: Of course, that, if it is anything, is some kind of conclusion of law.

Mr. Wright: Yes, obviously a conclusion of law but nevertheless probably a significant one in determining what ought to be done here.

Mr. Davis: Finding No. 90 on page 31, Judge Bright.

Judge Hand: Of course, we did hear the argument and disposed a great many of them as to the findings in the Aluminum case, as I remember, right in open court, and then we went in and very quickly disposed of the rest. This is vastly more complicated and I am just wondering. I would really like the serious views of all the lawyers here in this case whether we are going to get anywhere by going through this thing in open court with a lot of talk, finding by finding; whether we haven't got to do it in our own chambers by ourselves? It was really my idea that the most fruitful discussion that could be had here was, really, along some general, pivotal lines, as to which we doubtless would make no decision on, and then go at it when we could get to it. Of course, I cannot get to it in a minute because I just had a week in the Circuit Court of Appeals with 19 cases, and I am trying to get my memoranda ready to report for a conference, but I am perfectly willing to give now a couple of days if it is necessary for this purpose, if it does any good to anybody.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, for my part I agree with your Honor that you have the materials here for a paragraph by paragraph analysis which can obviously be much better made in your chambers than taken by a two-day discussion here. I wanted only to discuss, and my intention was only to discuss such aspects of the case as I thought were basic.

Judge Hand: I think that is very important to do—anything like that—and we don't pretend to overrule anybody that wants to discuss anything here within reasonable limits. But do you think it will do any good to proceed here in detail about these findings?

Mr. Seymour: May it please the Court, I think our suggestion would be, if it is agreeable to your Honors, that we proceed to take up the proposed decree, paragraph by paragraph. When we conclude that I think some general observations on our side about the findings will be our best contribution to your Honors, because the form in which the findings are set up indicate why the Government's findings are inappropriate and the findings which are not included at all in the Government's findings are appropriate to support your Honors' conclusions. But I think if we go to the findings first you would avoid an unnecessary amount of detail. And there are some findings that have not been proposed yet by us and will not be proposed until we have had a chance to see your Honors' views about details of the decree. I think what we would feel was important was to be able to take up with your Honors section by section the contrast in the decrees so that you would have the reasons for the various provisions we propose. Then I think it would be unnecessary to discuss in any detail the findings. I believe if we spend the balance of the day and such additional time as your Honors want taking up the decree section by section that you will find that this form in which we have submitted the findings takes care of the subject.

While that is a little reverse of your Honor's suggested procedure, I think it will save your Honors' time.

Judge Hand: Of course, we should say, without committing ourselves in the least—and we are not committed in our own interior consciousness in the least—we were moved, all of us, by this large attack by so-called independents, many of whom were independents, on the competitive bidding system.

Mr. Seymour: I think a discussion of that will come up in a detailed discussion of the decree because we have made a proposal about that and the Government has made a proposal about it. We can thrash that out when we come to that section. But there are many differences between the decrees (4042) between Mr. Wright's and ours. He has set up his decree to catch us everywhere he can and thinks that the aggregate of those traps or those provisions that he has made for tearing off our clothes will pretty well take the theatres away. We have beyond all set up our decree to meet the specific conclusions of relief that your Honors have suggested. I think if we could turn to that section by section it will be helpful to your Honors.

Judge Hand: I guess we better do that.

Mr. Proskauer: Supplementing what Mr. Seymour has said, if you take this decree up section by section I don't think we will bother you with too much detail. It is the simplest way of getting at the fundamentals that you want discussed.

Mr. Caskey: If the Court is familiar with the structure——

Judge Bright: Mr. Caskey, I think you wrote a letter to us in which you attached a sheet—just one single sheet, in which you mentioned the fundamental differences between the Government's and the proposed decree of the defendants.

Mr. Caskey: No, that was between the two different drafts that were submitted. There is no such——

Judge Bright: Oh, between the drafts.

Mr. Caskey: There is no such succinct memorandum.

(4043)

Judge Goddard: The drafts of October 7th and October 15th.

Mr. Caskey: That is right.

Judge Goddard: This yellow one is the final——

Mr. Caskey: This yellow one is the final document and the blue is the final findings. The differences in the preamble primarily relate to the Government's insertion of the specification of violation of Sections 1 and 2 in a very general manner. The opinion refers to Section 2 of the decree only in one place—Section 2 of the Act, rather, only in one place—and we respectfully submit that this generality should not be adopted; that the language which we have proposed should be used.

Remember that the only place that the opinion referred to Section 2 of the Act is in connection with the fixing of first-run minimum admission prices as tending to make as many of the 10,000 potential customers go to the first-run theatre rather than to the subsequent-run theatres.

That is the only reference in the opinion to Section 2.

Judge Hand: You want that out?

Mr. Caskey: Yes, we want the language that we violated the Sherman Act without the specification of sections and without the generality of their language which states that every violation is a violation both of Section 1 and Section 2, which of course is not the case and is not the opinion.

(4044)

Judge Hand: In what did we hold that they violated Section 2?

Mr. Caskey: The only reference was with respect to minimum admission prices where you gave the example where you said if there were 10,000 potential customers in a community that the fixing of the first-run minimum admission price tended to divert or attract more of those customers to the first-run theatre and thereby to enhance its monopoly.

Judge Hand: We will underscore that. All right. We have underscored it.

Mr. Caskey: Thank you, Judge.

Paragraph I of both decrees relate to production. The basic difference is that we ask that there be added to the decree the words which would show that this Court finds that the complaint is dismissed as against the defendants as to all claims based upon their acts as producers, whether as individuals or in conjunction with others, and then these additional words "are based upon any alleged violation of the Sherman Act with respect to production including all claims based upon alleged acts of discrimination against producers." (4045)

That is to make the decree as substantially in harmony with the amended petition and to grant us a decree as to production which is in harmony with the amended petition which is dismissed.

Judge Hand: I don't know that Mr. Wright would have any objection to that.

Mr. Wright: We have a very strenuous objection to that.

Mr. Caskey: I wasn't so hopeful.

Judge Hand: Well, what is your objection to that?

Mr. Wright: Well, if the Court please, our proposed judgment states exactly what the Court found.

Judge Hand: Never mind that. What is your objection to this?

Mr. Wright: Well, that it goes beyond what the truth is as disclosed by the record. The fact that the control of distribution which these defendants possess and jointly exercised, and their control over exhibition is in itself a discrimination against independent production. There was never any surrender by us of any claim that their restrictive practices did have the effect of restricting the opportunities of producers to market their product in a free market. Now those restraints exist by virtue of distribution practices that were found here.

(4046)

Mr. Caskey: I disavow that—I disavow any such intention.

Judge Bright: You do what?

Mr. Caskey: I say we disavow any such intention to cover the matters——

Judge Bright: It was discussed on the trial when we were talking about whether there was a claim against a producer. I think Mr. Wright made the statement then——

Mr. Caskey: Yes, sir.

Judge Bright: Mr. Wright then made a rather blanket admission that the producers——

Mr. Wright: I think if your Honor will read the minutes you will find that I pointed out at that time that we did hold that the distribution practices of these defendants and their exhibition monopolies in and of themselves did restrict unreasonably the opportunity of independent producers to find a market notwithstanding that the activities of these defendants as producers had not been such as to constitute a monopoly or a restraint of trade.

Judge Bright: I was wondering if you didn't later make a broader admission than that.

Mr. Wright: I think that we did not. If somebody could point to it I think we can discuss that. But clearly our position is as we stated in the memorandum that this is not a correct—this admission is not justified by anything that we conceded or that the Court found or that it could find from the record before it.

Mr. Caskey: I think it is clearly covered by the concession which was made and is also covered by the failure of proof. The supplemental complaint here and the petition have many pages of charges with respect to production, and this is a summary or shorthand condensation of them and is intended, as it says, to relate to the activities of the defendants with respect to production.

II in both decrees relates to distribution activities.

In the preamble we have suggested that there be added after the enumeration of the parties the words which are found in the last and next to the last lines, "one acting as a distributor of features", and we make the corresponding suggestion when we come to Section III which relates to exhibition.

These defendants act as both distributors—it is on page 13——

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Caskey: We want to make it perfectly clear, if your Honors please. The purpose is obvious, to separate the distribution activities of the defendants from their activities as (4048) exhibitors, and to prevent any claim of a contention that a license agreement between, let us say, Twentieth Century-Fox and Loew's, Inc. was an agreement between two distributors.

Judge Bright: Any objection, Mr. Wright? Is there any objection to the insertion of the words "when acting as a distributor or when acting as a distributor"?

Mr. Wright: If that is the purpose we certainly do object to it. Our contention has been all along that when that happens they are making agreements between two distributors and between two exhibitors, that that is the effect of such an agreement.

Mr. Proskauer: Another way of arguing for divorcement.

Mr. Caskey: 1 deals with fixing the minimum admission price. We took the liberty of departing from the Court's language which read "either in writing or through a committee or through arbitration or upon the happening of any event or otherwise," to insert the more general and comprehensive language "in any manner or by any means" in our proposal, which is on the fifth line of our proposal.

We are enjoined from fixing the minimum admission price in any manner or by any means.

Judge Bright: Any objection to that, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: If you prefer that language to the language (4049) in your opinion, we see no reason why you should not, up to that point. That is not all of his provision.

Mr. Caskey: We next provide in recognition of the factual situation that every exhibitor has an admission price, that clearance is involved, and that——

Judge Hand: Wait a minute.

Judge Bright: Which subdivision are you talking about?

Mr. Caskey: The next proviso in 1, that we may require an exhibitor to state the admission prices fixed by him which he intends to charge during the exhibition of the particular picture licensed.

Now, that has two bases: First, it has the basis of clearance. The Court recognized in its opinion that the amount of clearance which might be granted was in part determined by the admission prices of the theatre having the prior-run and the subsequent-run, provided those admission prices were set, fixed, or determined by the exhibitor.

Mr. Proskauer: Page 62 of the opinion.

Mr. Caskey: Page 62 of the decree part of the opinion.

The Court also recognized that in licensing pictures we were entitled to measure our film rental by a percentage of the gross receipts, and in its opinion at page 32 indicated (4050) that the distributor would be inclined to seek out the higher-priced theatres for the earlier runs.

Now, for those reasons we think that the decree should frankly provide that the offer to license by the exhibitor should state the admission price which he proposes to charge.

Mr. Proskauer: That we may ask him to state that.

Mr. Caskey: That we may ask him to state that. The price in the case of competitive bidding is obviously a necessary factor, as 40 per cent of 30 cents probably will be greater than 40 per cent of 25 cents. At any rate, it is a factor which the distributor must know and evaluate.

Now, I realize that it can be said that we are getting close to an agreement, but the Court recognized that difference, recognized that there is a difference between an agreement which carries with it the very definite penalties which were carried in the forms of license agreement used until the trial of this case, and the statement by the exhibitor of what he intends to charge as a basis both for fixing picture clearance and as a basis for evaluating competing bids from competing exhibitors. We think it absolutely necessary and we think it should be, frankly, included in the opinion.

Judge Goddard: The decree.

(4051)

Mr. Caskey: The decree, yes.

I assume there will be objection.

Judge Bright: You have already objected to that earlier this morning, haven't you?

Mr. Wright: I think so. I will elaborate. We object to it, and I think we would prefer no anti-price-fixing provision whatsoever rather than the one with the qualification that these people have included in it.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, I am intrigued by the suggestion he would prefer no price-fixing agreement. That form of argument is, I think, not conducive to the creation of a good decree. Let us see what we are talking about. We are enjoined from price-fixing. The Court has recognized in its opinion that the price which a theatre normally charges —and where we all know every theatre has its regular price —is a factor in two aspects. I am not saying this; the Court said it. The Court said it was a factor in fixing clearance and it was a factor in determining who was the high bidder. All we are asking to put in is a proviso—that the injunction against price-fixing does not deter us from getting that information from an exhibitor as to what his normal rate is that he is going to charge, and that is all.

Judge Bright: Suppose an exhibitor on one of these bids submitted a price and said, "I will give you 40 per cent of my gross, and I will guarantee that my gross will not be less than $40,000," and not specifying his admission prices, why wouldn't that answer your problem?
(4051a)
(4052)

Mr. Proskauer: It would, but suppose he said, "I don't want to give you a minimum. I am telling you I am going to charge 30 cents," and I say, "All right, I will charge you"——

Judge Bright: No, he does not specify, he does not agree to any admission price; the exhibitor does not agree to any admission price, but he says, "I will pay you 40 per cent of my gross which will not be less than $40,000."

Mr. Proskauer: We would take it in a minute if the figures are right.

Judge Goddard: That does not take care of the clearance.

Mr. Proskauer: It does not take care of the normal situation.

Let us take a man who won't be quite as outspoken as our new exhibitor, Judge Bright, is, and he comes along and says, "I am willing to give you 40 per cent but I am not going to give you any maximum or any minimum." And another man says, "I will give you 40 per cent." All we ask is that in determining which is the highest bidder we are not deemed guilty of contempt of court when we ask a man who offers us 40 per cent, "What are you going to charge?" That is all there is to it.

Judge Bright: Aren't you right back in the same position that you were in the beginning of this litigation? That is an implied suggestion to him that if he wants what he wants he will have to charge a certain admission price.

Mr. Proskauer: No. At the beginning of this litigation we actually made a contract with him that he had to charge so much. Now all we are asking is that we ascertain from this man how much he intends to charge.

Judge Bright: What is the fundamental difference? What is the fundamental difference between the two methods?

Mr. Proskauer: The fundamental difference is that we are not in the first instance doing the thing that your Honor said was improper.

Judge Hand: That is true but you are suggesting to the man that if he does not charge enough he won't get the picture.

Mr. Proskauer: Let me put it another way: Of course we are suggesting that, but suppose you had a picture, and you were working under this form of decree that is suggested here, that you are going to give it to the highest bidder, and two men offered you 40 per cent each, and they had exactly the same number of seats in their theatres, and you wanted to determine which was the biggest bid—don't you think that you would like to know how much each man proposed to charge?

Judge Bright: Well, I have been wondering whether your inquiry as to what his admission price would be would not have implied on the end of your question the words "or else."

Mr. Proskauer: Everything can be viewed from that point of view to some extent, but I would like to ask you, if I may, how you would answer my question. You are charged with the obligation of giving a picture to the highest bidder, acting reasonably, and two men come in and offer you 40 per cent, what is the harm in saying to that man, "What else?" He has not got any right to the picture. We are going to give it to the highest bidder.

Judge Bright: The only way I could answer it, Judge Proskauer, is to say that it seems to me you are right back where you started from on this question of admission prices.

Mr. Proskauer: Well, I do not know quite what the significance of that is. We are not asking that man to charge a given price. We are not asking him to agree to anything.

Judge Bright: You said you did not before, that you did not ask them, but that the exhibitor always fixed the price.

Mr. Proskauer: But our agreement—in most instances the exhibitor agrees to it. I am going to make a personal admission. I do not think this is so important for this reason, that everybody knows what every theatre charges. This is a uniformity here which comes not from any price-fixing but from just the fact that Broadway theatres charge $3.50 or $4.00, or whatever it is, and certain types of theatres charges 50 cents, and certain ones charge 75, so we know that. But we do not want to go to jail for asking a question when we are trying to determine which is the highest bidder.
(4055)

Judge Bright: You could easily keep out of jail by not asking the question.

Mr. Proskauer: I am not so sure. Suppose that we did not ask the question, and the fellow comes in and says, "I was the highest bidder because I was going to charge a dollar and the other fellow as only going to charge 50 cents, and therefore you violated the decree."

Judge Hand: You can get rid of some of these complexities by having no percentage arrangements, having a flat rental.

Mr. Proskauer: Yes, we could also get rid of it by our jumping in the river and putting a torch to all our theatres.

Judge Goddard: And the question of admission price comes up in the question of clearance.

Mr. Proskauer: Yes. Your Honor has said here in words that the admission price should be taken into account in (4056)
determining clearance. Why can't we ask, "What is your admission price?"

Mr. Caskey: It seems to me that we have got to stick to the position that the vice is the agreement. Now, it is perfectly true that the testimony in this case was that in making the agreement, that the initiative came from the exhibitor and that usually the agreement was simply the incorporation of the exhibitor's practice which had been the case with respect to pictures which had been sold to be exhibited at a higher admission price than currently enjoyed. But as Judge Bright has said, once we get past the point of who originated the figure, there was an agreement coupled with elaborate provisions for its enforcement.

Judge Bright: Well, there is some comment on that subject in our opinion.

Mr. Caskey: Yes, exactly.

Now, in any competitive situation it is impossible, it seems to me, looking at it realistically, to ignore the fact th admission prices are going to be discussed, and that is why we put this thing right out in the open rather than deal with it in any covert manner. If you have two exhibitors who really want the picture, and who are urging upon the distributors their desirability as the potential buyer, it is inevitable on a suggestion by one that "My price will be (4057) higher, your film rental will be higher, because my gross receipts at the box office will be higher because of what I charge multiplied by the number of people that come in."

Mr. Proskauer: Might I suggest that we leave this with the thought that your Honors will read those portions of your opinion that are quoted in our first column here on page 2, and give us what you think is right under that opinion. That is what we want. We want to conform with that opinion.

Judge Hand: We will adjourn until 2.15.

(Recess to 2.15 p.m.)

(4058)

AFTERNOON SESSION

Mr. Caskey: Section 2 deals with clearances granted by concert. We have eliminated from the plaintiff's proposal the words "or any exhibitor," so that the prohibition reads "From concertedly agreeing with each other to maintain a system of clearance."

The reason for the suggested elimination is that any clearance involves an agreement between a distributor and an exhibitor and we do not feel that this Court meant to condemn a situation such as we might have, for example, in Boston where Fox licensed its pictures first run to a theatre operated by Paramount and granted it a clearance of, say, 28 days over other theatres in Boston. That we understood this Court to say was perfectly lawful.

If another distributor, let us say, Warner Bros., licensed some of their pictures to the same theatre operated by Paramount and grant, as they may well, the same clearance in number of days with respect to that picture, we do not think it falls within any condemnation of this Court.

Therefore, we suggest respectfully that the words by the plaintiff "or with any exhibitor" should be eliminated and that the prohibition be against a concerted action among the defendants, as distributors.

Likewise, in the footnote, we have inserted in our proposals the words "which are essentially agreed upon between the distributor and its licensee." We think that the essence of clearance is agreement, and that for there to be a clearance arrangement or agreement there must be a contract. To be sure, that contract can be implied from the circumstances, it can be spelled out from conduct. We are not arguing that the only type of clearance in a contract is that that is embodied in a license agreement. We have accepted the Court's suggestion that the word usually stipulated in the contract be taken, but we do say that it is of the essence that this decree recognize that there is no clearance unless there is an agreement.

(4059)

Let me illustrate: in New York we license the Music Hall to play a picture and we grant it 14 days' clearance over all theatres in the five counties comprising New York City. That, clearly, is clearance, and if we were to violate it, we would be subject to action by the exhibitor. It is also perfectly true that when we have a picture which we intend to exhibit in the Music Hall we will not exhibit that picture, let us say, in Poughkeepsie or in Princton, New Jersey, until it has commenced or completed its exhibition in the Music Hall, because, acting as a distributor, in a desire to attract as many people to the theatres in Princeton and in Poughkeepsie as possible, we want the benefit of the advertising and the exploitation from the Music Hall, but that has nothing to do with clearance; there is no clearance between the Music Hall in New York and the theatre in Poughkeepsie. There may be an interval of time, but that interval of time is not dictated by any agreement with the first-run exhibitor in New York but is dependent solely upon the business judgment of the distributor.

Those are the two important points in this section.

Judge Bright: What do you say about those, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: The question that he raises here in the defendants' proposed form of judgment is how many agreements it takes before you have one that is illegal. Now, when he says here "from concertedly agreeing with each other," I take it the word "concertedly", while taken from the opinion in that connection is an obvious redundancy——

Mr. Proskauer: Is what?

Mr. Wright: An obvious redundancy. If these defendants agree with each other to maintain—if two or more agree with each other to maintain a system of clearance, I take it that that agreement is clearly illegal.

Now, he further has a qualification that he insists that that system also be maintained by clearances which are expressed in terms of other agreements in addition to the agreement among the defendants themselves to maintain the system. Now, that clearly imposes another requirement there that is wholly unnecessary, to reach an illegal result. When you have two or more of these people agreeing with each other to maintain a system of clearance, you have exactly the kind of concerted action with respect to clearance that this Court condemned in this opinion, and that has always been condemned.

Now, as to our inclusion of a condemnation of an agreement between one of these defendants and an exhibitor not a party to the suit to maintain a system of clearance, it seems to us that that was clearly contemplated in the quoted section of your opinion which is set forth here.

It says, "The defendants should be enjoined from concertedly agreeing to maintain a system of clearances as among themselves or with other exhibitors."

Now, clearly, we think that is what should be done, and that is what we have done.

Mr. Bright: Would that prohibit an agreement between any one of these distributors and any single exhibitor?

Mr. Wright: I should not suppose so. The qualification there is supplied by the phrase "maintain a system of clearances."

Now, I take it a system of clearances involves something more than simply an agreement between a single distributor and a single exhibitor as to what the clearance shall be for a particular theatre.

Judge Bright: Well, might it be said that such agreements between a single distributor and a single exhibitor over a period of years would be a system as to that theatre?

Mr. Wright: Well, what you would have to have to amount to the maintenance of a system—my answer to that would be no. I would think that the word "system" to me implies something more than mere continuity in time; it implies clearance as a device to maintain a particular competitive situation or a competitive position with respect to a group of other theatres in the area over a substantial period of time, but clearly a mere agreement between a distributor and an exhibitor as to what the clearance should be at any particular time for a particular theatre would not, in my view, be the maintenance of a system.

(4063)

Mr. Davis: If the Court please, I just want to seize one of the rare opportunities for agreeing with brother Wright. I agree with him that the adverb in "from concertedly agreeing" is redundant, and I would suggest that it should be "from agreeing with each other to maintain a concerted system of clearances."

Mr. Proskauer: Did I understand Mr. Wright—I couldn't hear him—to agree that in any event Warner as a distributor could agree with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer as a distributor for a particular clearance? Am I right?

Mr. Wright: When you are talking about Warner and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, we disagree with that. We say that any agreement of that kind between them is unlawful.

Mr. Proskauer: Let's see what you said. That we should be enjoined: "from concertedly agreeing to maintain a system of clearances as among ourselves or with other exhibitors," and you also said that "the foregoing has been directed to the validity of clearance provisions resulting from separate negotiations between individual distributors and exhibitors, and, as stated, we believe their reasonable use to be lawful."

And then you go on, "It is here claimed by plaintiff, however, that the distributor-defendants have acted in concert in the formation of a uniform system of clearances for the theatres to which they license their films and that the exhibitor-defendants have assisted in creating and have acquiesced in this system. This we find to be the case and hold in violation of the Sherman Act."

That we want enjoined—at least we ask in this decree to be enjoined. But we don't want to be enjoined from doing what your Honors expressly say is reasonable and lawful and reasonable and lawful for any distributor whether he is a defendant or not, to agree on a particular clearance with any exhibitor, whether he is a defendant or not.

Now the difficulty with Mr. Wright's words as he now interprets them is this: "from agreeing with each other or with any exhibitors or distributors to maintain a system of clearances," and he says that if we do the particular thing that you said we could do with each other, one of us with another, that that violates this injunction about maintaining a system of clearances. That means that Mr. Wright's provision as he interprets it now——

Mr. Wright: Excuse me, Judge; we didn't say that at all. I said we regard such an agreement as illegal. We don't regard it as reached by this particular provision. This provision I take it was intended to reach the kind of agreements you might make generally, not the agreements you make with each other.

(4065)

Mr. Proskauer: Now I ask you the question, would you regard it as a violation of your language if Warner as a distributor made a clearance agreement with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer as an exhibitor?

Mr. Wright: No, I do not think that would fall within this particular provision.

Judge Bright: In a particular theatre.

Mr. Proskauer: In a particular theatre as to a particular picture. What is the answer?

Mr. Wright: The answer is no, that it would not fall within this provision although we would regard it as illegal because in essence under our contention—which I will develop later—these people do not have the capacity to act separately as distributors and exhibitors for the purpose of avoiding liability. I think in Sherman Act cases you have got to consider them as units and view them in that respect.

Judge Proskauer: We are threatened with an injunction here which is very serious for us.

Judge Bright: Could the language be clarified so as to make an exception of these things? Mr. Wright says in his opinion it would not violate this particular provision. I have in mind, say, for instance, that Warner wanted to license a picture to the Paramount Theatre in this city, and they give them a 14-day clearance, would that be a violation of the injunction?

(4066)

Mr. Wright: That would only violate the provision that we have in our form of judgment, the prohibition against cross-licensing. I don't see that it is involved here.

The Court (Judge Bright): He says that would violate a later provision in the proposed plaintiff's judgment in regard to cross-licensing.

Mr. Proskauer: We have discussed that already. I have said all I want to say on cross-licensing. I am talking about clearance as such.

Judge Bright: I have been wondering, to avoid any possible dispute about it, whether there could be a proviso put in this clause to provide for the possibility of a motion to punish for contempt.

Mr. Caskey: We would like to have it. The thing that we are trying to get at, Judge Bright, is that there are eight of us who are defendants in this case and there are three other companies engaged in licensing motion pictures with us. Inevitably a similarity develops. We license to the Metropolitan Theatre in Boston clearance of 28 days. It is very difficult to think up any reason why another distributor should do it on 27 days or 29 days or 30 days or 14 days. And this tendency toward similarity or the comparison of contracts with a single exhibitor made by different distributors ought not to come within the condemnation unless the Court also finds, as it has found in this case, that there was a concert of action or agreement among distributors. That of course has been condemned by the Court and should be enjoined. But what we are fearful of, and it may be that your proviso will cure it, is to be charged with having acted in concert when all we have done is to make an agreement with an exhibitor which in and of itself is fair and reasonable but which is similar, even identical, with other agreements made with other distributors dealing in the same market.

Judge Hand: Well, what Mr. Davis said was "from agreeing with each other to maintain a concerted system of clearances."

Mr. Caskey: I think that would do it.

Judge Hand: I don't see why that doesn't do it. I don't see why the defendants should object.

Mr. Wright: I don't see why they would either.

Judge Hand: Do you object to it?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

(4068)
You introduce a double element of concerted action there. I take it, if there is agreement between the defendants to maintain a system of clearances, that takes it outside the law. What you mean by an agreement to maintain a concerted system, I frankly don't know, but I assume you mean something more or different from merely the agreement to maintain a system; and if that is what you ask, then I think that the provision is much less restrictive than what your opinion said you would grant.

Mr. Raftery: Of course, your Honors, speaking only for United Artists, I am more worried about this provision because of a remark Judge Bright made. The finding of concerted action in this case was based primarily on similarities that arose from everybody selling the same way, that is, with the same clearance. If we start off and make an isolated deal, as Mr. Caskey suggests, and those isolated deals keep piling up and up and up, we run up against the same concerted action again, based entirely on similarity, unless there is something else added to the finding that will protect the distributor, who is purely a distributor and has no theatre affiliations. That same similarity of action is no proof of concerted action.

I do not see how we, sitting over here, can at all be protected by any decree of this character. We lead right back again to the proposition that, after three or four years of operation, you will have a series of similarities, you will have a series of individuals making complaints that the same clearance is given to the same theatre, and so forth and so forth, and we are right back where we started at the commencement of this litigation.

We are very fearful of any decree of this character, that is, we are inclined almost to say you might as well outlaw clearance entirely, which we feel is an absolute essential in the operation of our business as to put in anything as limited as that just suggested by Mr. Davis.

Unless there is a protection on similarity, I think all of us are going to be open to contempt proceedings perpetually during the operation of this decree.

Mr. Davis: I am disappointed, I thought at least Mr. Wright and I had got together, particularly getting together not only in defense of the English language, but in defense of the Court's opinion.

The thing which is forbidden is, shall agree with each other to maintain not merely a system, but a system of clearances which has been agreed upon in concept between. That is the sort of thing which I think the Court was striking at and that is the sort of thing which I think, by the mere substitution of an adjective for an adverb, putting the adjective where it belongs, accomplishes the result.
(4070)

Judge Bright: Do you object to their changing the definition of clearance in the footnote?

Mr. Wright: Yes, we do. We think that adds an additional element of agreement that is not necessarily present.

As I understand the purpose of this provision, it is not to give protection to the defendants. The purpose is to break up an existing system of clearances. You cannot break that up, it seems to me, by using a provision which simply would permit these people to go right on maintaining the clearances they have maintained before in slightly different form. That, in our view, accomplishes nothing.

Mr. Caskey: Section 3, subdivision 3 of our proposal, and 3, 4 and 5 of the plaintiff's deal with clearance when granted by an individual distributor to a single exhibitor. Our 3 is to be contrasted, in the first instance, with the plaintiff's 4.

The principal difference is that we have added to our 3 the suggestion that the clearance shall not be in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted or the licensor's revenue from the exhibition of the feature licensed. We think there is a duality of interest. Both the licensee and the licensor have an interest which may be protected and that the decree should so recite. We have set forth, by exact quotation, the factors which are listed in the Court's opinion. The last one——

Judge Hand: I think there can be no doubt about the propriety of putting in that (a).

Judge Goddard: Don't you think admission prices there merely do what we have set out to prevent? Doesn't this allow a control of admission prices?

Mr. Caskey: Sir, I do not think it allows control. I think it merely sets the standard. For example, it seems to me that there is no control in granting a license of 28 days between a first-run theatre that charges 75 cents——

Judge Goddard: My point, Mr. Caskey, is this: the defendants are stipulating as to admission prices, but if you bring in control of admission prices under the guise of considering clearance and runs, you bring it in and make it one of the conditions that they shall maintain a certain admission price. Isn't that indirectly doing what we said you should not do?

Mr. Caskey: What I am trying to say, sir, is this: Let me analogize it by a ladder, and I put the highest rung in the same position as a first-run theatre. Now, I take it that there will be nothing illegal in saying that if the first run in a city charges 75 cents, and if this exhibitor with whom you are proposing to make a license only wants to charge 10 cents, that his playing position, that is, the length of the clearance, should be down towards the bottom of the ladder, but that if he wants to charge 50 cents, we are not to be allowed to play much closer to the first run. I cannot see how that violates the prohibition of your opinion as to fixing prices. The determination would be on the exhibitor.

Judge Goddard: Doesn't the exhibitor stipulate to maintain an admission price in connection with clearance? He does not get the clearance, he does not get the run, as I understand it, unless he sticks to a certain admission price.

Mr. Caskey: No, I should think not. I should think that clearly under your opinion the control, the enforcement would be gone. If you make a contract in contemplation that the first run shall change 75 cents, and that there shall be 28 days between it and second run, and that the second run is charging and will charge 40 cents, and then, for reasons best known to the exhibitor, instead of charging 40 cents, he charges 15 cents, that there would be no remedy. I gather that that that would be prohibited, that there would be to that extent freedom.

Now, whether there would be a misrepresentation, a breach of warranty——

Judge Hand: That is true, there is that technical difference.

Mr. Caskey: Well, it is substantial.

Judge Hand: What was bothering us was whether a man faced with this kind of a situation would not in effect do about the same thing, get or lose his license based on what he was going to charge.

(4073)

Mr. Caskey: Judge, this apparently is not the first time that you have "rassled" with this problem because——

Judge Hand: Oh no.

Mr. Caskey: —because at page 32 you said:

> "The temptations to the distributor to use clearance grants to force a theatre to raise its prices and thus to qualify for prior runs having less clearance over it, and more clearance over competitors are nevertheless obvious and the courts or arbitration board should guard that this is not done. Clearance should be granted on the basis of theatre conditions which the exhibitor creates, not the distributor. The line to be drawn is indeed indistinct, but its existence is no less real."

Judge Hand: That is true. We thrashed it all out once. It always bothered me more or less.

Mr. Caskey: It is inherent, your Honor, because of the fact that none of us can change, that each theatre does have an admission price. That is the basic cause of the problem, the fact that there is an admission price for the admission of the public to the theatre.

Mr. Proskauer: Let us see if we can't clarify this a little, your Honors, in this way: We are being enjoined—I will use the short expression—unreasonable clearance, being enjoined from going into clearance in excess of what is reasonably necessary to do certain things. Now, clearance is necessary for the protection of the licensee; it is necessary for our protection of our revenue, and your Honors wrote, and we all agreed, that in determining what is the reasonable clearance as between two theatres, the admission price of the theatre as set by the exhibitor, not as set by us, is involved. All we have done is to recite that fact as one of the elements that are taken into consideration.

Now, Judge Goddard's question was whether in that way we would not possibly indirectly affect a man's admission price. My answer to that is that factually it is not so, because these theatres we all know set their own prices, and those prices remain continuously the same year in and year out. But——

Judge Hand: Well, that is not the whole story, because you had a system of licenses, and you insisted that they maintain them, in some cases insisted on the price itself, and you had a lot to do with it.

Mr. Proskauer: We are being enjoined from that, your Honor.

Judge Hand: I know you are, but the result of that is that you have got a standard of price—which may be (4075).
changed, to be sure—that had been created by yourselves in part.

Mr. Proskauer: And we are being enjoined from doing it.

Now, when two theatres come to us and discuss clearance, the most natural thing in the world for a theatre charging a dollar is to say, "We are a dollar theatre; we ought to have a clearance over a 50-cent theatre." And all we are doing is to use your Honor's own language, that that is one factor to be taken into account, and I think the answer to Judge Goddard's inquiry is taken from your own language, Judge Hand.

Judge Hand: I think that is absolutely true, but we are talking about the settlement of the decree, which is capable of certain modifications, my own language and other things.

Mr. Proskauer: Well, I can defend your language, your Honor.

Judge Hand: Well, that is all right, that is all I want you to do, not to say that it is my language.

Mr. Proskauer: I defend it because it is absolutely correct, factually. After we have been enjoined from fixing prices over and above all else, it remains true that an admission price which is fixed by an exhibitor without compulsion from us, free of compulsion from us, is a factor which he (4076) wants us to take into account in fixing his clearance and which we want to take into account in fixing his clearance. It is not determinative. It is one element that is factually relevant to be taken into account.

Judge Goddard: Judge Proskauer, don't we end up with a contract under which the exhibitor is committed to maintain that price?

Mr. Proskauer: No, not at all, because that exhibitor after we fix his clearance on the basis of his normal admission price is free to change it or do anything he pleases with it.

Judge Goddard: Is that right? After you have granted clearance at a certain admission price, he would have a right to change it?

Mr. Proskauer: Certainly, there is no contract about it; he has got a right to do it.

Judge Goddard: That does not appear in the contract?

Mr. Proskauer: Not at all.

Judge Hand: No, no, that is perfectly true. That is technically sound, as Judge Proskauer says. It may be more than technically sound. But on the other hand it may be true that he cannot get another license if he misbehaves. (4077)

Mr. Proskauer: But this follows, if he reduces his admission price when he comes to get another clearance we do not say, "You should not have reduced your admission price," but we do say that in fixing his new clearance we should take into account what your Honors have said is a reasonable factor,—"What is the admission price that you are normally charging?"

You can't isolate these things into water-tight compartments. Here is a factor that if you ask any exhibitor around whether he did not think that his admission price was a relevant factor in determining his clearance, he would say, why, of course, everybody would agree to that. I do not think you would get an exhibitor in America to say that that was not a fair element to take into account. That is all we are asking you to do. We are not asking you to sanction any contract to fix the price; we are asking you to sanction our right to prescribe the price; we are merely saying that when we are hailed up for contempt, for fixing an unreasonable clearance, or when we go before an arbitration board——

Judge Goddard: That they may take that into account?

Mr. Proskauer: That they may take that into account.

Judge Goddard: There is no contract to maintain that (4078) price?

Mr. Proskauer: Absolutely none, your Honor.

Mr. Caskey: Section (g) of our proposed III is identical with plaintiff's proposed III. Both of them are statements of what the Appeal Board held some five years ago.

The provision that the plaintiff has inserted as No. V is that we cannot enforce any existing agreement which grants clearance to any theatre not its own in which a defendant owns a direct or indirect financial interest of more than 5 per cent.

Now, if this is read in the light of the further prohibition that we cannot license the theatre at all, this becomes immaterial. That is, as I understand it, the Government is also proposing later on that in the future we may not license Loew's or Warner's or Paramount or RKO theatres, and this would strike down any existing clearance in an existing license agreement. There is nothing in this Court's opinion that justifies any such thing. This Court made no differentiation between license agreement between a distributor which owned theatres when it dealt with the other affiliated theatres.

Now, if it has reference to something other than existing license agreements, if it has reference to some vague under- (4079) lying arrangement or understanding, we say that no such agreement or understanding was proved, and, of course, it should not be enjoined.

We respectfully submit that this section should not be incorporated in any proposed decree.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, what we are concerned with here is much more than any matter of verbiage. This is a controversy over these clearance provisions, and this controversy is basic to what was actually found here. Now, as we understand the Court's finding as expressed in its opinion, what you found was a conspiracy among all of these defendants to fix theatre admission prices, minimum theatre admission prices which was implemented by a system to fix uniform runs and clearances as well; that is, a conspiracy to fix not only the theatre admission prices by provisions in the license but to control the price differentials in the various competitive areas by uniform systems of run and clearance. So what you came out with was a system in which admission prices were geared to particular theatres rather than to the particular picture that was played at the theatre.

Now, that system having been found to be illegal, we take it that the purpose of any injunctive provisions that are directed at clearance is to terminate that system.

Now, normally in cases where a licensing system of that character has been fund to be illegal, such as, for example, the Interstate Circuit case, the Ethyl Gasoline case, the court simply voids those licenses, strikes down the whole licensing system; but what is apparently sought to be done here is to preserve the substance of the system, even some of the actual agreements themselves, subject to some adjustment, presumably, by sparating legal from illegal parts of the agreement.

Now, in no Sherman Act case that I know anything about have illegal agreements been dealt with in that way. There are situations where an agreement otherwise legal has been stricken down becar-e associated with illegal conspiracy, but in no case may agreements which have been a part, used as a part of such conspiracy, be saved as legal even in part; and for that reason I think the relief outlined in the opinion is inadequate to actually do what the findings suggested ought to be done.

Now, as I understand the theory behind the Court's adoption of the test of legality, that it should be such clearance as was reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted, was that that was the means of transferring control of clearance from the distributor defendants who had so wilfully abused it, used it illegally, to the exhibitors, so that the exhibitors would be the ones who would fix whatever clearance terms should prevail for their individual benefit rather than fixing by the distributors of such terms for their benefit.

Now, these people have added a qualification which I do not believe was even mentioned in the analysis, in which they have simply added as an alternative to protection of the licensee in the run granted, protection of the licensor.

Now, it seems to me——

Judge Goddard: Where is that, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: That appears in the third line of their paragraph 3.

Judge Hand: Page 4?

Mr. Wright: Page 4, their paragraph 3, third line.

Mr. Caskey: I mentioned that specifically.

Mr. Wright: Now, that was picked right out of the air. There was nothing in your Honors' opinion that suggested any such test whatsoever. The test advocated there was the licensees' protection, and it had to be that test if you were going to accomplish the objective of transferring the control of the protection out of the hands of the defendants who had abused it into that of a non-party. Now, the result of that qualification——

Judge Hand: You say we should have out "or" down to——

Mr. Wright: What we say you should have, if the Court please—we object to using the defendants' proposed form of judgment as the basic one on which you operate. Now, we have given you a form of judgment which is set forth here which we say takes care of the matter properly, and that represents what we think should be done rather than any surgical operation you may perform on their proposals. But (4083)
I am simply pointing out the things in their proposal which we think tend to frustrate the purpose of the decree. And number one——

Judge Hand: You say that anyway that clause is bad, I suppose.

Mr. Wright: Number one, that qualification "or the licensors' revenue" clearly defeats the purpose of the relief and is a qualification which is not derivable from your opinion.

If there should be no clearance between theatres in substantial competition, as the Court said, clearly such clearance ought to be enjoined flatly as we have done it in our paragraph 3. There is no point in listing there as one of a series of factors which somebody might want to consider in determining whether there was a violation. If they have done that, that is a violation right there.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Wright, can I ask you this: You provide "from granting any clearance between theatres not in substantial competition." Well, I suppose that a theatre, we will say, down in Louisiana, would not be in substantial competition with Radio Music Hall here. Would you say that there could be no clearance between those theatres?

Mr. Wright: Why, quite obviously.

Judge Goddard: Well, the consequences of that—have you thought them through?
(4084)

Mr. Wright: I don't suppose that anybody has suggested that there ought to be clearance in favor of the Radio City Music Hall over some theatre in another part of the country.

Judge Goddard: Well, I think it has been suggested. It is a very great benefit to a play to make a big success in New York so that they build up a reputation before putting it in some third-rate theatre in the South.

Mr. Wright: Well, I don't understand that that is the kind of benefit we are dealing with here. I suppose that if your theory of clearance is that it is only such clearance as is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted, it must be that what you have in mind is his particular competition in exhibiting the picture. Now as far as I know, there is no conceivable competition between a theatre in New York and one in New Orleans in exhibiting the same picture, and I would assume, of course, that the words "substantial competition" would mean theatres which were drawing from substantially the same areas—the same potential patrons.

Judge Bright: This 5 of your proposed judgment, did you have any particular target that you were shooting at in that or is that just a——

Mr. Wright: The target that we were shooting at is the clearance agreements now in effect in favor of affiliated theatres. We say clearly that those ought to be knocked out in toto without further inquiry. They are part of this illegal system that was erected to protect the revenues of those theatres. We see no occasion in any circumstances to continue any such clearance in effect.

Now as to this list of factors, the Court has put its finger immediately on the vice in the admission price factor; I won't discuss that any further. But the other factors are essential factors which seem to us to simply leave the question of who gets the clearance, what clearance, and how much, up to the distributor's unrestricted business judgment.

Now it has been proven in the past that the exercise of that judgment was not—never has been sufficient to make the system operate in a reasonable manner, and we don't think that it is advisable to attempt to freeze by any list of factors that you might recite, the determination of under what circumstances the clearance has exceeded that necessary to give the reasonable protection that your Honors said you thought the licensees ought to have. We think the only satisfactory test that can be adopted there is simply your straight test of such standards as you can get out of decided Sherman

Act cases dealing with that kind of restriction. That doctrine is in a state of flux right now. It may and probably will continue to change. This standard that is set up here should not be phrased in such a way as to immunize this practice from such changes.

Mr. Caskey: If your Honors please, the language at the top of 3, "or the licensor's revenue from the exhibition of the feature licenses" I previously called your attention to. It is directly deductible from your opinion at page 32, which is printed on page 3. Having printed it on page 3, we did not print it on page 4. And we think that it is directly in harmony with the decision of the Supreme Court in the Interstate case, and in line with the argument this morning that a clearance may be granted which is necessary to protect the licensor from the reasonable enjoyment of his copyright monopoly.

Now the reason for setting these factors out is to have some kind of objective and reviewable and understandable standard. There isn't any freeze because we have inserted the words "among others" and the whole decree of course is subject to modification in the event that this flux that Mr. Wright talks about, comes into existence.

Nothing could be clearer than the unfairness of taking this G: "There should be no clearance between theatres not (4087)
in substantial competition"—and isolating it. This Lust Arbitration we had yesterday illustrates that. The arbitrator says there is no substantial competition. The Appeal Board says there is. But a great many things, including location, including population, including policies of operation go into that ultimate determination. And that is why we assume that the Court correctly listed it among the factors and why we have done it. If it were a question of black and white possibly it would be all right to isolate it. But it isn't. It is a question of very dark gray—an almost imperceptible difference of shade.

It is a question of ultimate judgment of the person who has to review it.

Now it may be correct theoretically that there should be no objective standards, and that the whole determination should be the bargain between the distributor and the exhibitor as to what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted and to protect the copyrighted monopoly. But as Judge Goddard so clearly pointed out this morning, we do have controversies about these things and if we are to have controversies and to have any effective method of determining them, we must have reasonable objective standards. These standards more or less are from the consent decree. They worked well. They furnished a basis for a determination by independent men that have been generally accepted and we urge the Court to include that in this decree.

Judge Goddard: You agree that there should be no clearance between these theatres not in substantial competition but you ask that these factors should be taken into consideration in determining whether there is competition.

Mr. Caskey: That is what the Supreme Court said in the matter of Colgate, which was decided in 1941 and which we have decided to live up to if your Honors please.

Mr. Cooke: May I say a word about 3 and 5? I don't agree with the Government or with the major defendants. I agree with the Government to this extent, that in the memorandum submitted to your Honors it said that there was a substantial body of law which should govern the restrictions in this situation, that is, matters like clearance. I very definitely agree on that. The Government didn't name any of the cases and I would like to inquire whether or not among those cases is not the General Electric case and the General Talking Pictures case, and whether or not the test in those cases as laid down by the Supreme Court was not the reasonable relationship of the restriction imposed to the licensor's reward. I think it is inescapable that those cases (4089) must be intended in the substantial body of law referred to by the Government.

Now this which is proposed by the major defendants, frankly, I think it is absurd. They propose that no clearance shall be granted in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect both the licensee's interest and the licensor's interest. In other words, at the same time you protect the interests of both parties to the bargain, and I just don't see how it can possibly be done. One is antagonistic to the other. The only test is that of reasonable relationship to the reward under the copyright monopoly.

Now secondly, as to 5, the doing away with existing clearances, I think the Government is clearly right that clearances in existing agreements should be done away with as granted by any parties to this conspiracy. I think that was exactly what was held in the Hartford Empire case. The patents which were used in connection with the unlawful restraint of trade.

Mr. Proskauer: Will your Honors hear me in an endeavor to clarify this thing? There are three questions involved here. The first is the inclusion of the phrase "or the licensor's revenue from the exhibition of the feature license." That finds its root in these words in your opinion: (4090)

> "A distributor will naturally tend to grant a subsequent run to and clearance over a theatre for which the owner of his own volition sets a low admission price, for the distributor will be inclined to seek out the higher price theatres first where the revenue is likely to be greater and consequently in case of licenses on a percentage basis where a percentage share will be higher. This, however, would seem the inevitable result of the competition for the distributor's films from theatres which are the larger or better equipped, and for which higher admission prices may therefore be charged by their operators. Such competition the lower priced theatre must be prepared to meet, or else be content with subsequent runs and grants of clearance over them."

That is what your Honors wrote. That is indubitably true. It has its basis in the record, and my friend on my right is clearly in error when he says that there is an inconsistency in any of these two factors.

The clause that we put in is a recognition to which we are entitled in fact and under your Honor's opinion, that in determining whether a license is in excess of what is reasonable, one of the factors to be taken into account is not only the protection of the licensee's run, but also whether reasonable and not for the purpose of discrimination or monopoly. We gave a due regard to those factors which are set forth in your Honor's opinion. That is our defense of the insertion of that phrase.

The next question which arises is whether we should list factors for the purpose of guidance of ourselves, of a court on a contempt proceeding, or of arbitrators in the determination of what is the Government's injunction as they proposed from granting clearance in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted. I do not have to quote cases. I have quoted enough on my right. However, when you are subjecting people to an injunction, the violation of which is a contempt, it is certainly reasonable for them to say, not that we want to inject arbitrary standards that we have taken out of the air, but that you include the very objective standards to which you referred in your opinion, and we have quoted those objective standards verbatim. In the decreedal part we have quoted them verbatim.

All that means is that we are enjoined, as the plaintiff (4092) would have us enjoined, from granting any clearance in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted or the licensor's revenue, if you decide to include that phrase, and we merely add that, in determining what is a reasonable clearance, the following factors, among others, should be taken into consideration.

Mr. Wright says, by doing that, we seek in some devious way to avoid the effect of your Honor's opinion. We have quoted your Honor's opinion and we believe we are entitled to just that protection which your Honor's opinion gave us.

I raise my voice again against Mr. Wright's attitude in coming in here and regarding us as criminals who have done everything in the world. We have done certain wrong things and you are enjoining us from them, but that does not mean that we are to close our eyes to the practical necessities of this enormous business and to put ourselves in the position where we do not know what to rely on in determining whether we comply with an injunction restraining us from granting clearance over what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee.

The third thing is this clause which enjoins Warner Bros. from enforcing any agreement made to give clearance to a Paramount affiliate down in Charleston or some other place. (4093)
What is the assigned reason for that? That the Court found that we had an illegal system of licensing. There is no point in throwing the whole industry into chaos and confusion by saying that we cannot enforce these few existing license agreements that are now in being—you are going to suspend the effect of this judgment for some time anyway—— and there isn't the slightest practical good to anybody in arbitrarily inserting this clause.

Those are the three points involved, and we submit them to the Court.

Mr. Caskey: Defendants' proposed section 14 and the plaintiff's 6, relating to franchises, are identical.

Mr. Cooke: I would like to say a word on that. On the matter of franchises, your Honors, the provisions, of course, are identical and are in accordance with your opinion. We have submitted two findings on franchises. One is No. 23, page 8. Universal entered into franchise agreements with 727 independent exhibitors and 43 affiliated exhibitors. No. 22 deals with the purposes of these franchises, in order to create competition in the areas where the exhibitors had failed and refused to license the Universal product or exhibit the same. Universal induced persons, firms and corporations, to invest substantial sums of money in opening new theatres or in improving existing theatres and granted to these (4094) accounts deals varying from one year to five years wherein and whereby these theatres were granted an exclusive right to exhibit Universal pictures for the period of said deals in the specific theatres mentioned in the agreements and for runs listed therein, whether the deal was for one year or longer.

That illustrates, it seems to me, the vice of considering these practices illegal in and of themselves. We made 727 franchise agreements with independents, only 43 with affiliated theatres, and yet every franchise we have is to be struck down here.

Mr. Caskey: Defendants' proposed subdivision 5 enjoins the further performance of existing formula deals or master agreements and from making formula deals and master agreements in the future.

The difference between our proposal and the plaintiff's primarily is in the definition. Ours are more inclusive than the plaintiff's.

As to formula deals, we propose in footnote 6 to enjoin any agreement in which the license fee of a given feature is measured for the theatres covered by the agreement by a specified percentage of the feature's national gross. That is more inclusive than the plaintiff's, which relates only to the type of formula deal where the formula relates to a whole circuit.

(4095)

The same, in effect, as to master agreements. We have defined a master agreement as any agreement where there are not separate provisions covering the licensing of the feature for the exhibition of each picture in each theatre and not simply confined it to the so-called blanket or basket deals.

Mr. Wright: I do not think there is any difference between us with reference to formula deals.

When it comes to master agreements, there the prohibition is directed purely at an agreement which has a certain form, and as the definition says, if you have separate licenses for separate theatres—separate provisions for licensing the feature for each particular theatre, then it is all right; but the test we derived from the opinion, and which we included in our prohibition, was the question of whether or not, except for those agreements, the defendant had actually offered the film for license to competing theatres, so the effect of the agreement was not to shut off competition by individual opponents of the circuit. In that form we think the provision has some substantial meaning, and the form proposed by the defendant is a mere device which determines how you arrive at the agreement but doesn't do much more.

Mr. Caskey: That is not the intention, and, as far as we are concerned——

(4096)

Judge Hand: Are you talking about 7 now?

Mr. Caskey: I am talking about our 5 and 6 and the plaintiff's 7—in the footnotes 6 and 7.

Judge Bright: You mean your 6 and 7 and the plaintiff's 4 and 5?

Mr. Caskey: No, the plaintiff's 7 and the footnotes 4 and 5.

As far as some of us are concerned, if you take the ambiguity out of the plaintiff's 7, that is, the text 7, and there is an ambiguity, as you will see by reading it, which could be corrected by making it read "from making or further performing the existing formula deals," and going on down to the next to the last line and putting a period after "films," I think it would meet our purposes and the Government's.

Judge Hand: I don't quite get that.

Mr. Caskey: As your Honor reads the Government's 7, you will see that there is an injunction against performing certain types of agreements, except such as have been offered on a competitive basis, and then it goes on, "from making any similar agreements", and the word "similar", I think, is ambiguous. We thought you could correct that ambiguity by striking out that last clause and covering it by the two words to be inserted at the very beginning of the paragraph, so it (4097) reads, "from making or further performing any existing formula deals" and so forth.

Mr. Wright: I take it you would then have to strike out the word "existing".

Mr. Caskey: Well, you could.

Mr. Wright: "enjoined from making or further performing any existing"——

Mr. Caskey: Perfectly willing to strike it out.

Judge Hand: How would that read?

Mr. Caskey: It would read, "from making or further performing any formula deal or master agreement to which it is a party except such agreement," and then it goes on down to the very bottom, and you put a period after the word "film" and strike out the words "from making any similar agreements in the future."

Judge Bright: Would that be all right, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Raftery: The definition is going to remain the same on the master agreement?

Have you agreed on the definition of 5 and 7 remaining the same? Which is going to be the definition?

Mr. Caskey: Well, we haven't got to that.

Mr. Wright: To save argument there, we will take your definition on both.

Mr. Caskey: That is agreeable to us.

Judge Goddard: You agreed on the definition of "formula"?

(4098)

Mr. Caskey: Take our footnote 6 and our footnote 7.

Mr. Wright: I take that back. If the Court please, the master agreement definition, as I pointed out before, I think we will insist on ours, because ours, I think, defines it in terms of substance instead of form.

Mr. Raftery: We won't take his. He left out—for instance, we might sit down, where a man has five theatres, and write them all up on one sheet and attach our standard form, and we would have a separate license fee and separate clearance. In other words, you would have a separate deal on each theatre and incorporate them in one rider in order to save writing all those contracts. As I understand Mr. Wright's definition, you cannot do that; you have to write a separate contract for each situation.

Mr. Caskey: We did not understand it that way.

Mr. Raftery: That is the way I read it.

Judge Hand: I did not understand so, and I thought that is just what we said in our opinion.

Mr. Wright: I agree with your Honor. I say the thing that is controlling is the substance of the negotiation, not the form of the agreement.

Judge Hand: We have already said, and I don't think you ever disagreed with that, that they could have them in one instrument.

Mr. Raftery: It is the words "blanket deal" that I object to, because in the blanket deal you blanket five theatres in one contract. Have it on the record it doesn't mean that. I don't care what it means.

Mr. Caskey: Some of my associates have called my attention to the fact that in all of our proposal we have used the word "feature" or "features" instead of the word "films." If the Court adopts the compromise now suggested with this proposed paragraph 7, the word "films" which is carried in there twice, should be made to read "features".

As far as the two definitions are concerned, I understand we are in agreement that as to formula deals, we should use the one proposed by us and that we are indifferent as to whether our definition of master agreement or the plaintiff's is adopted, but that we all understand that if a master agreement has been negotiated in a competitive manner, that the results then may be incorporated in a single sheet of paper.

Judge Bright: Is there any dispute about the definition of "formula deal"?

Mr. Wright: No, one whatever.

Judge Bright: Are you taking No. 6?

(4100)

Judge Goddard: No. 6 footnote.

Judge Hand: Are you taking footnote No. 6 as his definition instead of yours?

Mr. Wright: That is agreeable to us, if you prefer it.

Judge Bright: It isn't our preference. I am wondering what objection you have.

Mr. Wright: None whatsoever.

Mr. Froelich: If your Honor please, subdivisions 8 and 9 of the Government's decree are the very crux of the case so far as Columbia is concerned, and Universal, because while we do not find the words "block booking" used in either of these two decrees, block booking was an issue and block booking was struck down by this Court.

For some reason that I do not understand, all of the parties who have submitted decrees have refrained from using it and they insert some provisions which in effect do away with block booking as practiced, such as we knew it.

In this document which the Court has, page 5, subdivision 8, is not fully printed. You will only find four lines of it. The balance of the paragraph, as it appears in the Government decree, it is injunction against block booking, and it recites two things, one, it provides that features may (4101)

be included in a group in one contract provided the licensee shall have an opportunity to bid for each picture and shall have made the same bid and so on. Then it says, where there has been no trade showing of the pictures, why, the exhibitor may reject as much as 25 per cent. The 25 per cent, of course, is a secondary proposition, but nevertheless of importance to Columbia, because I think it is high. I think 20 per cent should be the limit. I would even prefer to see it less, because the Government professedly wants to encourage production of pictures. It says, "We want open competition. We want the greatest amount of pictures. We want a completely free market." Yet, if they want that complete market, the last thing that they can do is to discourage producers from producing pictures.

There is no reason in this case why producers, who spend their moneys and gamble on pictures, should be compelled to take back an unreasonable amount of pictures if the exhibitors don't like them. Every one has to take his risk. This Court heard testimony here from Montague and from others——

Judge Goddard: Mr. Frohlich, didn't we hear a considerable amount of testimony from independent exhibitors to the effect that they would be perfectly satisfied with 20 per cent?

Mr. Frohlich: I don't recall such testimony, but I would be very happy if the Court would adopt that suggestion.
(4102)

Judge Goddard: It was an affidavit, I think.

Mr. Frohlich: There may have been some such testimony in the case, but I thought 25 per cent is too high, because here we are with millions of dollars invested and we go down and market these pictures and then we have 25 per cent thrown back on us. It simply means we lose that money, and where are we going to end? It simply means we are going to make less pictures, we are going to take less of a gamble, and the industry will suffer. I think that 25 per cent is too high.

Judge Hand: 25 per cent is in the opinion.

Mr. Wright: There is no percentage specified in the opinion, your Honor. We merely suggested 25. We hold no brief for any particular figure. If you want to make it 20, we are not going to waste time arguing about that.

Mr. Frohlich: The opinion was blank, your Honor, on that; there was no percentage.

(4103)

Judge Goddard: Mr. Wright, do you remember, is it not true that there were a number of affidavits submitted by independents in which they suggested they would be satisfied with 20 per cent?

Mr. Wright: I remember Mr. Levy saying here yesterday, arguing for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, that he would have been happy with 20 per cent cancellation but was glad to see that the Government had suggested 25. In our view, this is a minor issue——

Judge Hand: This is section what we are talking about? 8?

Mr. Wright: Paragraph 8 of section 2 of our decree. The number that he is talking about of that paragraph appears at page 11 of the yellow document that you have there.

Judge Bright: What do you say to 20 per cent? Did you say 20 per cent is all right?

Mr. Wright: Yes, we were agreeable to any percentage the Court cared to designate, but we felt bound to make some suggestion, and we made that one.

Mr. Frohlich: In addition to that section the following subdivision 9 I think has some significance in respect to the right given to sell more than one picture, or the right to sell a group.

As I take it from the Government's decree, and from the opinion of the Court, Columbia could sell a group or all of its product at the beginning of the year provided each picture was sold separately and each picture was sold to the highest competitive bidder. I did not gather from the opinion that Columbia was prohibited from selling its product at the beginning of the season. My impression in reading that opinion is that it is given the right providing competitors in a given area are given the right to compete for each picture, and each picture separately negotiated, and so on.

Now, Columbia would be happy with that, but that is taken away by subdivision 9, which says you can't license your films more than six months in advance of its release. Now, that clause is a new clause. It did not appear in the Government's first decree. I do not know who suggested it Mr. Wright, but it came into this new form——

Judge Hand: Is it in the opinion anywhere ?

Mr. Proskauer: No.

Mr. Frohlich: No.

Mr. Proskauer: Mr. Wright's memorandum admits that it is completely new.

Judge Hand: I don't remember it anywhere.

Mr. Frohlich: It is completely new.

Judge Hand: Now, Mr. Frohlich, I am quite interested as well as surprised that you come in now and say that this thing which has been done, which has been represented as greater than what William Jennings Bryan used to call the time of '72 is all right.

(4105)

Mr. Frohlich: You mean block booking? If I can sell my pictures at the beginning of the season, negotiate that picture separately, fix a price, give the competitor the right, that is all right with Columbia, and I would not have any kick about it.

Judge Hand: I never understood we were saying anything like that.

Mr. Frohlich: I did. Originally I understood——

Judge Hand: Well, you had very little capacity as a shock absorber I thought on that first hearing.

Mr. Frohlich: Well, I certainly was shocked when this decision came down and I first read it, because I got the distinct impression that I could not sell my pictures at the beginning of the season, but I have changed my mind since, and if your Honors say that this decision permits me to sell all of my pictures, providing I sell them separately and negotiate them separately, and conform to the other requirements, why, I can do that.

Judge Hand: I do not see why you can't.

Judge Goddard: We thought you could.

Judge Hand: I do not see why Mr. Wright should object to that feature.

(4106)

Mr. Frohlich: But he is taking this away from me, Judge Hand.

Judge Hand: Wait a minute. I know he is with this six months, and I do not know what that is; that is something new to me.

Mr. Proskauer: It is new to all of us.

Mr. Frohlich: I know why he put it in. He wants to nullify that right just the same way he wants——

Judge Hand: Well, it is probably a safer position for him for the record to nullify all rights. Here you have this right of 20 per cent of rejection that you have to give, and the other right—well, I don't know. You could not reject anything else under this proposed decree that you wish to consent to or that you say you do not object to. You would give no other right. In other words, their cancellation would be absolutely limited to 20 per cent unless they had seen the picture.

Mr. Frohlich: Yes, we have been doing that.

Judge Hand: Then supposing they had seen the picture, then they would have to reject within so many days; you would let them do that?

Mr. Frohlich: Oh no. If they have not seen the picture, then they had the right to reject 20 per cent.

Judge Hand: I meant "not."

(4107)

Mr. Frohlich: If they had seen the picture, that is something else again. If they have not seen it, they have the right of rejection.

Judge Hand: Well, I have not all the clauses of the opinion definitely in mind, but as far as I know you would be satisfied if you could bid picture by picture and were only obliged to give them a 20 per cent rejection?

Mr. Frohlich: Yes.

Judge Hand: That is an arbitrary rejection.

Judge Goddard: That is on blind selling.

Mr. Frohlich: On blind selling. We have been giving them that anyway for years, about 20 per cent, so I have no objection to 20 per cent.

Judge Goddard: But what you now want is not to be restricted to selling six months in advance?

Mr. Frohlich: That is right, because that takes away with one hand what I have been getting with the other hand. It is impossible to tell when you are going to show a picture. It may take six months or seven or eight or nine or ten months. You start off with a picture, and there are a million delays, and you don't know just where you are at. Now, if we are given the right to sell our season's product in that way, why should that be taken away?

(4108)

Now, there is another clause which is a joker, and that is the 30-day clause, and that is another one of the clauses that Mr. Wright took out of the air that is not in the opinion, subdivision (e).

Judge Hand: Where is that?

Mr. Frohlich: Subdivision (e) of paragraph 8. It is not in the printed form that your Honor has.

Mr. Caskey: At the top of page 9.

Mr. Proskauer: Why not wait until we get to it in the regular course?

Judge Bright: Where did you say it was?

Mr. Frohlich: It is on page 4 of the mimeographed decree of the Government.

Mr. Wright: It is page 2 of the yellow document.

Mr. Frohlich: And I couple that with the six months, because that is another harsh provision which absolutely protects nobody and hurts the distributor. It says each license shall specify a date of availability of a print for the run licensed, provided that such run shall commence within 30 days after such availability.

Now, how in God's name can you do that especially when you have got clearance? It is inconsistent with clearance; it is inconsistent with the right to sell your product in the way we have described it, and it helps nobody, and I think that Mr. Wright, being dissatisfied with the so-called block booking, has evolved out of his own ingenuity the six months provision and the 30 days provision to cripple me and take away that——

Judge Bright: Mr. Wright, will you tell me why you are doing such terrible things?

Mr. Wright: Yes, I will be glad to. There certainly is no secret about it.

Mr. Levy, I think as he points out in his memorandum, came to me in discussing this decree and this proposed method of auction selling, and he was somewhat concerned with what the motion picture trade calls over-buying. That is, he pointed out to me that the auction selling provisions as such would not prevent the accumulation by a particular exhibitor of more pictures than he could use just to keep them away from a competitor. Now, the cancellation privilege may be adequate to protect—— (4110)

Judge Hand: You are more terrified and beseiged by these putative intervenors than even the Court.

Mr. Wright: Well, we have had to deal with them somewhat more extensively than the Court has. But in any event, as I was saying, on this question of over-buying, that is, the accumulation of more pictures than an exhibitor can use, the competitive method of bidding of course does not solve that or touch that problem at all, and the cancellation privilege does not either. That is, the cancellation privilege may be sufficient to protect an exhibitor from having forced upon him blind pictures that he doesn't want, but it does not prevent him from accumulating by making a deal for a year's product a large number of pictures and then holding them off the market until he exercises the cancellation privilege as a means of keeping them from a competitor.

Now that 30-day provision arose out of the same problem. That is, if exhibitors under this auction method of selling were permitted to license films wherever they were, the high bidder, without regard to the particular playing time that they had in their theatres, they could again accumulate a supply of pictures which would go far beyond their immediate needs and have the effect of holding those pictures off the market. The provision requiring playing within thirty days of availability was designed to keep that market (4111) in a fluid condition. So that if you did not have playing time available you would not license the picture.

Now those provisions, as I say, came about in that manner, and we have offered them to the Court because we think they are essentially sound and that they would help the administration of any system of competitive bidding that the Court might devise.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, these two provisions which are seemingly innocuous are quite serious. Take the 30-day provision first. Mr. Wright seems to envisage us as sitting up nights trying to find some way of over-buying or concentrating. There is no proof of over-buying in this case. It has never been suggested. We have got to sell pictures to 15,000 theatres that we don't have anything to do with, that we don't own or control in any way. You have got to service them. The proof in this case shows that our profit comes from our dealings not with one another but from our dealings with these 15,000 independent theatres, and to cure a purely fantastic, fanciful motion—to cure a perfectly fantastic and fanciful notion that we are going to go into a conspiracy to harm our best customers by accumulating a lot of pictures which cost us a lot of money and then storing them up on the shelf, something for which there is no basis whatever, (4112) what does he suggest? That a contract must provide an availability date and that a picture must actually be released within thirty days after that.

Now if you will read, as I know you will, your Honors, the paragraph on page 9 under the heading "Defendants' Comment," you will realize what that means in practice. We have got the problem of prints. It would be perfectly cruel for me to repeat all the evidence that your Honors well remember about this print situation. A print, as you know, costs much more than we get per license from hundreds of thousands of theatres. You can't any more practically in running this business do what Mr. Wright suggests, than I can jump off the top of this building unhurt. We don't know just when the pictures are going to be finished. We don't know just when we are going to get our prints. We don't know what the exigencies are on the return of these prints. And there has never been the slightest trouble about this availability business. When we get in shape, when we know we are going to have the print we give the exhibitor a notice of availability and he can then program his theatre.

Under Mr. Wright's suggestion, the biggest yowl you ever heard will come from the exhibitors because they don't want to be bound to an availability date where they have to produce within thirty days after that. They want a flexibility (4113) about the availability date for the reasons that you will find set forth fully on page 9, and the thing is worked without friction, there is no trouble whatever about it. When the print situation clarifies and when we know when we are going to get a print for a man in Morristown, New Jersey, or in Tulsa, Oklahoma, we give him notice and then our booking people get in touch with him and we arrange with him when he wants the print to complete his program. What in the world is the Government interested in in that? What business is it of any——

Judge Hand: I am not sure that they are sure that they are. I thought Mr. Wright showed some doubt about that, at any rate, in advocating it. Apparently he is not guilty of the modern crime of over-simplification.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Wright, the right to exhibit under these provisions is within ten days, so it could not be tied up for very long.

Mr. Wright: That would depend upon when that extension opportunity were made available. Of the two provisions, I myself regard the 30-day provision of more importance than the six months' limitation. If one were to go and the other be retained, I would sacrifice the six months limitation first. (4114)

I think there is a very interesting comment by the defendants on page 9 of this yellow document with reference to that 30-day provision.

Mr. Proskauer: The document is yellow only in the binding.

Mr. Wright: They say "neither the allocation of prints by a distributor nor the booking of pictures by an exhibitor should be straightjacketed."

Well, of course, that is exactly what a system of clearance does, that is, to impose restrictions in making prints available. The difference between clearances in this kind of provision as far as they are concerned is that they can control and manipulate the clearances so that they can favor the theatres that they want to favor. But in a 30-day provision of this kind you would have a completely non-discriminatory application of this print distribution, and that is unfavorably regarded by the defendants.

Mr. Proskauer: We want to favor every theatre.

Mr. Raftery: A 30-day provision, 60-day provision, 90-day provision, Mr. Wright is talking about codes in the six-month provision. He wants protection for those exhibitors who buy a block of Mr. Frohlich's pictures, and twenty per cent come in and they don't want any codes. He is not protecting the market for anybody else because nobody else wants the rejects of anybody else.

Then you come to the 30-day provision and this applies to companies like United Artists. If we have a good picture they book them right fast. If there is a picture they don't want, they won't book, and you are not going to give a license to anybody else because they don't want it. And you have to fight with them. If you are going to put this provision in that they must buy your pictures and they must book them, then I think we are just gilding the lily about a whole lot of nothing and both provisions ought to come out.

Judge Hand: Mr. Raftery, are you as much pained about these provisions as Mr. Gerlach was in the beginning?

Mr. Raftery: I am only pained about another provision. I still think there is no price fixing in this litigation and I hope that you gentlemen might reconsider it.

As regards block booking I think we offered ample evidence that United Artists is not involved in this block booking.

As regards price fixing, we have submitted findings on that.

Judge Hand: Well, this gives you the method of distribution that you want.
(4116)

Mr. Raftery: United Artists has been distributing that way for about twenty-seven years, selling them separately and individually and to our sorrow sometimes and to our happiness at other times, depending on the quality of the picture.

Mr. Cooke: On over-buying, our position simply is that those who over-buy should be enjoined; not distributors.

On this matter of conditioning the sale of one picture upon the sale of another, we take the position that there is no evidence that we ever conditioned the sale of one picture upon the sale of another and that therefore no injunction should run against that.

Judge Hand: We are not going to review our decision on all of these details, you can be sure of that. You are wasting your time.

Mr. Davis: Now, if the Court please, we are back again on the thorny subject of competitive bidding.

We are now dealing with plaintiffs' section 10 on page 6, and defendants' number 7 on page 9.

Judge Hand: Now where are you, which page?

Mr. Davis: I am now about to make a few observations which I shall condense and make as brief as possible on plaintiff's paragraph 10 on page 6, and our paragraph 7 on page 9, which deal with the thorny subject on competitive bidding.

(4117)

Judge Bright: What paragraph is that?

Mr. Davis: Paragraph 10(b), which is all the plaintiff has to say in aid of our effort to construct competitive bidding:

> "Where a run is desired upon terms which exclude simultaneous exhibition in competing theatres, it shall be offered to the competing exhibitors involved having a theatre adequate to show the picture upon such a run and granted to the highest responsible bidder," —and then comes the vessel clause: "provided that such exclusive run does not unreasonably restrict competition in the area covered."

Which seems to leave us about where we were when the process began.

Moreover, it is not the run which the distributor is prepared to offer, but it is the run which the exhibitor out of his own inner consciousness desires, and when he expresses his desire for any run then it shall be offered, by what method or machinery the Government does not point out, to the competing exhibitors and granted to the highest responsible bidder, thus leaving it to the exhibitor to specify the run which shall be offered and with a limitation that he shan't get it if his getting the run would unreasonably restrict competition.

We submit that that is a wholly inadequate treatment of the subject.
(4118)

Now in our Section 7, we have endeavored to carry into it——

Judge Hand: Page 9?

Mr. Davis: Section 7 on page 9. I shall only point out what are the cardinal features or principles which we have had in mind in drafting that section. I shall not take your Honors' time with the verbiage.

The first principle, which of course is axiomatic, is that the competitive bidding system shall apply only in those areas where there is competition; that if there be an area where there is but one theatre we shall not go through the machinery of competitive bidding at that theatre but we will deal with it as an independent and an isolated contractor in the customary method and manner within the other restrictions that the decree has imposed upon us.

In order to have competitive bidding you must have a competitive situation.

The second proposition which we undertake to exemplify in our draft is that the tender must necessarily come from the producer-distributor and not from the exhibitor. The person who has the article to sell must describe the article which he is ready to offer and to tender to those who care to accept his tender. It would be utterly impossible to leave it to the multiple exhibitors to frame in advance the description of the thing for which they wanted to bid. That would be chaos and confusion worse confounded. You never would have any starting point on which your competitive bidding might proceed. It seems to us inevitable and necessary and axiomatic that the tender of the thing which is offered must come from the producer distributor. And when he tenders it, he must also have the right to say what are the limits of his tender. He has the right to say, "I offer this on such a run, on such terms, in such area, and at such minimum figures, and such clearance." He must have the right to say, "I am ready to sell this to any and everybody but I am not carrying on a distress sale here, I am not offering it to an Irish Come-all-ye, if you please. I am saying if you won't bid this for it you can't get it at all or I will start over again," just as any public vendor of any sort. There is set up in advance an upset price below which the offeror cannot be bound in his offering.

The third proposition we set up is that there must be some sort of machinery or standard by which you can determine what is the best bid that you receive. To say simply that the best bid is to be left entirely to the discretion of the offerer, to the producer-distributor, really doesn't get us (4120) very much farther. If it is intended that this should be regulatory machinery, the producer-distributor must have some criterion by which it can be judged whether it is or is not the best bid, and the primary criterion we present and the obvious criterion, indeed the only criterion by which the distributor should be bound are his prospects of revenue. He is not in business for his health. He is selling this license because he hopes to derive a profit, and in determining which is the best and which the inferior bidder, he must and is entitled to consider selfishly which one offers the higher reward.

Now in determining his film revenue, certain factors are involved, and among them necessarily is the admission price of each theatre as set by each exhibitor for the period of the exhibition of the features.

We come back again to the question of prices. No distributor can estimate his revenue without ascertaining what are the admission prices from which the revenue is to flow—not by contract, not by agreement, but as a fact on which his revenue ultimately must depend.

And so in Section (b)(1) on page 10 we list the criteria which the distributor may justly consider in determining his prospective revenue as between Theatre A and Theatre B.
(4121)

Judge Hand: I see.

Mr. Davis: (b)(1).

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Davis: (b)(1), (2) and (3).

And we submit that without some such catalog the whole subject is left at large. Some such catalog we believe to indispensable for the execution of the Court's purpose.

Now, the fourth thing we have under consideration is that this decree necessarily cannot go into too great minutiae; that there must be rules and regulations by which these bids shall be received and dealt with and disposed of. Those rules and regulations obviously must flow from a common source. They must be described and set forth by those who make the general public offer, to wit, the producer-distributor, but provided that each producer-distributor shall draw up his regulations, rules and regulations describing the area within which the tender is made; describing the time within which the tender must be accepted, describing the form, if you please, in which the bids must be set forth. There must be some sort of mechanical uniformity about the procedure. But to avoid the suggestion that by means of those rules and regulations we seek to evade the general purpose of the Court, we provided that those rules and regulations when drawn up by the separate producers shall be filed with the clerk of the court and kept under judicial supervision.

The fifth thing we have to consider is when this system, if adopted, shall go into effect. Manifestly it cannot be done overnight. Manifestly the machinery of this industry cannot be suddenly adapted to this frame, and some reasonable time must be allowed for the mere mechanics of the operation, let alone the time necessary to educate the sales staffs and the executives in its adoption. We do not think that it could be done with diligence in less than six months, and that is a time drawn out of the air. I should think, with my limited knowledge of the industry, that that is a minimum rather than a maximum, and that that much time must be given if this system is to be installed in order to educate your personnel and perfect the mechanics.

And then finally we provide that if there is any violation of the competitive bidding system, those who are offended by that violation may resort to arbitration, as they would do in case of clearance or in case of other arbitrable subjects. We throw this whole competitive bidding into the arbitral machinery on those who choose—and there can be no compulsion, on that we are all agreed—on those who choose to employ it.

Now, if your Honors please, I am not going to take the time to go over this—my friend Judge Proskauer thinks that I have been too cursory, and that I should call your attention to the fact that each such license should be granted solely upon the merits—this is the license which is tendered after bidding—without discrimination as between the exhibitors bidding for the run, whether in favor of theatres in which any other defendant has an interest, old customers, or any person whatsoever; and finally each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre, and feature by feature, and the distributor defendant for his protection—here is where we get a little something on the side—the distributor defendant may reject any and all offers which are the product of collusion among the exhibitors. And I think that is a possibility which cannot be overlooked in this particular industry. I think it is quite possible the exhibitors would get together and gang up on the distributor under this machinery.

Now, we do not submit that to the Court as a system of perfection. We are not prepared to say that that is all that could be said in drawing up such a plan. We do insist, if your Honors retain this system, the decree will be utterly abortive unless it is fitted into some such frame as we have drawn. Will it be abortive or not? That is the question which none of us are willing to prophesy about.

(4124)

Mr. Arnold: May it please the Court, I think that we covered the subject of competitive bidding yesterday. I am not going to take the time of the Court to do any more than to say that these provisions prove our contention. I do not see how it is possible for anybody to read them and say that by such provisions—and we say by any provisions; I do not think provisions can be drawn; they might be drawn more complicated—that by such provisions you have given to the unreviewable business judgment of the distributors the control of distribution and have taken away all of the protection which we now have under the antitrust decision, and in return to give the exhibitor nothing more than the necessity of paying higher prices.

And I want to only comment further on the collusive bidding section. I would suggest that if you are going to set up a system of competitive bidding it would not be unreasonable to have a provision preventing collusion. So the exhibitors in this situation not being able to get together and make some kind of joint bids must form themselves into chains. It seems to me the greatest indication to concentration, and I think that the reasons, which I am not going into, I brought out as fully as I could yesterday. The reason is that this competitive bidding is at the wrong end. It is bidding by the weaker party for a scarce product; and the second reason is that competitive bidding does not create a free market excepting where parties are of equal bargaining position and the product increases with the demand.

Thank you.

Mr. Stites: Your Honor, would it be out of line for an amicus curiae remark at this moment? I come from Kentucky and I represent a Kentucky association of theatre owners, and we are completely independent with one or two minor exceptions.

Judge Hand: Yes?

Mr. Stites: In Louisville we have the Loew's Theatre, which has approximately 3200 seats, and in the past has had Metro and United Artists and Columbia. We have a smaller theatre, the Mary Anderson, using Warner's, and then we have got the Fourth Avenue Amusement Theatres which have had Paramount, Twentieth Century-Fox, RKO and Republic. Now, they have a theatre that is approximately the same size as Loew's Theatre, which is 3200 seats. Now, the occasion could well arise where Warner's would have a picture which in the past has gone to the Mary Anderson, which has been a first run theatre, though it is one of the smaller theatres.

(4126)

Now, when a picture is open for bids, in all probability the Mary Anderson will be eliminated unless some provision is made so that the picture can be run for more than one week or more than two weeks. Now, the Mary Anderson has run sometimes for six or seven weeks with one of Warner's star pictures. On the other hand, it is very seldom that either Loew's or Rialto has shown a film for more than one week. Now, there is a situation where except for Loew's the State of Kentucky is completely independent, and I would say that probably the only solution to that, except Mr. Arnold's solution, would be that if the Rialto has an opportunity to bid, I say the Rialto should be able to kind of cut its own clothes in its bid.

Mr. Seymour: May it please the Court, I would like to add a word on this competitive bidding situation: As Mr. Davis and Judge Proskauer have said, we tendered in this defendants' draft of decree a proposal which is designed to meet the suggestion in the Court's opinion that a competitive bidding system should be established. And the suggestion which Mr. Davis has outlined seems to us a fair attempt to meet that proposal.

After yesterday's argument on behalf of the independent exhibitors who so unanimously opposed competitive bidding, especially after the argument made by Mr. Jackson and Mr.
Barton, that perhaps your Honors ought to stop short of dealing with that area at all, in view of the other injunctions. Counsel for the defendants, for the five defendants represented here, discussed somewhat the question of whether under your opinion that seemed a matter that would appeal to you, and we rather concluded that the opinion shows that the Court in suggesting a competitive bidding system was really concerned about making some provision in the decree which would guard against discrimination against theatres which were really qualified by physical and other conditions to get a better run than they have, based upon favoritism to affiliates, or favoritism to circuits, or favoritism to old customers, and that basically that is what the Court was trying to get at in its suggestion for competitive bidding.

Now, I do not know that that is so, but reading the opinion that seemed to me at least to be what the Court had in mind. I personally was struck by the argument made yesterday on behalf of various of the independent exhibitors as to the complications in their operation of their theatres for them to pass from a system of negotiation to a system of bidding with all its elaborate mechanism, because however simple tries to keep it, it is bound to elaborate; and that among the various objections which were voiced here, seemed to me to be one which perhaps your Honors would be particularly struck by. And so we tried to see whether there was some other form in which your Honors' basic notion might be cast which would carry out what you had in mind and not involve the elaborate mechanism which is inherent in a competitive bidding system. I jotted down here a few things which may or may not be what you have in mind. I have not attempted to cast them into any definitive form. I have discussed them with counsel for the other major defendants, and if your Honors should be interested in seeing them cast in a definitive form, I think we could cast them very promptly and submit them.

Now, basically this proposal—and I want to make it clear that this is not an attempt on our part to get away from that situation of competitive bidding but merely attempt to see whether we can suggest something else that may be helpful to the Court in dealing with the problem that it had in mind. In broad outline this suggestion would be an injunction against arbitrarily refusing to license any feature on a run designated by the distributor which is requested by an exhibitor who operates a theatre in competition with a theatre which is not that distributor's theatre. In other words, where there are two competing theatres other than the distributor's theatre.

In such cases, the license must be negotiated theatre by theatre and picture by picture. The license must be granted solely upon the merits without discrimination between bidders in favor of theatres affiliated with another defendant, or circuits or old customers, or anything else.

Then these injunctive provisions should, I should think, be implemented by reference of disputes to the arbitration system elsewhere provided for disputes as to clearance and other things in the decree, and, of course, the arbitrators would be given authority to provide proper relief in connection with such disputes.

Judge Hand: They say they won't have anything to do with the arbitration system, the minor defendants and the Government. I don't know why exactly. I have never understood why.

Mr. Seymour: Let me comment on that, your Honor. This arbitration system, as I understand it, is believed by many people who have no axe to grind to have worked very well. It has surely been administered superbly by the arbitration system and Appeals Board.

The Court: You had set it up and the Government had set it up. His position has changed.

Mr. Seymour: Well, Mr. Wright may have strategic reasons for that position, and I do not think that that is critical to the Court decision as to what to do here. We (4130) are not suggesting that any recourse to arbitration should be in lieu of other remedy. We are not suggesting that the Government should be barred from the usual remedies provided for the violation of a decree nor, indeed, that private parties should be barred. What we are offering is a consent rather along the lines suggested in the opinion to try to help to bring about peaceful settlement of disputes through a continuation and an expansion of the arbitration system, and I have grave doubts whether the Government's consent would be necessary.

If I may just complete this outline of this possible approach to the problem, I would suggest that these disputes as to violations of the injunctive provisions, that is, as to whether there was discrimination or whether there was an arbitrary refusal, should be arbitral under the arbitration system, and that adequate relief, of course, be provided by that system; probably that there should also be included in the decree a so-called "some-run" provision. There was, as your Honors will recall, in the consent decree a provision which assured any exhibitor of at least getting some runs. That would be supplemental, I should think, to the injunctions against arbitrary refusal and discrimination.

And then, it is perfectly plain that the use of arbitration as I have indicated and as everybody agrees, is not in (4131) substitution for anything else, if those suggestions should appeal to your Honors as meeting the objections voiced to the elaborate character of a competitive bidding system—and they do seem to us to strike at the thing which your Honors had in mind—we would be very glad to try to cast them in the next few days and submit them, but I haven't done that because time has been short and I did not know whether they were really along the lines your Honors were thinking along.

Mr. Frohlich: May I be heard for a moment on this question of competitive bidding? Competitive bidding sounds very good, but it is the old auction block, no matter what you call it. We had Joseph F. Day in here yesterday, who stands here ready to pick the bones, he is an auctioneer, and I think it is a strange situation where one industry in the United States, in which billions of dollars are invested, would be compelled to market its product on the auction block.

However, I think I have a further and a deeper objection to it than that. I prefer to stand on the monopoly of copyright which is involved here. I object both to the Government's and to the major defendants' outline of the method of procedure for the highest bidder for pictures.

It seems to me that when we own a copyright and we are not acting in concert with other owners of copyright, we do not pool our products, we are not in conspiracy, we are acting alone, and we must be presumed to be acting alone under this decree, because whatever conspiracy has existed here has been struck down, we now stand, each of the defendants, on our own two feet—each is marketing his product to his own exhibitor, and in that case the sky is the limit—no one can restrain me on my monopoly. I have the strongest monopoly known in the law, the monopoly of copyright. I have a perfect right to impose any reasonable condition, where it doesn't affect other users; I have a perfect right to ask any price I please; I can sell it when and how I please; I can sell to whom I please. That right to license, to market and to publish under the copyright act is utterly unrestricted. It is completely free and I cannot be limited. I do not see why this Court should attempt to impose a limitation on the licensing of my product, because that is what it does when it says you must sell to the highest bidder. Suppose the highest bidder is a scoundrel who doesn't pay his debts, and I don't like him? Suppose the highest bidder has a theatre down in a cheap neighborhood and destroys the value of my picture? Suppose the highest bidder is a completely unsatisfactory man, with whom I would not want to deal under any circumstances? Under this decree I am forced to deal with him.

That, I think, is a very radical departure from all business relationships and interferes primarily with that monopoly which I urge cannot be interfered with. The courts cannot limit it; the Government cannot limit it; the Government cannot come in an take away any part of that monopoly. The only one who can regulate that to any extent is Congress and it must be done within the limitations of the Constitution.

That monopoly is so strong that I think this Court, in making a decree of this kind, may be making a decree which would be upset, and I think it is my duty to the Court to call it to its attention.

Frankly, if I were Columbia selling to the highest bidder, I could make more money; I could hold these exhibitors up and make more money. No question about it. But that is not what is involved in this lawsuit. This Court is trying to do a job, it wants to do something for the industry that will do away with evils. I am not here to oppose that. I am here to help the Court, but I think the Court is stepping on dangerous grounds when it begins to consider taking this monopoly, which is completely untrammeled, completely free, no one can impinge on it, and then regulating the operation of these copyright owners with respect to their monopoly, and it will simply invite reversal in the higher court. I would not like to see it. I would like to see the decree here such that nobody will appeal from it. I am honest with the Court. We don't want litigation. We feel that we haven't done anything wrong, but the decree as written up to this point would not hurt us and we are willing to be bound by all the injunctive provisions, but beyond that I earnestly appeal to the Court not to consider that proposition.

Judge Hand: Of course, these things that you are arguing I would certainly have said a few years ago were all absolutely sound and true; and, in fact, I always thought the dissenting opinion—I don't remember whether it was a dissenting or concurring opinion—in the Vick case of Justice Holmes was the only sound view. I don't believe all these theories of hooking on patents without further legislation to the Sherman Act, but the Supreme Court has done it again and again.

Mr. Frohlich: But in the Hartford Empire case they expressly refused to do it, and that is only a recent case, 1944.

Judge Hand: It isn't because I think there is necessarily virtue in letting a copyright owner do all sorts of things, but I think there is great confusion in trying to build up all sorts of theories of law against the traditional meaning of copyrights and patents under the guise of the Sherman Act.

(4135)

Mr. Frohlich: That is right.

Judge Hand: It fills the whole subject with confusion, to my mind, but we are entirely cognizant of that thing and there are many features of it that, as far as the practical, immediate public interest goes, are in favor of doing what has been done by the courts.

Mr. Proskauer: Before we adjourn, and I imagine we will shortly, may I just say a word in supplement to what Mr. Seymour has said?

When Judge Bright asked this morning views as to whether the other injunctive provisions—yesterday it was—took care of the evils, that is a question we reviewed at our luncheon table yesterday. As I said this morning, we believe that the injunctive provisions took care of every transgression you have found with one possible exception, and that was the question of runs, and without elaborating on the thing, I would like to impress on your Honors in summary that what Mr. Seymour has said is that, for the first time, we defendants have come in with a suggestion, that there be the same judicial and arbitral control of runs that there heretofore has been over clearance.

If that appeals to you, I think it enables us to say that if you take that in substantially as Mr. Seymour outlined it to you, you would have enjoined wrongful conduct on our part in every area in which you have found it, and you would have completed a coordinated injunctive system that would get the ultimate result that you had in your minds to get by the competitive system.

Judge Hand: I do not know what Judge Arnold would say to that.

Mr. Raftery: Before adjourning, your Honor, perhaps I might leave a thought with you: you will recall our contracts in evidence with our producers. We cannot license final exhibition of a single picture to an exhibitor without going back to the separate producer and getting his approval. We cannot get into any competitive business. We also have to follow his direction of the method and marketing of each individual picture. We have at the present time, I think, 23 producers telling us how to handle each individual picture. I just cannot conceive of any way that we can get into any system of competitive bidding, because we are prevented completely by contract with each independent producer.

Judge Hand: Judge Bright has to get away tomorrow at about 11 or half past 11, and I do not think there would be any use in us trying to have a session until the next day. So I think we will have to adjourn until Thursday at 10.30.

In regard to this suggestion of Mr. Seymour's, have you any remarks to make, Judge Arnold?
(4137)

Mr. Arnold: Your Honor, the suggestion comes as a surprise. I had my own opinion on it, but I will have to consult my clients, because I do not believe you want my own opinion; you want the opinion of the people I represent.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Wright: If the Court is interested in the Government's opinion, I could give it to you very quickly.

Judge Hand: Go ahead.

Mr. Wright: What he is suggesting, if I heard him aright, and it is hard for me to believe that I did, was a method of insulating them by one step more from applying the principles that the Court has now said should apply to their offer of runs; if I heard him aright, he said that there should be an injunction against an arbitrary refusal to license a run designated by the distributor and then, in the event that you found a violation of that provision, then they would have to offer the picture or offer films to the person who suffered the violation picture by picture, without discrimination, in the terms that your Honor has already said they should offer them. If that is so, it is preposterous.

Mr. Arnold: May I state what I was going to suggest to my clients I understood? All of the injunctive provisions of the decree remain unchanged with respect to this, but that they would, as a matter of consent, make this offer to anyone who was still unsatisfied as to the injunction provisions of the decree.

Mr. Proskauer: It is a little more than that. It is what you say, but it is more. It adds to the injunctive provisions, not as Mr. Wright said in some conditional way, it adds a square injunction against unreasonable refusal of runs just as in the present decrees there are injunctive provisions against clearance. We add run to clearance, and when you talk to your clients, you will find that has been one of their chief desires. We are enjoined from unreasonable refusal to give runs and without in any way abating the right to punish us for contempt or sue us for refusal to abide by that provision, we voluntarily offer arbitration as an additional remedy to those who want it.

Mr. Arnold: In the decree?

Mr. Proskauer: In the decree.

Mr. Wright: May I ask on what possible theory can arbitration be included in this decree when the Government, whose decree it is, does not desire to have it there? If they want to arbitrate, they are perfectly free to arbitrate outside this proceeding. I would assume that the only purpose any arbitration provision could possibly have in this decree would be for the purpose of decree enforcement. If it is not a means of decree enforcement, why are we concerning ourselves with arbitration proposals from these people at all?

Mr. Proskauer: I would like to answer that question, if the Court would permit me. We are concerning ourselves here because this is not the Government decree. It is the Court's decree. We come in and we say to your Honors, we ask you to implement your opinion by certain definitive injunctive provisions, and if Mr. Wright is still yelling about divorce, we say voluntarily that, in order to facilitate those exhibitors who do not want to resort to expensive litigation, as Judge Goddard suggested this morning, that we voluntarily will consent that there be inserted in this decree an arbitral system under the general supervision of the courts, that we pay for, and to which anybody, who wants to resort, may resort.

We have a legal argument which I do not propose to go into at this late hour, unless your Honors want it, that your Honors have a perfect power to decree that by reason of the Government's consent in the consent decree, but that is another matter.

What I am trying to get away from now is the divergence of this discussion on to the arbitration system, which is an incident of it. I am trying to hold it to the line that Judge Arnold was very helpfully and properly talking about.

What this thing really does, if your Honors should decide that you do not want to go through with the competition system, that is suggested, what it does is, it enlarges the area of injunctive relief from clearance and price-fixing to include run as well. And it compels us, by injunction, to refrain from arbitrary refusal to give a run. I am sure that all those who are versed in the practical details of this industry would agree that that is a great step forward.

Mr. Arnold: I hate to disappoint you, Judge Proskauer.

Mr. Proskauer: You usually do, so I am not surprised about it.

Mr. Arnold: I am not prepared at the present time to agree, but I am glad we had this discussion because I thought this was a voluntary offer which was made to the industry to assist in the decree and not to be a part of the decree. Do you insist, in formulating these provisions, that they be part of the decree?

Mr. Proskauer: Insist? We insist about nothing. We are making the suggestion to the Court, and the only ones of your clients that will object to it are those who have good runs now and are afraid they may lose them.

Mr. Arnold: I do not know about that, but I want to make this clear. It is of no consequence to you whether or not this is put into the decree. It might be of considerable consequence, I don't know, to some of my clients because, once you put arbitration into the decre and someone chooses not to use it, anyone with the ability of Judge Proskauer or Mr. Wright, will talk about what an unreasonable man he is to bother the Court when the decree itself provides for arbitration. I do not know what my clients are going to say.

Mr. Proskauer: I am not talking about arbitration. I am talking about the substantive provisions for the moment, and when I paid you a compliment it was because for a moment you were talking about substance and not the remedy, and now you are going to remedy again.

Mr. Arnold: Yes, that is what I am doing. All I want to find out this evening is, in making the suggestion is it of consequence to the parties making it that it be embodied in the decree or are they perfectly willing to make it a general letter to the industry?

Mr. Proskauer: Are you talking about arbitration?

Mr. Arnold: Yes.

(4142)

Mr. Seymour: I will say for myself that I visualized it as a matter to be submitted to the Court for consideration as a possible matter to be included in the decree.

Mr. Proskauer: Subject to the Court ruling, we would like it in the decree.

Judge Bright: Mr. Wright, would you object to inserting in the decree in this case a provision for arbitration providing there is also inserted a clause that it would not immunize the defendants from any proceeding that you might take on a claim that they are violating the decree?

Mr. Wright: I think we would because there just is no occasion for that kind of arbitration, an arbitration which is not intended is a decree enforcement device, arbitration which is not intended in any way to supersede the normal enforcement procedures that we would employ, to be in this decree at all. If they want that kind of system, they have got to set it up, it seems to me, outside this lawsuit.

Mr. Barton: May it please the Court, I think we should like to comment on that suggestion but I frankly don't understand it and would like to reserve the right to comment until

I have a clear conception of what the suggestion is that the gentleman is offering. I don't want my silence to show assent.

Judge Hand: I should think you had better, perhaps, confer with Judge Arnold and Mr. Barton as to whether there was any hope of satisfaction for them in this suggestion. If what you are suggesting does not satisfy them any better than what our opinion has proposed as a remedy, why should we fuss a great deal with it?

Mr. Arnold: I want to explain our difficult position. The only thing on which all these theatres are agreeing has been that they don't want auction bidding; so it is very difficult for us to get agreement on other parts——

Judge Hand: The only thing that they all agree on is what?

Mr. Arnold: That they didn't want auction or competitive bidding, and that is what limits us in not being able to answer your question.

Mr. Proskauer: Does your Honor express any view on whether we should try to formulate this into——.

Judge Hand: I think you better talk to the high contracting parties who represent your adversaries here to see whether there is any use in talking about it at all.

Mr. Proskauer: We have only one high contracting adversary and that is the Government.
(4144)

Judge Hand: I don't know that we would care to go into it if it is something that everybody is going to fight about as a proposed new remedy suggested by Mr. Seymour. Don't you think you can tell among yourselves whether it is worthwhile, to see whether you want to do it?

Mr. Proskauer: I could if it were not for Mr. Wright. I think I could sell this to Judge Arnold.

Mr. Wright: Anything you can sell to him you are perfectly at liberty to agree with him on.

Judge Hand: We will adjourn until Thursday.

HEARING RESUMED.

Mr. Seymour: May it please the Court, since I indicated on Tuesday that I had a suggestion that might meet what your Honors had in mind in lieu of the formality of competitive bidding, we have tried to cast the suggestion. We have it cast in rough form. Subject to consideration of details, I think we are prepared to hand up a copy of it to the Court, if the Court would be interested in seeing it.

Mr. Davis has an addendum, which is represented by a superimposed sheet, and it may be that there will be some other minor changes later on we will want to suggest.

I would like to tell your Honors what the substance of it is. It is along the lines of what I said——

Judge Hand: Has Mr. Wright seen it?

Mr. Seymour: We have just got the proof. We have not, so far as I know, furnished one to Mr. Wright yet. He must, of course, have one and we will make one available to him at once.

(4146)

Without arguing it, I would just like to tell your Honors the substance of the proposal. It does not differ much from what I said the other day. It inhibits the arbitrary refusal of a run to an exhibitor requesting a run designated by the distributor. It inhibits discrimination in the granting of runs and requires that they shall be granted on the merits. It sets forth the factors which a distributor is to consider in determining which of two theatres on the merits should have the run. It provides for the grant of some run, that is, it takes into this provision the so-called some-run provision of the consent decree, in addition to what I have already mentioned, so that an exhibitor is, in any event, assured of getting some run, quite aside from the question of discrimination and arbitrary refusal I mentioned before. And then, the controversies arising under this section are subject to arbitration with what we think to be adequate remedies by the arbitrators.

And I may say, in anticipation, if your Honors please, that we think we can satisfy your Honors that there is no doubt about your power in this case to include an arbitration system in your decree.

Judge Proskauer will present the legal argument on the subject a little later on.

Finally, this proposal makes it perfectly plain that the arbitration system does not in any way affect the Government's right to proceed for violation of the decree by contempt. And it also makes it clear that as to an exhibitor he has an election of remedies. He may choose to proceed by arbitration or he may choose to pursue his remedies afforded him by law. Obviously he ought not to have it both ways. And therefore it indicates that as to an exhibitor there is an election of remedies. But the critical point seems to us to be that it in no way effects the Government's right to proceed for violations of the injunctive provisions of the decree, and thus it provides the useful remedy of arbitration to those who choose to invoke it and provides a skilled way for disposing of controversies which involve all kinds of elaborate questions not ideally designed for consideration in the light of the usual rules of evidence and so on. In other words, it has the advantages which everybody has found in the arbitration system and which we have enlarged upon, and which your Honors have indicated in your opinion. That is the substance of this proposal. We have outlined it in substance to some of the exhibitor groups. They are in a position to give you their views about it insofar as they are able to do so today, and I won't attempt to do so for them of course.
(4147)

Mr. Davis, do you want to add anything to what I have said?

Mr. Davis: The addendum of which Mr. Seymour spoke (4148) presented by us is that we are opening up here a fresh field of adjudication and controversy between the distributors and the exhibitors, whether or not there has been a refusal of a run as requested. Obviously, no man is injured if the run is granted and he has not requested to the contrary. Now, we want to narrow the field of controversy about that request just as much as we can. That is the predicate for this procedure, that there must have been a refused request, and we do not want the question of request left at large on oral testimony between the demanding exhibitor on the one hand and our field agent on the other, because when gentlemen's rights depend upon whether or not there has been such a request, their memories cannot always be relied upon.

So we ask that the request when made shall be formalized, to be the predicate for any further proceeding, and must be made in writing and addressed to the home office of the company so that there may be some undisputable evidence that the exhibitor really made the request that is the basis of his complaint. That is a mere matter of procedure, that is true, but we think in view of the far-flung variations of this industry, it is a very important procedure and will tend to narrow at least one angle of possible controversy. That we (4149) submit as a substitute for the first paragraph in the printed proof.

Mr. Arnold: If it please the Court, at the close of the last session the Court inquired the position of the American Theatre Association with respect to the proposal suggested by Mr. Whitney Seymour on behalf of the defendants. The proposal was not in concrete form. The idea, however, was that some plan of voluntary arbitration conducted jointly by the major companies be embodied in the decree as a possible substitute for the system of competitive bidding in opposition to which the American Theatres Association have sought to intervene in this action.

In response to the Court's request, I have conferred with counsel for the defendants as to the scope and character of their tentative proposal. I have also conferred with the representatives of the American Theatres Association who, in turn, have conferred with others over the long distance telephone. As a result we have reduced to writing a system which represents as closely as we can, without actually taking a poll, the attitude of our Association.

Our Association is a large aggregation of theatres in every part of the country. It was formed for the purpose of acting in the interest of the American theatre industry on all questions in which every theatre had a common interest to protect. Since our membership contains theatres of every type, there are many conflicting interests between them which the Association cannot properly represent. It was for that purpose that prior to the introduction of the issue of competitive bidding in this suit, the Association took no position whatever in the litigation. When, however, the proposal of competitive bidding was suggested by the Court, the members and directors of the A. T. A. felt that the Association could and should intervene because they believed the system would operate to the injury of all the member theatres, large and small, and in every type of situation.

The poll taken by the theatres confirmed this position. The vote was almost unanimous to oppose competitive bidding. For that reason we intervened in this court simply for that purpose.

Now, we have taken no poll on the suggested arbitration. Time has not permitted it. However, we believe that we can safely say on the basis of a sampling of our membership that if the Association were compelled to make a choice between a system of arbitration and a system of competitive bidding, they would undoubtedly choose arbitration.
(4151)

Many members of our Association called us yesterday and asked us to endorse arbitration because they feared that

If we did not approve that proposal the Court might adhere to its former position in favor of competitive bidding.

Of course, we realize that the Court in asking our position did not ask us to choose between these alternatives. We are only informing the Court as to what our position would be if we had to choose between competitive bidding and arbitration of theatre runs. Considering the question of arbitration not as an alternative to competitive bidding but, as we think the Court intended, as an independent proposition, the Association can take no position whatever. Certainly, many of our members, the number of which cannot be ascertained now, would approve of arbitration as a practical solution in a confused situation.

On the other hand, a number of our members would oppose the incorporation of any such provision in the decree. Their position is that no concerted plan of arbitration jointly conducted by the defendants and approved by the Court can possibly be voluntary in any real sense, since the arbitration of the run of any one theatre would affect all others in a competitive position. If the defendants desire to try out a scheme of arbitration we think they should do so by making arrangements within the industry and without seeking the sanction of this Court. This we realize will be difficult. My clients, however, would, I am confident be unanimous in their willingness to participate in an industry conference and negotiations to bring it about.

That is the statement.

Judge Hand: I do not understand what the sanction of the Court has to do with it. I mean, on its practical side, that I suppose is all your clients are talking about.

Mr. Arnold: Well, I will represent what has been told me without taking a position as to whether my clients who have told me that are reasonable or not. Suppose there is theatre A and theatre B, each of which think they are entitled to a run, and each of which think that if they do not get run it is an arbitrary refusal. Suppose theatre B has the run; suppose theatre A seeks arbitration. Now, of course, it would be utterly futile to arbitrate between theatre A and theatre B with respect to that run on one or any number of theatres, and then have the other theatre come in court not being bound by the arbitration and sue under the antitrust laws.

So as a practical proposition we can't conceive—and I (4153) think the major defendants will concede this, I don't know—these people who I represent cannot conceive of how arbitration can be voluntary. Now, I do not want to argue here whether that position is a reasonable one or not, but it is a position taken by a very large number of our industry.

Judge Hand: What I was asking was how is it any more or less voluntary because it is or is not set up by a court?

Mr. Arnold: Well, if the Court please, we suggest that if all the Court is saying in the decree is "You can get together and arbitrate," it is just a perfectly futile provision. And we must be—and I must be very careful and say that the "we" I am now talking about is this group—this group does not think it is possible to incorporate anything in the decree which is not a complete futility which to a certain extent has not compulsory features. Now, that is the opinion of a group in our industry. Another group says, "Well, all right, we like arbitration."

Judge Hand: We may or may not have power; we may or may not think it desirable under the circumstances; it may or may not be true that we should do it without consent of the groups. But the difference you fail to point out in (4154) any way that is convincing to me between something that is set up in the way you have suggested and something that is set up by the Court—that is, it just does not mean anything to me. I do not understand that.

Mr. Arnold: Well, let me see if I can make it clear: If the Court—and I assume the Court would only want to set up a workable system of arbitration—if the Court sets up a workable system of arbitration, it allows the defendants to combine, says this particular group; it allows these defendants to combine in that system and gives a certain psychological sanction to the arbitration.

(4155)

This group thinks that there is no possible way that these defendants can effectively combine to put in anything that will work unless the arbitration of the run between Theatre A and the distributor binds Theatre B; and they simply say it would be a complete futility to put it in the decree of the Court unless it did contain a compulsory feature. That is the argument I wished to make.

Judge Hand: You mean they want more parties to the arbitration?

Mr. Arnold: No; they say that it is impossible to arbitrate the run of Theatre A without affecting the interests of Theatre B.

Judge Hand: May the Theatre B be heard?

Mr. Arnold: If Theatre B wanted voluntarily to be heard and wanted voluntarily to arbitrate then we need nothing in the decree; but if Theatre B did not want to arbitrate, the arbitration on behalf of Theatre A would be a complete futility because, theoretically, Theatre B would, the minute the arbitration was through would sue, because he was the man who was arbitrarily deprived of the run. Don't make myself clear? That is the fear of this group, that if the Court puts anything in there that is effective at all, it will involve a certain——

(4156)

Judge Goddard: So far as you know, has that been found to be a real objection in past arbitration? I am afraid not.

Mr. Arnold: Well, I am in the unfortunate position here of representing two groups and not being able to argue whether this group is reasonable in their position, but that is their position, as the Court knows. There is one suit now pending under the old decree, not to review the arbitration but to say that it was binding people who were not parties to the decree.

Judge Goddard: We have had three or four hundred of these arbitrations. As far as I know, that point has never been raised. No objection has been raised on that point.

Mr. Arnold: There is a suit now pending.

Judge Goddard: That is the exception, one.

Mr. Arnold: And we have not polled our membership to tell you how many people take that exception. I am only now trying to represent that a certain number do, and, in order to explain what our position is, I am simply explaining why they do. Have I made that position clear? And I am not authorized to argue the power of the Court, or anything of the sort. I am simply giving an actual picture.

Mr. Seymour: May I just say that Mr. Arnold's remarks have been directed really at the arbitration part of this proposal. Now the arbitration part of it is simply an implementation of the injunction, an additional remedy of injunction. It is the injunction which with the arbitration seems to us perhaps to be aiming in the direction which your Honors' suggestion of competitive bidding aims, because it provides for an opportunity to negotiate for a better run rather than going through a lot of formalities about bidding and enjoins us from discriminating.

I would like also to say that this suit that Mr. Arnold refers to is a suit in which Mr. Russell Hardie represents the plaintiff and in which the charge is in essence that the consent decree was an illegal conspiracy between the defendants, the Attorney General, and the court.

Mr. Arnold: That suit, incidentally, is brought by one of the members of this association. So if I made the opposing positions clear I think I have done about all I can, and we end with the suggestion that from the point of view of the consent of all the members of this association, we would be, as I said, much happier if this thing were tried out without the sanction of the court, and I think I can say that all of them would be willing to work it out in a conference if it could be worked out.

(4158)

Mr. Proskauer: May I ask your Honors to keep as a separate matter this question of arbitration? I want to be heard on that with your Honors' permission a little later, and I shall have a good deal to say about it. Therefore I am rising to emphasize what Mr. Seymour has said. We didn't suppose that this proposal was going to precipitate the discussion on arbitration as such. The gravamen of this suggestion is that it is a further injunctive prohibition against us to refrain from discriminating in runs as well as in clearance.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, in view of your Honors' statement the other day that you, Judge Hand, did not understand why our position had become what it is on this arbitration question and in view of Judge Bright's last question before the recess there on Tuesday, I would like to tell you fully exactly how we came to be where we are now.

When the Court suggested that the use or arbitration in connection with its proposed decree, and conditioned that use upon the consent of the parties, we assumed that since we were a party to the litigation that such relief was conditioned upon our consent as well as that of the defendants who might be subjected to it. We regarded the opinion as an invitation to sit down with the defendants and if we could, work out a method of arbitration which would be an effective means of enforcing a new decree. When we attempted to do so we were promptly met by a refusal on the part of three of the defendants to even discuss the matter at all—the three minor defendants. The five major defendants were delighted to discuss the matter but it became immediately apparent to us that they were not prepared to agree to any substantive provisions which would mean surrender by them of any of the power that they now have to control run and clearances.

We took to be the essence of the Court's opinion that that control must in any event be transferred from them to exhibitors who were not parties to the lawsuit.

Now in short we assumed that we were the prevailing party in the litigation. The defendants were not convinced by the opinion that they had not prevailed.

Now they regard our position in that respect as intransigent but that is what it is.

On such circumstances there simply is no basis for agreement between them and us.

In view of the fact that we have taken the position we have that arbitration on their terms would not grant satisfactory relief and therefore could not be embodied in the decree, we were somewhat surprised when they continued to press upon this court the adoption of their arbitration system. We make no secret of the fact that we view this move with considerable skepticism and that skepticism has not been abated or changed by their present insistence that they don't intend to have the system operate as a substitute for such contempt proceedings as we might be able to bring to enforce such provisions as we thought would be effective to apply the Sherman Act to the defendants in this case.

Now it seems to me that it is quite apparent from that insistence that what these major defendants are after is a judicial sanction for an arbitration system the rules of which are collectively negotiated by them, a system which is financed by them under rules which in our view contradict rather than implement the standards of conduct that are required by the Act that this Court is here to enforce.

Now apart from that question of lack of our consent, this dilemma that Mr. Arnold referred to and which is directly raised in this suit that is now pending in the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals, is one which I think can be passed over lightly. It is true that we think that particular attack should fail. What has happened there is that this exhibitor in St. Louis who did not agree or intervene in an arbitration proceeding is complaining about the fact that the award which was entered without his consent in that proceeding, (4161)

or the suit in which the decree was entered, had the effect of reducing the clearance which he had previously enjoyed.

Now I don't think there is much difficulty presented by that suit in view of the fact that the awards under the consent decree are pretty carefully framed in negative terms and were consented to by the Government and were adopted only as a temporary measure subject to ultimate judicial review here to decide what the final solution should be.

But even if that is so, I think you are presented with quite a different question. If you try to incorporate in a decree an arbitration system which is not consented to by the Government, which simply represents what these defendants are willing to agree to, and which would, if it were to do anything effective at all, probably result in the grant of affirmative rights which would be more difficult to defend against the claims of non-parties to the arbitration and the suit than the kind of arbitration we have heretofore had under the decree.

Now Mr. Seymour suggested Tuesday that our refusal to go along with an arbitration proposal of the kind I have just discussed is also a strategic position on our part, and we don't deny that. We think the strategy of both the plaintiff and the defendants in this case is fairly obvious.
(4162)
Our strategy is to insist that this Court direct its attention to the means short of divorcement by which the unlawful combination that has been found to exist among the five major defendants may be dissolved.

In now proposing a system of settling industrial disputes ...ough an arbitration system jointly established by them, the major defendants' strategy is clearly directed toward the entry of a decree which will continue to let them use joint action to control the run and clearance structures we now have.

Now for the purposes of dissolving the basic unlawful combination among the major defendants, such joint agreement as evolves from luncheon talks among their counsel have little more virtue, as far as we are concerned, than the arrangements found illegal by this Court which evolve from concerted action among their clients. The fact that counsel for these five major defendants may agree on any proposal for relief against all of them is simply a guarantee that such a proposal itself will represent the lowest common denominator of whatever privilege each defendant individually might be willing to surrender.

We insist that a primary objective of any decree that this Court enters in this litigation must be to compel completely individual and independent action by all of these defendants, and particularly the major defendants in this litigation, in their future business dealings.

There is no question about the fact that an unlawful combination has been found to exist among them, and the primary question that we are here to discuss is, I take it, how shall that combination be dissolved by provisions short of divorcement.

We have proposed here a decree which, we think, is effective for that purpose, and we are here to be heard on that decree, those proposals that we have offered, and I do not think that this time, that was set long ago, last June, to consider proposals in final form that we and the defendants have offered to the Court, should now be taken up to consider some alternative that has just been handed to us this morning, and with your Honors——

Judge Hand: That may be so, but you are making just as fundamental objections to what we decided as they are, just exactly.

Mr. Wright: I do not understand that we are, your Honor.

Judge Hand: Of course you are.

Mr. Wright: May I ask in what respect?

(4164)

Judge Hand: Your amendment here about their being unable to license to each other goes to the root of the thing, and you are re-arguing the whole thing again. I do not criticize you for it, but do not criticize them for re-arguing it.

Mr. Wright: I was not criticizing them for re-arguing it.

Judge Hand: I think you are.

Mr. Wright: I was suggesting that three or four months was sufficient time in which to have prepared and put before this Court such final proposals as they wanted to offer for inclusion in a decree; that I did not suppose that this was a point at which we would take off on new proposals which had not been submitted by one to the other.

I do not understand your Honor's statement, frankly, that our proposal is in any way inconsistent with what the Court found. As I see it, the Court found an unlawful combination.

Judge Hand: Inconsistent with what they decided. Whether they made philisophical or factual findings to the contrary is capable of argument, of course, and you are making it.

Mr. Wright: I take it the only decision that is foreclosed from reconsideration here is the decision that the combination should not be dissolved by divorcing these defendants from their theatres. I take it that the Court did not mean to intend simply by outlining the terms of a decree to prevent the discussion here of such other injunctive relief as might be effective to dissolve the combination, particularly——

(4165)

Judge Hand: I do not say that we did. I am criticizing you for criticizing other people for arguing for their setup.

Mr. Wright: I withdraw the criticism.

Judge Hand: I do not think that is important anyway. Let us not discuss it.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Wright, in the prayer of relief, in the supplemental complaint, the Government asks for arbitration, as I recall it.

Mr. Wright: That was necessary, of course, to give jurisdiction for the entry of the decree which embodied that arbitration. There is no question about that.

Judge Goddard: It is a relief asked for.

Mr. Wright: That complaint was filed simultaneously with the consent decree which included that relief, but I am telling you what our present position is, which is different from that when the complaint was filed, admittedly, in that respect.

(4166)

Now, I do not know whether your Honors want me to spend any time discussing these proposals that we have seen or not. If they are still regarded by the Court as possibilities, I will discuss them, but if this withdrawal or this substitution of the defendants is regarded as making them unacceptable to the Court, since they are unacceptable to us, I do not want to waste time on it.

Mr. Caskey: Now, Mr. Wright, let us understand it: The opinion of this Court directed that a decree be submitted embodying provisions for competitive licensing of pictures, and in accordance with that request of the Court we submitted the provisions which are set forth in section 2(7), which is a detail plan for meeting the Court's opinion. We were not privil ged to submit alternatives. It was our duty to comply with the Court's request following the arguments of the friends of the Court and the interveners, and we have outlined the provisions which Mr. Seymour and Mr. Davis have submitted. Now, so far the argument has primarily gone off on arbitration, which is not the essence of the problem at all, because what we are submitting is two injunctive provisions of substance, one against discrimination in licensing runs, and the other against refusing to license any run; and these two injunctions are suggested as an alternative for the means which the Court formulated to deal with the problem of run, namely, competitive bidding.

Now, the argument on arbitration is a wholly different problem. We have made it perfectly clear that the arbitration proposals are a supplemental relief to be given to exhibitors and are not in any way to impair the right of the Government to proceed in the future in such manner as it may be advised.

Mr. Wright: May I address myself to the substance of these proposals?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Wright: Now, as we see both, their competitive bidding proposal and this one that has just been handed us this morning, there is nothing in either of these which would compel any one of these major defendants as theatre operators to bid against each other as a theatre operator in licensing the films of anybody. Now, the evidence in this case is clear that they have not engaged in competitive bidding among themselves for anybody's film product in the past, and there is nothing in the decree proposed by the defendants which would offer them or offer any inducement to them to engage in such competition in the future. Now, if they are to be left in a situation where they retain the same economic interest in cooperation with each other, derived from theatre ownership that they have had in the past, it seems plain to us that strong affirmative measures must be adopted to see that such collaboration does not occur in the future. Certainly, the smaller towns and larger first run situations, where there is now no independent first run competition, or no first run opposition to them, are themselves a partial product of this past collaboration between them. Now, just so long as they are permitted to continue to do business with each other, both as theatre operators and as film distributors, it is difficult for us to see how such future collaboration may be avoided.

Now, certainly——

Judge Hand: I do not entirely get your thought, but I supposed your thought was that they had so much economic power among them that they would outbid some of these larger independents, and the stronger independents would outbid any other independent. Now, you say they won't bid against each other, and therefore the bidding in any particular situation would be left to a single independent, and that would seem to be an advantage by a lack of competition to the independent, wouldn't it?

(4169)

Mr. Wright: I am addressing myself, if the Court please, now to the situations where there are no independents, where the situation is completely dominated by them, and as I say, in those situations what is proposed here simply does not give any promise of introducing competition that did not exist in the past.

Judge Hand: I should think that might be true in places like Cincinnati.

Mr. Wright: Well, there are a substantial number of those.

Now, if the decree that is entered here does not succeed or change the presently established pattern of distribution, which is itself the product of the concerted action that was condemned by the Court, then we think the decree would be a failure by Sherman Act standards.

Now, our key proposal for compelling the major defendants to cease agreeing with each other as to how their product should be marketed, and to induce them actively to compete with each other both as distributors and exhibitors, is embodied in paragraph 8 of section 3 of our proposed decree. That is the section which contains the prohibitions primarily directed at the major defendants in the suit.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Wright, didn't you suggest yesterday that one defendant might not use the pictures of another major defendant?

Mr. Wright: That is the provision I am talking about. This paragraph that I have just referred to enjoins the major defendants from exhibiting films which they produce and distribute in each other's theatres for a period of ten years. Now, at the conclusion of the period it provides that any part may come in and modify the provisions in any manner which the facts then appearing to the Court may warrant. It does not prohibit any defendant from exhibiting its own films in its own theatres or from exhibiting there the films distributed by the three minor defendants, Columbia, Universal and United Artists, or the films distributed by non-parties to this suit.

Now, the films that major defendants distribute may be exhibited either in their own theatres or in theatres not owned or controlled by one or the other major defendants.

Now, a similar proposal was briefly considered at the argument of this case. Discussion of it arose in the following manner, and I am quoting from pages 2574 and 2575 of the printed record:

"Judge Hand: Would you ask for a decree that the picture owner or distributor would only play his pictures in his own theatre or in that of the independents?
(4171)

"Mr. Wright: What kind of decree might be a substitute for divorcement if it were coupled with, of course, a freeze on theatre acquisitions, because if you had unrestricted interchange of theatres, you would have a situation such as Kansas City, where five of these people each has a first-run theatre."

That statement was incorrect. It should be four instead of five.

"I would expect that kind of provision to lead really to the divorcement of theatres, because it would take the monopoly value away from them that they now have, and if you took that away, I don't think these defendants would want them. That is, the main purpose of their structure is to use these outlets as means of preferential treatments for each other.

"Judge Hand: You think they would prefer total to partial divorcement?

"Mr. Wright: That is a matter for them, I think, to express themselves on. I do not pretend to know."

We now have express confirmation from Mr. Proskauer of my suggestion that the major defendants would rather (4172) not have a theatre unless they are free to use it as a means of providing preferential treatment for each other's film product.

Now, at page 4009 of the transcript of Tuesday, he said:

"My people estimate that if we in our theatres, Warner Bros. in their theatres, could not buy any pictures of any one of the other majors that we would be closed 65—is that the figure?

"A Voice: Yes.

"Mr. Proskauer: —approximately 65 per cent of the time."

Now, let us consider exactly what he told the Court when he made that statement. What he is saying in effect is simply that Warner Bros. is unwilling to keep its theatres open unless approximately 65 per cent of the playing time in those theatres is reserved for the film product of their four major co-conspirators in this case.

Now, as to who gets the remaining 35 per cent of the playing time in Warner Bros. theatres, no anonymous voice is needed to supply the necessary statistics. Quite obviously that will go to Warner's own pictures. Now, any decree of this Court which permits that situation to prevail would simply be a device for legalizing the exclusion of other people's films from their theatres by the major defendants. (4173)

As to the specific effects of our proposal to ban cross-licensing in particular situations, it is wholly unnecessary to rely on any anonymous statistics. The record in this case shows exactly what the actual first run distribution of the defendants' film product was in their theatres and the theatres of the independents for the entire 1943-44 season in cities of more than 100,000 population. The record also shows the first run distribution of the first blocks of the major defendants' pictures released during that season as between the defendants' and independent theatres in all of the cities of over 25,000 population. We submit that this data, tabulated in our exhibits 428, 428a, and 432, furnish the best basis available to this Court for estimating what the actual effect of our proposed relief would be in the principal cities where the defendants now operate theatres. I also call your attention to a similar tabulation supplied by Loew as an appendix to its brief,—I am referring to the brief filed at the close of the evidence—and the tabulation set forth in our brief filed at the same time at pages 40 through 45. Now it should be borne in mind that in every situation any defendant's theatre would be left with the privilege to exhibit its own product free from any restrictions, plus product of the other three defendant-distributors and the three existing independent distributors, and such new distributors as might be created in the future through the normal process of competition.

What do these tables show in terms of the number of theatres that the defendants would be required to dispose of if this proposal were put into effect. If you will take the trouble to examine them, I think it will be apparent to you that in no town in which they now operate theatres would the application of our provision result in complete divestiture of theatres by any major defendant, unless, as Mr. Proskauer suggests, they cannot keep open any theatre unless it operates primarily for the benefit of themselves and their principal co-conspirators. It is apparent from the evidence in this case that our provision in actual operation in specific situations would only deprive the defendants of a monopoly position wherever they had one. It would take none of them out of any town where any one of them is now operating, providing only that they are willing to operate there on a competitive basis. Mr. Davis' tabulation, Appendix I of the brief for Lowe, shows that its theatre operations would have been completely unaffected during the 1943-44 season in 11 of the 36 cities tabulated. In 11 more of those cities they (4175) would have been compelled to give up only one or two pictures. The only cities in which they would have had to surrender the entire product of one of the major defendants are Bridgeport, Canton, Cleveland, Columbus, Hartford, Memphis, New Haven, Springfield, Washington, D. C., Worcester, and Yonkers. There were no independent first run theatres in any of the 11 towns I have just named except Springfield, where the independent had only Columbia and half of Universal, Hartford, where two independents have Warner, Columbia, and half of Universal, and, Canton, where the independent had Fox, RKO, and Columbia. Loss of any privileges they have enjoyed in the past is a result regarded by the defendants as disastrous, but if their situation is compared with that of independent exhibitors, it is by no means apparent that a monopolization of film product is essential to the operation of a first run theatre. Mr. Proskauer's statement that his client cannot operate theatres without access to the product of the other four major defendants in addition to Warner's own films, presents a rather curious contrast to the independent first run theatres which existed during the 1943-44 season with the product of no other major defendant but Warner Bros. This happened in Jacksonville, Tampa, and St. Petersburg, Florida and Waterloo, Iowa, from which you will note that (4176) situations of this character are not confined to the large cities. If you will examine these tabulations, you can see at a glance that the normal pattern for the independent first run operator is to show the picture of one or two or three of the defendants in this suit. Thus, in towns such as New Britain, Conn., and Hammond, Indiana, the independent first run theatres have only RKO, in Bangor, Maine, and Chelsea, Massachusetts, they have only Columbia, in Clinton, Iowa, only United Artists, in York, Pennsylvania, only Fox.

In some cases, if the independent is fortunate enough to have most of the first run theatres in the town, he may have as many as four or five of the defendants' product. If he has the same number of first run theatres as the defendants, he may sometimes get a split of the defendant's pictures.

You heard testimony from one well-satisfied independent in this case who was called on behalf of the defendant Fox as to the first run situation in Richmond. Mr. Thalheimer, you will recall, operates three first run theatres there using the films of Fox, RKO, Columbia, and Universal, and from his testimony, which appears at page 1381 of the record, it also appears that Loew's first run theatre plays the product (4177) of Loew and United Artists, and the two Wilmer & Vincent first run theatres, pooled with Loew, play the product of Paramount and Warner. Thus, Loew's theatre got along very nicely with only its own product and that of one of the minor defendants and the two other first run theatres pooled with it, got along with only two other defendants' pictures. The effect of the defendant's competitive bidding proposal would, of course, be to place in jeopardy all of the product which Thalheimer now exhibits and he would in return have an opportunity to compete with Loew only for the product of United Artists. The effect of our proposal would be to permit Loew to continue to exhibit what it now exhibits plus whatever firms of Columbia, Universal, and independent product it might bid away from its competitors. Certainly as between the two proposals, ours offers a greater protection to the independent exhibitor than the defendants' proposal and it does not, by the widest stretch of the imagination, require Loew to dispose of its theatre in Richmond or any theatre in any town where it does not insist on monopolizing the film supply, whether individually or in combination with other major defendants.

A situation similar to Richmond is Louisville, which you heard described by Mr. Stites on Tuesday, Tr. 4125.

(4178)

There we find that Mary Anderson, an independent theatre, subsisting on Warner product alone. The Mary Anderson's very existence would be put in jeopardy by the defendants' propasal, while our proposal would do no more than to prevent Loew from taking the Warner product away from the Mary Anderson while at the same time permitting Loew to continue to show exactly what it shows now, that is, Loew, United Artists, and Columbia, plus whatever product of independent distributors or other minor defendants which it can secure in an open market.

Now of course it is apparent that in situations such as Cincinnati, for example, where RKO has all of the first-run theatres, that first run monopoly would be broken because RKO could not continue to exhibit all of the defendants' product first run but would have to content itself with approximately half. This would mean that in Cincinnati RKO would either give up some of its eight first-run theatres to independents or keep all of its theatres and supply them with a greater proportion of pictures distributed by the minor defendants and independents than it has heretofore. We cannot see how either alternative could be regarded as disastrous from the standpoint of effective Sherman Act enforcement, or from the standpoint of RKO's survival as a theatre operator, unless such operation is dependent upon monopolization of film product for its success.

Of course, in any closed town or closed first-run situation, that is, where one or more of the major defendants own all of the theatres or all of the first-run theatres, the effect of our proposal would mean either the disposal by these defendants of some of those theatres or the opening of new theatres in independent hands which would play the product of the other majors. It might well result in the sale of a number of so-called move-over first-run theatres by which these defendants have been accustomed to expand their first-run revenue at the expense of the following runs. But in no case would any of these major defendants be eliminated as first-run theatre operators in those towns. They would only be deprived of a dominant position there. And again we see no basis for suggesting that that kind of divestiture is either economically ruinous or inconsistent with this Court's opinion.

Judge Hand has asked me to point to the public benefits from such a result and those benefits are the advantages which are presumed to flow from operation of theatres by genuine competitors instead of by members of former members of an illegal combination. If this Court believe that such benefits are illusory, I can only say that Congress and the Supreme Court, as exemplified by its Crescent opinion, believes they are not.

Judge Hand: Of course, one of the apparent difficulties with your argument is not necessarily that they could not get along if they could not license their films to other people, but that in a great many of these towns the towns could not get along. They would not get a good variety of pictures. In other words, you are again using this argument, which is perfectly proper that you should use—I am not criticizing that—but you are using it for divorcement. Isn't that true? (4181)

Mr. Wright: I insist that I am not using it for divorcement. I say that it only amounts to divorcement if the defendants are unwilling to operate without a monopoly position. If they are willing to compete it amounts to only a divestiture of a few theatres where they are the dominant operators.

Judge Hand: In other words, you think it would only affect a few cities, that the people in most cities could get all of this variety.

Mr. Wright: It will affect a substantial number of cities but I submit, if the Court please, that what the people get in those cities is in no way harmed by this kind of proposal. The same number of theatres that are there now will be there. Perhaps a few more. The same number of pictures that have been available for exhibition will be available too. What we have is a resettling of the patterns of distribution so that where you now have only major first-run exhibitors or where the independent exhibitors exist but are in a minority position, you have a situation where the product is so distributed that there is active competition among them.

Judge Hand: Yes, but these defendants have very good pictures, all of them. You all know that.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Hand: And in these towns you are talking about, without this cross-licensing system, as you call it, they couldn't get those pictures.
(4182)

Mr. Wright: I don't understand your Honor's question. You say without cross-licensing they couldn't get those pictures?

Mr. Proskauer: Of course they couldn't.

Mr. Caskey: Take New Haven, Mr. Wright. What would you do there?

Judge Hand: How could they? They may get pictures according to your idea that are just as good or even better from the minor defendants or from some others, but they couldn't get those pictures.

Mr. Wright: There is nothing in this record if the Court please that shows that the citizens of New Haven are in a worse position if some independent exhibitor should exhibit them than if one of those defendants should exhibit.

Mr. Caskey: There is no independent.

Mr. Wright: I merely point out under this provision there would be an independent first-run exhibitor in that town.

Mr. Proskauer: In other words, we have to divorce.

Judge Hand: Well, that comes to divorcement again.

Mr. Wright: It doesn't come to divorcement if the Court please, because it doesn't take them out of the theatre business as theatre operators. It would require them in New Haven to sell some of all of the theatres which they now own. They would not have complete control of the New Haven first-run situation. They would have independent competition.
(4183)

Mr. Caskey: Created by divestiture.

Mr. Wright: I think the point at which our proposal is vulnerable is not the one suggested by the defendants, that it would bring economic ruin on them, or foreclose the kind of competition that the industry ought to have, but that it leaves each of these major defendants with a tremendous competitive advantage in any competitive situation by virtue of its own supply of film. Whether this advantage is in itself in the long run enough to prevent or frustrate any efforts to introduce competition into this industry is a serious question which this Court's decision has resolved in the negative. However, it seems to us not only consistent with that decision, but essential in the light of the decision to see that the decree that is entered here does give affirmative relief which will at least break up the pattern of non-competitive distribution that presently exists.

Judge Hand: What about this suggestion of yours which you are now urging very strongly against this kind of licensing? If the competitive bidding was eliminated which everybody—I don't know quite what your own position is—but about everybody more or less mildly or strongly objects to——

Mr. Wright: Well, we believe in it as a method of solving controversies between people of relatively equal bargaining strength such as the independent elements of the industry. If two independents want to exhibit the same pictures on the same run which excludes the other one, I don't know any better way to settle that problem than by saying that the one who bids the most money for the run gets the picture, gets the run.

Now that, it seems to me, is implicit in any kind of system of competitive distribution that I envisage.

It is perfectly true that you run into serious administrative difficulties if you are going to have some kind of auction system and you run into serious administrative difficulties if, as is the custom, your bids or offers or rental terms are phrased in percentage terms. The difficulty there is that you never know—I assume of course that the losing bidders will be permitted to see the high bid, although the defendants' proposal does not cover that point—but suppose they look at the winning bid and they see that somebody has accepted 30 per cent when they bid 40 per cent. Now you never know whether that 30 per cent bid was the high bid until you audit (4185) the receipt of the winner on the actual run of the picture.

Now if you are going to expose to virtually public audit the winner's receipts in this manner, I don't think these people are very long going to engage in active competition on that basis. I think then perhaps you are almost driven into some sort of a collusive scheme. And for that reason we have not attempted to do anything more with competitive bidding in our proposal than to simply state what we deem to be general principles for resolving these controversies where two or more want the same privilege which excludes the other.

I would like to address myself for a moment to our paragraph 10 of our section 2. That is the section that refers to the licensing practice, and that contains our proposal——

Judge Bright: Before you do that, I would like to ask you one question about this paragraph 8, about which you have been talking.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Bright: Now would that be fair in a situation where only one of the majors is an exhibitor?

Mr. Wright: In a situation where only one of the majors is an exhibitor? He would be unaffected if he were showing less than half of the eight majors' product. He is only af- (4186) fected where he has a dominant position. Where he is exhibiting all or a majority of the available product—that is, where he is relying on product of the other major defendants in addition to his own rather than his own product plus product of the minor defendants and independents.

Judge Bright: You don't so limit that in your Section 8.

Mr. Wright: Yes, we do so limit it. The limitation is perhaps obscure there.

Judge Bright: I can't even see it. It is more than obscure.

Mr. Wright: It is there by reason of the limitation of Section 2 of the decree, or Section 3. You will note in the first paragraph of Section 3 of the decree that that applies only to the corporations which are part of the structure of the five major defendants in the suit. That is the way the limitation is in there.

Judge Bright: Which provision is that?

Mr. Wright: At the beginning, the first paragraph of Section 3 of our proposal.

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Wright: You see the enjoining phrase——

Judge Bright: Yes.

Mr. Wright: —refers only to the corporations which are (4187) part of the five-theatre-owning defendants. It does not refer in terms at all to the minor defendants.

Judge Bright: I guess perhaps you didn't understand what I was driving at.

Mr. Wright: Perhaps not.

Judge Bright: In your Paragraph 8 of Section 3——

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Bright: —you prohibit the majors from licensing other majors' films.

Mr. Wright: Right.

Judge Bright: How would that be fair in a situation where a major alone has a theatre? Why shouldn't he be permitted to use the product of the other defendants?

Mr. Wright: Well, I submit that the reason for prohibiting him from such a use is not necessarily that such use would be in itself illegal, but that you have a past pattern of which he and the other defendants have been a part of illegal conspiracy and because of that you are justified in adapting means to permanently break up that conspiracy.

Now there is nothing startling about that kind of relief in Sherman Act cases. Almost every decree that we have that is effective does go further than merely enjoining the members of an established conspiracy from doing acts which would be legal in themselves.

And while I am on the point, I would like to clear up a couple of misstatements that were made about the Hartford-
(4188)
Empire case. That case did decree licensing on reasonable royalties for future as well as present patents Similar relief was decreed in the National Lead case in this district. That case is on appeal. We appealed in the ground that the provision should have been royalty free——

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, that was only improvements on existing patents; that was not new patents——

Mr. Wright: One of the defendants has now come in and insisted that the relief should be royalty-free licensing because there is no possible way of agreeing on a reasonable royalty.

Those cases I think have some relevance here to our provision 10(a) of our section 2. That is, our so-called sum run provision. We provide simply that each exhibitor who wants it is entitled to sum run of the pictures that these defendants release upon reasonable terms.

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, may I interrupt. Have you finished with your argument on cross-licensing?

Mr. Wright: Our argument is in one piece. We offer the cross-licensing prohibition as an integral part of our decree to be considered with the provisions that I am now discussing, the sum run and our treatment of competitive bidding.
(4189)

Now, as I say, we have in our section 10(a) provided a sum run provision of that character which would require the licensing of a run upon reasonable terms to anybody who wanted it. Now, that provision while it has an effective sound, does also present serious administrative difficulties, because the determination of what reasonable terms are in any of these situations is a rather difficult thing to get at, but in principle we think that is a sound form of relief to prevent the extreme form of discrimination; that is, where a defendant distributor may say in order to protect some favored customer, "I am not going to license you at all because I want to protect the revenue from this competitive theatre."

That is the only way I know how to answer that form of discrimination.

Now, our sub-section (b) is the only provision there which really discusses competitive distribution of runs as such, and we provide there simply that where two or more exhibitors are both seeking a run which excludes the other, that it shall go to the highest bidder.

Now, the last phrase that we added there——

Judge Bright: I was going to ask you about that. That proviso is as general as I have ever seen.

(4190)

Mr. Wright: That proviso on mature reflection I hold no brief for. I think that it is probably unnecessary in view of the provision for sum run in (a). That is, if you read (a) and (b) together I think that takes care of the rare situation where some high bidder might try to exclude by his bid a competitor from getting any later run of the picture at all. I think (a) with (b) with the proviso stricken would be workable.

Judge Bright: Well, he would do that on his own if he attempted anything like that and somebody agreed to it.

Mr. Wright: Yes. I think you may assume that the proviso in (b) is stricken, but that, of course, is with the qualification that (a) goes with (b). I think they have to be read and used together.

Now, all we did in (c), of course, was simply take the language of the Court verbatim in terms of preventing discrimination, and we also simply took the Court's language verbatim in our (d) which requires the offer to theatre by theatre, and picture by picture, which seems to us is obviously the only way in which you can have a genuine competitive disposition of films.

Now, we are not at all prepared to abandon the principles of competitive distribution of runs in those situations laid down in the Court's opinion. We think they are sound providing that they are coupled with the prohibition against cross-licensing which does not compel, or, rather, which eliminates the possibility of your independent having to compete on an auction basis, let us say, with one of these defendant's theatres, where he is faced by a situation where his competitor has an assured source of supply on whatever discriminatory terms he desires to employ, and everything that he has is open to competition. Well, we just don't think that kind of competition would be of any benefit to the non-parties to the suit. But if limited to situations where the non-parties face each other, then we think the Court's proposal, as embodied in what we have offered you, is the best statement of general principles that can be incorporated in the decree.
(4191)
(4192)

Unless there are some questions, I think that is the essence of our proposal as to what the Court ought to do in lieu of the competitive bidding scheme outlined in the opinion.

Judge Bright: I still do not think you have fully answered the question which I asked you about the situations where one of the major defendants was the only exhibitor in any particular community. If you exclude them from using the product of the other four majors, not only they will suffer but the public will suffer from not being permitted to see those pictures.

Mr. Wright: I take it you are not now talking about a so-called closed run situation; you are talking about an actual closed town, that is, where the town has presently no other theatres than those operated by a major defendant, is that right?

Judge Bright: That is right.

Mr. Wright: In that situation, I would say this, that there the proposal does compel that exhibitor to either dispose of one or more of his theatres, that he now has there, to some independent, or, certainly, an independent will be induced to come in, knowing that he can get the product of four of these companies, which that single major defendant cannot do.

I think I have pointed out that we suggested, of course, (4193)
a period of adjustment before the provision went into effect. During that period we think there would be adjustments of two kinds, one, the divestiture of some theatres by these defendants; two, the formation of new distributing groups to enter the distribution field; and, three, the production of substantially more features by each of these defendants themselves. So that the precise effect of the provision when it went into effect, could not be accurately anticipated in advance of those adjustments.

Judge Goddard: How would a producer feel about going ahead and producing more pictures when his market is limited, greatly limited? He would be running into a losing business?

Mr. Wright: If you are talking about a distributor which is a part of or affiliated with one of the major defendants, he is now in the fortunate position of having an assured market and would still have an assured market for his pictures in his own theatres.

It is perfectly true that he would have to go out and seek new outlets in many situations where he now licenses another major defendant, but I am pointing out that the outlets are there. They are in independent hands.
(4194)

Judge Proskauer said yesterday——

Judge Goddard: What facts have you to support that? Don't you suppose that they are placing their pictures with every theatre they possibly can now?

Mr. Wright: Obviously, in first run situations there is an exclusionary element in the placement. You make a selection for first-run situations and, to a lesser extent on subsequent runs, between a number of possible outlets. I am simply saying you would have to select other outlets than those that they now have in a number of situations.

Mr. Proskauer said yesterday, as far as Warner was concerned, the money they made from distribution was made by selling to 15,000 independent exhibitors anyway; that is where the profit in the distribution end of the business came from.

The defendants throughout the trial——

Mr. Proskauer: Why don't you be careful in your statements?

Mr. Wright: (Continuing)—offered statistics to show that, apparently, they licensed each other's theatres simply as some form of public service. All we are telling them is to leave the public service to each other and go out and make some more money by selling some more independent accounts. I don't think that is a particularly harsh treatment as far as they are concerned.

(4195)

Judge Bright: It seems to me that the net result of the situation that I mentioned, in which you say you exclude the use of the product of the other defendants——

Mr. Wright: Other major defendants.

Judge Bright: (Continuing)—the other major defendants, would be to say to the defendant who was operating, "You have a monopoly in that town. You had better get somebody else to enjoy that monopoly."

Mr. Wright: It does not give anyone else a monopoly. All it does, it is saying, "You have a monopoly in the town. We are going to take the monopoly away from you. Someone goes in against you," but it leaves him in the town so that neither he nor the newcomer has the town.

I submitted in some of the memoranda that we sent to the Court before these hearings the opinion of Judge Knight in the Schine case. In the small towns, he handled that problem in that suit, those are mostly towns from five to 25 thousand, by ordering Schine to sell a theatre or theatres of his selection in those towns to an independent competitor in order to create actual competition in those towns and destroy a monopoly position.

The monopoly positions that are involved here are, of course, infinitely more significant in terms of industry control than any of those little situations that were involved in the Schine case, and I submit that the kind of relief that is being proposed here is less drastic, if you compare the scale of the violations and the scale of defendant's operations, than the kind of relief to which both Schine and Crescent have been subjected.

Judge Bright: I suppose a fair answer to that is that in the Schine case you had proof of overt acts by Schine, by which he was driving out competition, where there is no such proof available in this case.

Mr. Wright: Oh, now, if the Court please, how can you better dispose of your competitors than by the maintenance of a system by which you jointly control preferential runs and by which you maintain your ultimate price of the product? And that there is exclusion, partial exclusion, is implicit in any system of runs and clearances that you could operate and in the system that was operated here. The obvious effect of it, as the Court pointed out in the opinion in the first-run situations, is to concentrate the available revenue in the hands of the prior run operator by taking it away from those on the lower levels. I do not see how there is any basis for assuming that power so exercised by these defendants in this case is any less harmful than the kind of power that was exercised in the Schine and Crescent cases.
It seems to me, essentially, that is the real difference between ourselves and the defendants, that is, we presented the case and argued the case in terms of market control, actual power to dominate the market, and I think that if the recent decisions of the Supreme Court mean anything, they mean that power is the crux of Sherman Act cases, and that your relief and the effectiveness of your relief has to be tested by what it does to the defendant's power to continue a control of the market when they have been found to have maintained by illegal means in the past.

Judge Hand: I have an idea: Of course, you are entitled to answer these things Mr. Wright has said, but we can go on here while we, according to the old Philadelphia song, are sitting by the winding creeks holding our breath for weeks and weeks listening to this eternal argument. I do not feel inclined to do it very, very much longer. I think we will have to get down to these main issues. The one Mr. Wright has been discussing is a very main issue, and it certainly calls for discussion as to whether we should or should not adopt it. After we have got rid of that point and some of these other main issues, we will have to sit down, when we can get any time to do it, and I get over my conference with the Circuit Court of Appeals, and make our decision in final form. I do not think we can talk here forever, that is all.

Mr. Proskauer: I have tried to accommodate myself to that admonition.

Judge Hand: You always do. You are always brief. We really cannot, however, go on in this horrible, horrible pastime of settling decrees, which has always been the most obnoxious thing on earth that I have ever had to do since I have been on the bench. We cannot go on forever with that.

Mr. Proskauer: I will begin then, your Honor——

Judge Hand: It is very important, of course, to the parties and to the situation, and we have got to define our terms and define our situations. We cannot prolong this forever.

Mr. Proskauer: I will begin by saying that my embarrassment is that, no matter what we begin to discuss, and I am not saying this in criticism of Mr. Wright, the answer to it is not a discussion of the thing that is sub judice at the moment, it is a recurral to those things which have already been threshed out.

Yesterday I supposed that between Mr. Davis and myself and Mr. Wright we had thoroughly discussed this curious situation of enjoining what he called cross-licensing, which is not cross-licensing at all in the technical sense, and I had occasion then to take your Honor's opinion and to point out exactly what we had been found guilty of and what we had been acquitted of. Now today I get an argument that completely ignores that, that continues to talk about monopolization, that your Honors expressly acquitted us of; that treats the major defendants' buying power as a consolidated thing and that harks back always to what Mr. Wright, really, when you analyze what he said, frankly admits is a coercive divorcement.
(4198a)
(4199)

This notion that if there are three theatres in a town—I am going a little further than Judge Bright's question—let us take a situation where there are three theatres in the town, all owned by major defendants here, but three competing theatres; and he says that those three theatres have got to close because they can't get each other's pictures.

Mr. Wright: I said nothing of the sort. That is what you said.

Mr. Proskauer: Well, I did say it. I say that practically that means they have got to close or be sold, or something, and I am not going to bandy words about it, but what I am trying to say is that it is perfectly apparent and clear over the somantics that Mr. Wright is trying to inject in this discussion, and that is that these people could not see the pictures in those cities.

Now, I advanced the argument yesterday, and I believe that it found some favor with the Court, that the injunctive provisions of this decree were, as I put it, punishment sufficiently deterrent to fit the particular crimes of which we have been found guilty. I do not want to go over that argument all again. I sympathize very deeply with what Judge Hand has said. May I now incorporate it by reference here and ask your Honors in considering what Mr. Wright has said today, just read what Mr. Davis and I said yesterday in answer to him when he was saying exactly the same thing that he said today, and now revised in a different form with the same assumptions.

Essentially this talk about our not showing one another's pictures is an enforced divorcement which your Honors have held was totally unavailing and totally unnecessary, and if you wish to go into the details of those figures that he has been raising, my friend Mr. Caskey here is ready to take it up and give your Honors a very good talk on it. If you do not want to go into it, we are perfectly willing to let it go.

Now, I am not going to defend myself against certain misquotations here. The 65 per cent figure that I used simply meant that our theatres in certain large areas would be dark that part of the time that we could not get other major product. It did not mean at all that we were taking 65 per cent of the product, because it related only to small areas and special situations. And so I could go through all he said, straightening out these misquotations.

But now I want to follow your Honor's suggestion of coming to what I think is the heart of this thing. The cross-licensing feature we think we disposed of yesterday to your Honor's satisfaction. I agree with Mr. Wright that the purpose of a decree is to cure the evil complained of. Now, in what postures are we here? You wrote, your Honors, that you wanted this competitive bidding. We have not asked you to exclude it from this decree. I wish to make clear our exact position. When severe criticism of it was made by independents or by exhibitors, we undertook to expand the injunctive part of your decree over and beyond something that was not in your opinion, and, namely, to subject ourselves to injunction with respect to run as well as clearance. I emphasize that. That is the essence of Mr. Seymour's proposal. We are not asking you to enjoin us in this respect. We are suggesting to you that if in your wisdom you believe that the competitive system has too many difficulties, that if you add to the injunctive provisions that are already in this decree the injunctive provisions that Mr. Seymour has suggested, you have effectively created a machinery to destroy the four evils that we have been found guilty of and which I enumerated yesterday. You will kill them if you do that, in our judgment. And I do not want the significance of what has been done here to take either of two aspects, either that we are here trying to get away from your Honors' opinion with respect to competitive bidding—because we are not. If that is what you want, we have suggested clauses to implement it. If you decide to change your minds on it, we give you this suggestion as an additional harness and rein on us that will, we believe, effectuate the purposes of your opinion.
(4201)

Now, a great deal has been said here about arbitration. I start out my discussion about arbitration by a reference to your Honors' opinion, "Even though we may regard it as desirable that such a system in view of its demonstrated usefulness should be continued in aid of the decree which we propose to direct."

That is what your Honors have said about it. There are two opinions about arbitration among certain groups of exhibitors. All those who have lost arbitration think it is a terrible system, and all those who have won them think it is great, and that is the foundation, I believe, of Judge Arnold's embarrassment in getting conflicting views from various members of his organization; but this system which was set up under Judge Goddard's guidance has justified the encomium that you put on it, which I think no fairminded student of this problem can gainsay.

Now, Mr. Wright refers to it as our arbitration system financed by us. That is one of the most—I won't say "indecent"; I am looking for a less harsh word than that—I will just say unfair insinuations I have ever heard from counsel in a courtroom. How is it our arbitration system, excepting that we pay for it under the direction of the Court and our consent? Did we appoint a single arbitrator? Every member of the Appeals Board was appointed by Judge Goddard, who was so meticulous about it that he would not even take suggestions from anybody. The panels are chosen by the American Arbitration Association. What does counsel mean by coming in here with the dirty innuendo that that arbitration system is our arbitration system? It is a system set up, to use your language, in aid of the decree, and I propose now to demonstrate to a mathematical certainty that you have got a right to put it in this decree despite the turnabout of the Government.

When it comes to the implementation of it, let me say that the rules of arbitration of course have to meet the approval of this Court just as they had to meet Judge Goddard's approval under the consent decree. It is impossible to make any man arbitrate. You can't force him into this system either by making it a part of a decree or otherwise. (4204)

And in the rare and almost unheard of case where all parties did not gladly come in and consent to arbitration, arbitration would be abortive, and the system would not help with respect to a situation where A and B claim clearance or run, and A wanted to arbitrate and B did not, you would have to rely on the injunctive provisions of this decree, and we would have to decide at our peril, and we could not invoke arbitration whether it was in the decree or out of the decree. But we are not going to cast this system into the ashcan because of that exceptional case. We are going to think of the 400-odd cases to which Judge Goddard referred where everybody was ready to come in and arbitrate it, and we are going to think of the posture that this Court would be in if it does not create such a machinery in aid of this decree where anybody who feels himself aggrieved under this, he has got to go down to the Attorney General and make a motion to punish somebody for contempt because he did not think somebody restrained from discriminating in giving someone a run; and I am saying to your Honors with all the earnestness I possess as an officer of this court that for your own protection in the administration of this decree; it is vital that you preserve an arbitration system properly and decently set up under your own supervision, we consent to pay for it.

Now, I propose, as I said, to demonstrate to a mathematical certainty that you have got the power to do it, and that argument divides itself as a legal argument into two heads. First you have got the power to do it, irrespective of the consent decree; you have got a right to impose upon us our consent to do anything that you think is helpful in carrying out your decree. You have got an absolute right to say to us, "This Court insists that you set up an arbitration system or else we will divorce or give cross-licensing injunctions, or any other thing."
(4206)

If you have got a right to impose it on us, certainly the fact that we are not only ready but glad to have it imposed on us in our desire to bring peace into this industry, does not affect your power to bring peace into this industry, does not affect your power to impose it on us. And when Mr. Wright talks about the bill in this case, to which Judge Goddard referred, in anticipating that reference I had run off here copies of the decretal prayer of the plaintiff that a "nation-wide system of impartial arbitration tribunals or such other means of enforcement as the Court may deem proper be established pursuant to the final decree of this Court in order to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibition of illegal practices may be contained therein."

Judge Hand: Is that the amended complaint?

Mr. Proskauer: That is the complaint upon which this case is now before your Honors, the supplemental and amended complaint.

And while Mr. Wright has got a right just as a mere matter of power to change his mind, though he signed this together with the then distinguished Attorney General, Judge Arnold, he has got a right to change his mind, but that is the pleading we are here under.

Mr. Wright: May I make one point clear right now? If this Court had intimated in its opinion that it could or (4207) would impose a system of that kind on these defendants, not make it subject to their consent, we certainly would have presented you one, and if that is the position of the Court now, that is something that certainly was not revealed by the opinion. The opinion said that it must be conditioned upon the consent of the defendants.

Now I don't see much point in arguing the matter now as though you had said "it doesn't have to be conditioned upon the consent of the parties. We will impose such an arbitration system."

Mr. Proskauer: As usual, I find myself in a complete haze as to what the distinguished Assistant Attorney General is trying to say.

We proposed and served on him a draft decree calling for certain arbitral provisions. We got back from him a proposal that the whole arbitration system be scrapped. Now I don't know what he is talking about, and I don't want to waste any more time bandying words with him. I am here to ask your Honors to preserve this arbitration system and I am arguing the point that you have the power to do it. You have the power to do it because the Government itself has alleged that it is an appropriate method of carrying out a decree and because the Government itself has prayed for it, and even if the Government had not, you have got a right (4208) to impose it on us, as I said, as an efficient means of carrying out the purposes of the decree.

Now I don't know what he wants changed in the present system. He has not honored us with his confidence in that respect. All we got from him, as I say, was a curt statement that the arbitration system would be liquidated.

But there is another point——

Mr. Wright: That statement is untrue.

Mr. Proskauer: Well, I don't propose to argue that with you, Mr. Wright. I propose to finish my argument to your Honors.

This consent decree is not a piece of waste paper. I have read opinions in two cases—the Swift case and the Glass case I think it was—the Chrysler case—where the Supreme Court considered the power of the court to amend the consent decree. I have never heard of any litigation which questioned the power of a court to preserve so much of a consent decree as they thought was proper. There isn't a case like that in the books. That consent decree was a judgment of this court. I am not now talking about it as a contract or any of those controversial things which are discussed in those two opinions. I am taking it at its face. It is a judgment of this court. And if you discard everything else I have said up to this point, I would say that your Honors had the power to reserve what that judgment adjudicated, namely, the establishment of an arbitration system. It is in your wisdom to decide whether or not to do it, whether it is an appropriate instrument; but you have the power to do it. After the Government consented to that judgment there isn't the slightest doubt.

Now I want to say one more thing and then I shall have finished. Judge Hand asked, as I understand it, a question that raised the general subject of whether you could not do this arbitration thing outside of a decree of the court. We can't. It raises a question that is too serious legally to be thought of, namely, whether, if we go out and try to agree with one another and with exhibitors to a general system of arbitration, we are not bringing ourselves within the condemnation of those sections similar to what your Honors have condemned as a general system of clearance, and I for one would not dream of permitting a client to enter into such a system, however beneficial it was, unless this Court ordered it.

Now I see Mr. Wright chuckling, and I know his argument, I have heard it before. It is the absurd claim of the plaintiff in the St. Louis case that the court has authorized a violation of the Sherman Law. And despite his glee I will meet it head on.
(4210)

What may be a violation of the Sherman Law if it is a voluntary agreement among individuals—and I don't say that this is or is not; I am just saying I am not going to take the chance in the present temper of the Attorney General's office—"Carthage delenda est," if I may quote.

Mr. Davis: It was not original with me.

Mr. Proskauer: It was most original to you. We can't do that. But your Honors can compel us to consent to a system. If we were thwarting the Court and thwarting the Attorney General's office voluntarily, it might be the subject of denunciation from such purists as now seek to enforce the Sherman Law. It does not follow at all from that that your Honors have not the perfect right when the Government prayed for it, when the Government prayed for it, to set up exactly what the Government prayed for.

And I again say to your Honors in all deep earnestness that whatever else you may do with this decree, if you want to keep this Court free from continuity of applications, from embarrassment in the decision of all kinds of controversial questions, and give the independent, if they choose to seek it, a quick, cheap and efficient method of settling these controversies, keep in those provisions for arbitration.
(4211)

Judge Hand: Now, Mr. Caskey, it was said that you have some observations about this matter which the Government calls cross-licensing, which you wish to have put in the decree.

Mr. Caskey: The observations that I have to make are simply to call your Honors' attention to the state of the record upon which any judgment would have to be entered. There is in evidence one exhibit which shows the distribution of the first-run of the product among all of the first-run theatres in the 92 cities in the United States that have a population of 100,000 or more.

Judge Hand: You had better refer to that by exhibit number.

Mr. Caskey: 428 is my recollection.

Mr. Wright: Right.

Judge Hand: And whose exhibit was it?

Mr. Caskey: That is Government's Exhibit 428. That shows with respect to each theatre which operated on a first-run basis the product that it played during the 1943-1944 season.

There is also in evidence—and I will supply the stenographer with the exhibit numbers—answers to interrogatories by each of the eight defendants which show the theatres which operated on a first-run basis in cities of a population of 25,000 or more.

(4212)

Mr. Wright: I think that is 432.

Mr. Caskey: That is right—well, that is your summary.

Mr. Wright: Yes, that is the tabulation from these interrogatory answers.

Mr. Caskey: That is right. That shows the distribution of the first block of pictures released by each of the companies; that is to say, taking Twentieth Century-Fox, which shows where the first block, which was three pictures, played first-run in the cities of 25,000 or more.

There is no evidence as to the product used by any affiliated theatres which operated on other than first-run. There is no evidence——

Mr. Wright: I think that is in error. There are interrogatory answers as to the larger cities, you will recall, which cover the first five runs in the largest, the first four in the next largest, and so on.

Mr. Caskey: That is for 1936-1937 in the old case.

Mr. Wright: No, the 1943-1944 answers. They cover the first five runs in the largest, the first four in the next largest, the first three in the next largest, and so on down, so they do show the extent of the defendants' control.

(4213)

Mr. Caskey: We can't agree on anything. That is, as far as I recall it, with respect to one picture.

Mr. Wright: That is right, with respect to one picture.

Mr. Caskey: With respect to one sample picture and for that purpose that proved nothing.

Mr. Wright: That selection of a sample picture was made on the theory that it would be representative of the defendant's products.

Mr. Caskey: I have to dispute that, I am sorry. It was the picture which grossed the most. It was the picture which had the widest distribution.

Now I repeat, that except for this there is no evidence as to what product any affiliated theatre played when it operated other than first-run, or when it played in a city, or any other run if the city was smaller than 25,000. Now that is from the exhibition end.

Now from the distribution end there are in evidence exhibits and tabulations which are referred to in the Government's brief showing the percentage of revenue which each of the defendants received from each of the affiliated theatres, that is to say, speaking very generally, the proof showed the percentage of Columbia's revenue which it received—not Columbia's, because that would be inapposite—but Twentieth Century, the revenue which it receives from Paramount, Warners, R.K.O., Loew's theatres, its own theatres, and the independents. That would show the percentage of revenue which it would lose under this ban against so-called cross-licensing, unless, of course, the theatres were sold to someone else and the revenue recouped in that manner.

(4214)

Judge Hand: This was first-run revenue?

Mr. Caskey: No, the latter referred to the total national revenue that the distributors received.

Mr. Seymour: Could I just add a word upon the subject of cross-licensing, as the Government calls it? It seems to me a most fantastic proposal in favor of restoring competition to take out of competition by court decree those most able, or among those most able to compete. The proposal is a proposal that the distributors should be denied the opportunity to have their product sought by most of the 3,000 best theatres in the United States. And the proposal is, to the defendants as exhibitors, that most of those theatres shall be denied an opportunity to seek or compete for product, and that is all based upon the premise which your Honors expressly rejected, that there was monopolization between these companies in their mutual dealings; and I submit that the proposal is almost too fantastic to merit all the consideration that your Honors have so patiently given to it.

Mr. David: Will your Honors permit me just a word, not by way of argument, but to set the record straight?

(4215)

I dislike this phrase "cross-licensing" in this connection. Cross-licensing involves, by its very use, the suggestion of mutuality. If there is anything in this case which has been proven up to the hilt by every witness it is that there is no reciprocal obligation on the part of any licensee of one of the major's films to reciprocate by a similar exchange of business or, if you choose, a favor.

There is nothing in the record which can possibly support the assertion, much less indicate, that there is a system of reciprocal favoritism.

I much prefer, if we can, to get the phrase out of our minds and that we should drop the phrase cross-licensing and speak, if you please, of inter-defendant licensing. That is what it is. It is not cross-licensing in any sense.

I remember, when the Government started with its charts and exhibits, it spoke of diagonal-licensing, and that, of course, depended entirely upon the method by which the chart was constructed, and those diagonals did appear. I would rather have diagonal-licensing than cross-licensing.

We were told, when this suggestion came forward from the Government, that it would not hurt us; that, after all, (4216) we could keep our theatres alight with our own films and with the films of the minors; and we are now told quite frankly this morning, the mask is thrown off, we are told that the real effect of it will be that some of our theatres will be left dark, and the economic consequence of that will be the Government will attain its primary objective and we will sell the theatres rather than keep a caretaker there with no audience to attend it.

In other words, what the Government is proposing is that, instead of using the guillotine on it, it prefers to use slow poison, and whatever satisfaction that evinced I suppose we should be grateful for.

But there is just one aspect of this thing which I do not think anybody has alluded to on this Governmental program. Suppose they were all driven out of the use of each other's films, and when I say all I am speaking, of course, of the majors at the table, and we are all going to be supplied by the minors' films. Has it occurred to the Government that by throwing all that new weight upon the films of the minors, there won't be enough of the minors' films to go around?

If the minors are to fill up the deficiencies in our theatres, we are not going to be helped if we have all got to resort to that common pool and that common pool alone, which, of itself, mathematically, I think, demonstrates that the (4217)
Government cannot have it both ways. It cannot invite us to keep our theatres open from that source and then say, of course, with the demand upon that source, that we can possibly keep our theatres open by using it.

From every angle, if your Honors please, at which you view it, it is a perfectly absurd suggestion. It seems to bear no resemblance whatever to anything of fact or to anything of law.

And may I say just this about the Sherman Law and about the apparent attitude of the Government? It is very evident that this motion picture scene is not a plateau or a tabletop. It is a landscape with hills and with valleys in it, and some on the hilltops get more sunlight than those who are located down in the lower valleys. It seems to be the theory of the government that on that landscape you can take an iron sheet, called the Sherman Law, and press it down so that when you lift it the landscape will be a level plateau. The Sherman Law does not contemplate that, no law has ever contemplated it, and there is not now, there never has been, and the wit of man will never devise a statute under which one dollar will do the work of ten. Those inequalities will persist as long as the activities of men differ, as long as their capacities differ, and as long as their earnings differ. And the Sherman Law is not directed to the creation of a statute of absolute equality at all. In essence the Sherman Law, and it is often spoken of as the law of the jungle—I do not think it is the law of the jungle, I think it is the law of nature—in essence the Sherman Law is that the race shall be to the swift and the battle to the strong, and no artificial impediments shall be put in their way.

Mr. Jackson: May I ask your Honor whether you would care to hear the attitude of the independent exhibitors represented by Colonel Barton and myself with respect to the proposal made this morning?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Jackson: I will be very brief. In the first place, in order that there be no misunderstanding either with the Court or with the two thousand odd exhibitors we represent, I should like to say that our instructions were to come here, to appear, to seek intervention, if the Court would permit it, and, finally, to oppose in every possible way the imposition of competitive bidding, or, as it has been called, auction sales.

We are not authorized and cannot part from those instructions. We still seek intervention and we still ask the Court to throw out competitive bidding for the reasons which we have given and which I will not repeat except to say that we regard it as creating a situation where two or more exhibitors will compete among themselves as to which shall pay the most money to the distributors. And we believe that the other relief which your Honors have in your decree is sufficient to cure the evils which you have found to exist.

Yesterday we were asked to consider your proposal which Mr. Seymour has presented and we proceeded to consider it and get in touch with as many of these exhibitors as we could reach in person or by telephone. Among those whom we reached, only two have opposed it. They have said that they want neither competitive bidding nor arbitration. They want a free, open and unrestricted market. The remainder of those, and they are not too many, but all we could reach, have taken the postion that this proposal is far less objectionable than competitive bidding, and they would, I think, much prefer to see it go into effect if the sale of features, of pictures, is to be the subject of your Honors' decree.

I think that constitutes our position. Perhaps your Honors would hear Colonel Barton a moment, if he has something to add or anything to correct.

Mr. Barton: May it please the Court, I do not think there is much I can add to Mr. Jackson's statement, except perhaps I might briefly restate our position and enlarge upon our reasons, because I have been in closer touch with our clients, who are scattered from Virginia to Texas, and to Arkansas, than has Mr. Jackson.

They fell, from their experience with the practices of the defendants, which the Court disapproves, that the dozen or so remedial actions directed by the Court will effect the desired results without competitive bidding as outlined by the Court, which is a repetition of the argument I have already made. My clients feel the losses which will flow from the competitive bidding direction are far greater than any possible benefits which may accrue for the reasons previously stated. We have listened with a great interest to Mr. Davis's plausible sounding presentation of the major producers' version of competitive bidding. In our opinion it does not overcome any of the administrative difficulties which I pointed out and will inflict even greater harm on the exhibitors than we had previously anticipated because it makes the defendants the legislature, the judge, the jury, and, finally, the sheriff, to transfer more money from the exhibitors' pocketbooks to the treasuries of the defendants.

Our reiterated plea is that competitive bidding be eliminated from the decree, and, within the limitations of, or the orbit established by the other provisions of the opinion, that the exhibitors be permitted freely to barter and trade with the defendants. We still have some of the faith of our fathers in free enterprise.

In respect to the proposal advanced by the defendants as a substitute for the competitive bidding proposal, we are most desirous of assisting the Court by a definite expression of our views. As Mr. Jackson has said, we have had difficulty ascertaining our clients' views because of the large territory in which they live. Many we have not reached. Two, as he said, are very strongly opposed to the proposal, especially the arbitration provisions. To the extent we have been able to ascertain our clients' opinions, it may be summarized as follows: They are unalterably opposed to competitive bidding as outlined by the Court. They believe that the other remedies which the Court has directed are adequate to cure the ills of which complaint is made without implementing them, these remedies, by competitive bidding.

But if the Court is finally of the opinion that these remedies must be implemented, then our clients feel that the principles of the substitute proposal are much to be preferred to competitive bidding as directed by the Court. I used the word "principles" because we have not had time or opportunity to go over the details of the proposal with our clients as fully as we should like to do.

Mr. Arnold: In that connection, if the Court please, may I make a request which I have been asked to make on behalf of my client: In the event that the Court should decide on an arbitration system, we would be greatly indebted to the Court if before formulating those findings, our clients should have an opportunity to see them.

Mr. Williams: If the Court please, in so far as my client, the Southern California Theatre Owners Association is concerned, I previously have not had an apportunity to take up and discuss with them the substitute proposal, but I think in essence I can adopt for them what Judge Arnold has said about the American Theatres Association, and I think that fairly represents our position at this time.

Mr. Raftery: May it please the Court, after all the reference to the minors, may I state that all this discussion today brings us back to the proposition that we would like on behalf of United Artists the privilege of submitting a separate decree. We do not like the Government's decree.
We appreciate the great kindness in suggesting this diagonal licensing, if I may not be offensive to Mr. Davis, because we realize the great competitive advantage we will have in dealing with the theatres of the big five in the future. We do not like what has been submitted by the majors, and I think I outlined we do not like some of the conclusions of the learned Court. We felt and we argued strenuously, I believe, during the trial that we should, instead of being over here in the bleachers, we should have been outside the fence at all times. We feel there are certain specific findings of fact that as regards each of us separately that make us perhaps no better but at least different from our brethern at this table. We feel to throw us into a decree where we have so many separate problems, that only some of these folks have, —and we did not submit a decree because we wanted to ask your permission first; we only submitted findings and a brief to support the findings. For example, the definition of a feature picture which Mr. Wright says is anything that is 4000 feet or longer, we think has got to be supplemented because you have in this industry things known as Westerns, which some of us handle, and I do not mean "The Outlaw"; we have Westerns which were sold in series, the only way you could sell them, and that is the only way the exhibitors want to buy it, and we think there should be a specific exemption in this decree that would cover Westerns as well as shorts.

You heard Mr. Isseks yesterday or the day before talk about road shows. My company has roadshown perhaps as many pictures as any other company in this industry, perhaps more. In the old days of the company, Mr. Fairbanks and Miss Pickford and Griffith generally road-showed every important picture they had. Vanguard, one of our producers, has its Duel In the Sun, and wants us to road show that. We think that the Government could aptly sit down with us and work out an exemption on road shows and an exemption on Westerns, because they are not the ordinary supply, the ordinary commodity of commerce that is involved in this litigation. We would like to sit down with the Government, if possible, and with your Honors at some time and consider the findings, our proposals.

When I wrote that United Artists did not fix prices, as your Honors found in your general opinion—I knew I did not brief it before because it escaped my attention, because I believed, perhaps foolishly, that your Honors would find that in view of the fact that there was no sale of tangible property involved in this business, that price-fixing did not apply. I think your Honors made the first finding of this character in all the litigation on price-fixing, that there is something illegal in this type of transaction where you fix an admission price in a theatre. There has never been a finding in the books, so far as I can find, and I think I have exhausted every authority, where price-fixing in the manner set out in this trial has been held illegal per se by any court. In fact, the basis of every decision where price-fixing has been found illegal is where the seller either parted with the title, or as they did in the Victor case, pretended to make a lease or license when in reality they made a sale.

In that United Artists license agreement of October 1941, I examined every record that was put in, and United Artists did not put in a provision that the exhibitor must charge X dollars or X cents admission to its theatre. The simple provision was that the exhibitor warranted that the admission price at his theatre was blank cents. There was no penalty provision; there was no agreement that he must charge it for the exhibition of that picture; it was a mere warrant. And we ask therefore for the privilege of having our findings passed on individually as they are submitted, and that we be permitted to submit a separate decree, because I look on the price-fixing thing as perhaps the most serious thing so far as the independent distributor is concerned. We depend on our revenue on percentage engagements for all important pictures. We can't accept the suggestion of flat rentals. If we want to go back to the flat rental days in this business, then we might as well give up as far as quality is concerned.

Judge Hand: Had you no provisions in any of your licenses as to price maintenance?

Mr. Raftery: Prior to October 1941 there were provisions in some of the license agreements that are in that the exhibitor agreed to charge for that particular picture. There was no penalty if he did not. From October 1941 every printed contract that Mr. Wright has put in evidence has the mere warranty provision, just as I put it in the proposal, with no penalty——

Mr. Wright: Is it your position that there are no penalties for breach of the warranty or breach of the contract?

Mr. Raftery: Yes.

Mr. Wright: In that I think Mr. Raftery is in error.
(4227)

Judge Hand: What?

Mr. Wright: In that I think Mr. Raftery is in error.

Mr. Raftery: Did you produce a witness to show that we ever exacted a penalty or ever tried to stop an exhibition?

Mr. Wright: I believe if your Honors will examine the agreements he refers to you will find that there are penalties prescribed not for failure to maintain admission prices as such but for breach of the agreement.

Mr. Raftery: There is nothing in the record that we have ever at any time tried to enforce any of those old ones; but from October 1941—and we are looking at the present, not at the past—there is no provision fixing admissions in any one of those contracts.

Now we come to the question of run and clearance. We have asked for specific penalties on those. I am not going to argue that now. We respectfully ask that the Court give consideration to Road Show, to a definition of Features.

I know the independent exhibitors. I know the whole industry will agree that Westerns deserve a special category. I feel that road shows are very important because they do not come frequently, but when they do come they are an emergency type of picture.

I understand Mr. Wright stated in answer to Mr. Isseks that everything was cured as regards Duel In The Sun because he said he heard from someone that Raftery was going to appeal on the price-fixing. That does not cure it. Let us assume that we do decide to appeal on the price-fixing, I feel we will have to, if your Honors adopt this new rule that price-fixing per se is illegal in the manner in which we do it in the motion picture business; I think for the preservation of independent production that we have got to appeal on that.

As regards our other problems—and I have had specific findings submitted—we distribute for about 23 independent producers. Each of them separately by contract control our general sales policy on each picture. They are the ultimate to say whether we take an agreement or do not take an agreement. I think competitive bidding is one of the loveliest-sounding things that I have ever heard in my 27 years in the industry. I have not the great sympathy for Judge Arnold's clients or Colonel Barton's; I have never known an exhibitor yet who could not take care of himself when he bought pictures.

(4229)

I told your Honors at the opening of the trial we tried to get everything we could get, and they tried to pay us as little as possible, and the injection of competitive bidding is not going to change that. I do not believe that any two clients, whether they are independent or affiliated, are going to break down and start bidding furiously to get any picture we have got. They are going to find a way to control competitive bidding if it is put in, and they will control it by not bidding. I believe that is the only practical thing it will come to.

However, I have no opinion on whether it should be in the decree or out of the decree. I do not want it in any decree against us, and that is the reason I am asking for a separate decree. I want to enter a decree or a proposed decree where there are as few injunctive provisions against us as possible, and no mandatory provisions about what we have to do in the future.

Judge Hand: Why, you just want a decree in your favor.

Mr. Raftery: I asked for that in the beginning.

Judge Hand: I know that, but that is not a settlement of the decree——

Mr. Raftery: I know——

(4230)

Judge Hand: Now, wait a minute. That is the trouble with most of these attempts to settle a decision of the Court. They come back and really put in there what they would have put in if there had been no decision——

Mr. Proskauer: I am not guilty.

Judge Hand: Then I do not see that that serves any purpose; but if you want to put in some kind of a proposed decree with regard to yourself or your clients that meets in general with our decision, why, go ahead. I do not see the difference between what you propose as far as preservation of your rights is concerned and your situation now.

Mr. Raftery: Well, it is a little more than that, your Honor. I think that I am fair in asking your Honors, if I have pointed out to you in these proposed findings what I believe are errors that you have made in regard to United Artists' position—I feel I am fair in asking you to reconsider, for example, on the price-fixing proposition; and if the undisputed evidence is that there has not been a single price-fixing provision in a United Artists contract since October 1941, why is there any necessity of any injunctive provision on that point against a defendant like United Artists? Why should we be put in the same position as the other seven defendants?

(4231)

Judge Goddard: You are only speaking of United Artists——

Mr. Raftery: I am only speaking of United Artists on that.

Now, as regards the Road Show provisions and Westerns, there has been no evidence of any kind or character put into this record except what was advanced by the amicus curiae the other day on what road shows really are. All we have is a definition. We strongly urge that road shows be omitted by specific direction, because we do not think it is going to increase the flow of interstate commerce one way or another. As regards any other definition of features I am willing to accept Mr. Wright's conclusion that 4000 feet—I think he is a little low on it; I think 5000 would be a little fairer—as a definition of what constitutes a feature film.

I do think that we could accomplish a lot if we eliminate road shows and eliminate that and straighten out our facts on United Artists in connection with the price-fixing, and I intend to sumbit a decree which is not, as you put it, a victory—I intend to submit a decree with the proper injunctive provisions in based upon your decision, not on my wishful thinking.

(4232)

Judge Hand: Well, you can do that.

Now we will adjourn until a quarter past two.

(Recess to 2:15 p.m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

Mr. Seymour: May it please the Court, I have been asked to carry along now with the discussion of the yellow-covered document, if that is agreeable to your Honors.

I am going to pick it up with section III on page 13 because I think the other intermediate sections, which we haven't discussed, are clear enough on the document without any separate discussion. Involves arbitration and other things which we talked about generally.

Mr. Cooke: If it please the Court, before we proceed to section III, as Mr. Seymour talks about, which concerns the major defendants only, on which I will have nothing to say, might I just say one brief word on the clearance provision in arbitration in connection therewith? It is this, that we feel that the clearance provision on page 4, proposed by the Government, that is, that we cannot grant any clearance against theatres in substantial competition with a theatre receiving the license for exhibition in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect the licensee in the run granted, is in direct conflict with the Interstate Circuit case as construed by the Supreme Court itself in one sentence in the Ethyl Gasoline case, in which it said that the restrictions in the Interstate Circuit case were imposed "for the exploitation or promotion of a business not embraced within the patent."

It seems to me that in granting clearance to protect a run, we are doing precisely that. Protect a run can mean nothing else but protect the revenue of the licensee, and we feel that that is something that we cannot do. The major suggestion adds to that, to protect the licensee in the run, the idea of protecting the licensor, and it is my position that under the General Electric and General Talking Pictures cases, the latter decided in 1938, that that is the only proper provision that we have a right to impose any restriction which is reasonably related to the reward of the licensor.

One other thing and I am through, again in connection with clearance: I spoke yesterday of the mutual incompatability between protecting the licensor's interest and also the licensee's run, as suggested by the majors, and took one example of a flat rental contract. We sell a picture for a thousand dollars. Your Honors have held that we are completely out on a flat rental contract, that we have no continuing interest there and we have no right to fix the admission prices. Our interest, if we are getting a thousand dollars for that run, is to fix as short a clearance as possible in order that we may be able to get as much as possible from the subsequent runs. That is as plain as could possibly be. What is the licensee's interest? The licensee's interest is to have as long a clearance as possible, so as to be protected as much as possible from the subsequent runs. Therefore, I cannot understand how we can protect the licensor's interest and the licensee's interest at the same time. How can we grant any clearance in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect both the licensor's interest and the licensee's interest? I cannot understand how any such thing is workable at all. Now, that is to be arbitrated. I cannot understand how the arbitration of such a thing can possibly be the fact.
(4234)

I thank you.

(4235)

Mr. Seymour: Turning to section III, the heading of that section on page 13 merely follows the form which we followed in section II; that is, the injunction is against the defendants as exhibitors, whereas in section II it was against them as distributors. That structure seems to us convenient and desirable for clarity.

In subdivision 1 of III we have brought into the injunction against the defendants as exhibitors the inhibitions of section II on franchises, formulate deals and master agreements made with distributor defendants, and we think that is the convenient way to incorporate the appropriate provision there. The Government's section I is inappropriate first because the incorporation of paragraph 5 of their draft brings over their injunction against all clearance contracts between defendants, which we discussed on Tuesday, and as to which we take the position that, of course, the Court should only enjoin the agreements to the extent that they are unreasonable, as the opinion indicates.

In addition, their paragraphs 6 and 7 which they seek to incorporate by reference by section I, enjoin master agreements, formula deals and franchises with non-defendants. We do not think the Court intended to reach out beyond the parties to the suit in that regard.

(4236)

Mr. Caskey: May I just point out to the Court that Tuesday we agreed that in lieu of our proposed subdivision (5) of section II, we would take subdivision (7) of section II as proposed by the Government, as we amended it orally in court.

Mr. Seymour: That would still require or still indicate the adoption of our form of section I.

Mr. Caskey: That is correct.

Mr. Seymour: The reference to the Government's subdivision (7).

Now as to Arabic 2 on page 14, that is a section in three subdivisions in which we deal with your Honors' disposition of theatre pooling agreements; and we specify in the three subdivisions the types of pooling agreements which are enjoined. Subdivision (a) deals with a pooling agreement involving a given theatre of a defendant and a given theatre of an exhibitor, normally in competition with the defendant's theatre where they are operated as a unit or whereby the business policies are collectively determined by a joint committee or one of the exhibitors, and whereby the profits of such pooled theatres are divided among such defendant and such exhibitor.

Now the difference between our language and the Government's is primarily in the use of the word "and," "and whereby the profits of such pooled theatres are divided."

In your opinion in discussing the pools which you find illegal you use the word "and." In the portion of your opinion suggesting a decree you use the word "or". We rather assumed in view of the traditional definition of a pool that the word "and" was the one that you had intended because it is perfectly obvious that normally in a pool operation of this kind an essential characteristic is that the profits of the pooled theatres are to be divided, and we think that ought to be adopted and the other changes are purely in the interest of clarification.

The reason I think the word "and" is important is this: there may be situations where a defendant owns a theatre and has leased perhaps from some real estate operator or anybody else another theatre on a straight rental or on some other basis but where there is no division of profits between the theatres, but since the defendant is the owner of one theatre and the lessee of another, he naturally operates them together. I don't think your Honors were talking about that kind of pool.

Mr. Wright: May I say something on that? I think counsel overlooks Paragraph 4 of our judgment, and subdivision 2(c) of theirs which deals with the lease situation. It is perfectly clear there is no attempt to enjoin the making of leases except where there is a profit-sharing arrangement. That is explicitly covered in their provision and in our provision.

But where they say they think they would like to be able to make or to continue to perform pooling, "a given theatre of a defendant and a given theatre of an exhibitor, normally in competition with the defendant's theatre, are operated as a unit, or whereby the business policies for such theatres are collectively determined by a joint committee."

Now they say both those situations apparently should be permitted if there is no division of profits. That seems absurd to us. Regardless of whether there was a division of profits or not, if the policies are jointly made and if they are operated as a unit, clearly that is the kind of operation that the Court intended to condemn and prohibit.

Mr. Seymour: We took it from your Honors' opinion that you were concerned with the traditional pooling situation where there is a division of profits. We were also concerned with what Mr. Wright thinks the language was not intended to reach and I think the only way to be sure on that is to have the decree clear enough on that point.

Now in subdivision 2(b) we deal with the pooling agreements where the parties agree that they may not acquire other theatres in the competitive area where the pool operates "without first offering such other theatres for inclusion in the pool."

That represents no real difference in substance from the Government's language. We think it is a little clearer and therefore suggest that since it is important that the decree be clear, that we use clear language.

Turning over to page 15, 2(e), the language of our 2(c) makes it plain that the type of pooling agreement there dealt with is one where there is released by a defendant to another defendant or to another exhibitor operating in the same competitive area and where the profits of the allied theatres are divided. And we think it plain from your Honors' opinion, which is commented upon in the right hand column, that the reference to profits are profits of allied theatres, but that you did not intend to bar a lease where there was no—a lease at least not involving another defendant, where there was no division of profits.

Now we provide, as the Government also provides in its draft that such agreements mentioned in Section 2 are terminated within two years after the date of the decree. That is the idea suggested by the Government and the only difference between us is that we have another provision in this decree (4240) that the time provisions do not begin to run until the decree becomes final—final by failure to appeal or upon the mandate of the Supreme Court. Obviously a change in the status quo as to many of these matters today would be difficult until the decree has finality.

Our Section 3 deals with ownership in conjunction between defendants of a proprietary interest in a theatre or a corporation and so on, and then also deals with the situation where one defendant leases to another on a profit-sharing basis. Both those are enjoined.

We think it important that the word "proprietary" be used to make it plain that in a mere lease between defendants on a flat rental basis, where defendant A leases to defendant B on a flat rental basis, that this is not intended to bar such lease because in your opinion you indicated that such normal business transactions were not to be enjoined. If you use language other than "proprietary interest in conjunction," there might be a doubt about that situation, and the Government suggests language which I think is doubtful in that regard. We again provide that such relationship shall be terminated within two years and the remaining differences between our draft and the Government's are these:

First, there is no provision in our draft for approval of (4241)
the Court where a joint interest between defendants is liquidated by one defendant buying out another. Your Honors, you recall, dealt with two situations involving common interest. One was this joint ownership between defendants. The other was a joint interest with independent exhibitors.

That whole matter is dealt with in our Section 4. You did not indicate that you thought it necessary to have court approval for transactions between defendants where one bought out the other, and I should think it was unnecessary because obviously in such a transaction there is no real interference with the competition in the area where one defendant buys out the other. That simply liquidates the illegal relationship which your Honors have found, and I don't see why your Honors should be bothered with applications. At least you didn't direct it, but the Government's draft does.

Judge Hand: What does the Government say to that?

Mr. Wright: There is no question about the fact that it goes beyond what the Court ordered in the opinion. We felt it was necessary to go beyond that as a corollary in our proposal in order to prevent the defendants from using each other as outlets for their films. Naturally any such purpose might be frustrated by so handling that the distribution of joint interests went to two or three of the defendants in a (4242) town where there was only one in the town before.

It was where the effect of that kind of competition would not permit real competition but would restrain, that we made this provision, and for that reason we provide for the exercise of judicial control.

Judge Hand: Is this 3?

Mr. Seymour: Yes, your Honor, I am on Section 3 on page 15. The transaction that Mr. Wright says he is worried about obviously couldn't occur under this section.

Mr. Wright: Our provision is in our 5. Obviously the provisions in our decree are necessarily related to the other provisions of our proposed decree. You don't get a cohesive, coherent document out of taking some of ours and applying them to some of theirs, or vice versa.

Mr. Seymour: I think what Mr. Wright means to say probably is that this is another inhibition like his cross-licensing inhibition which we have dealt with, which is not in the opinion and is designed to have the effects which we have already discussed.

One other thing which the Government does not include. In Section 3 it is provided in our draft that any lease or agreement which violates the section may be eliminated by inhibition. That seems a practical provision and that is simply a matter of convenience in carrying out the Court's decree.

Now I pass to section IV—I am going to page 16, subdivision 4, and take up first 4(a); and let me preface my discussion on this section by saying this: This is the section which deals with the partial divestiture ordered in your Honor's opinion by which you required the defendants to divest themselves of interests which they held in companies or theatres with independent exhibitors where the interest was more than 5 per cent or less than 95 per cent; and this whole section deals with that subject.

That was a matter which, as your Honors know, was not litigated, really. The Government asked complete divestiture. We argued that there should be none, and there was never an occasion when the question of whether particular interests ought to be divested or involved any illegality, was the subject matter of proof. Your Honors concluded that the pools were illegal, and quite naturally assimilated these joint interests with independent exhibitors to pools, and included, on that assimilation, I assume, that these joint interests had to be divested.

Now, we provide in this section for divestiture, as your Honors have directed; but in view of the fact that the record in this case really contains no details as to particular situations, we have included a provision for applications to the Court after the decree is entered for exemptions of some situations from the decree, and have laid down the standards which your Honors will want to consider in that connection.

From the Paramount's point of view—other defendants are concerned in this connection, but Paramount, I think it is fair to say, is particularly concerned—your Honor's opinion directing divestiture of the 5 to 95 per cent situations struck at relations involving somewhat over a thousand theatres. Those theatre investments are considered by the management of Paramount to be worth somewhere in the neighborhood of 100 to 125 million dollars. They have a book value of somewhere in the neighborhood of 40 million dollars. I mention those figures only to show that there are very substantial problems involved in that aspect of your Honor's decision, and I ask no change in the decision, and I am not quarreling with it. I merely suggest, as this decree does, that opportunity be afforded to come in and present special situations from time to time where your Honors might find that it was undesirable or unreasonable to apply your decision its full rigor to a particular situation which you have never examined before.

Now, with that background, section 4(a) requires or states that the defendants are enjoined from continuing to own in conjunction with any independent exhibitor proprietary interest of more than 5 and less than 95 per cent. That we think is precisely in accordance with your Honor's direction.

Now, the definition of an independent exhibitor contained in footnote 11 on page 16 is a significant part of that provision. We understand your Honor's opinion to conclude with respect to such relationships that if the relationship was with one who was really qualified to be an independent exhibitor and who but for the relationship would have been operating one of these theatres, that that is what your Honor was striking at, and that is what the definition provides. The independent exhibitor is one not a defendant or associated with a defendant who but for such joint proprietary interest would be operating one or more of such jointly-owned theatres for its own account in competition with the defendant.

Now, what that takes care of is a situation where, for example, the co-owner is a widow or an investor or a bank, and where it is perfectly evident that but for the relationship the co-owner would not be operating the theatre as an exhibitor. I do not think your Honors had in mind that there was any restraint in that relationship. That is the reason for the language in that footnote. It differs from the Government's fundamentally. Your Honors used the words "restraint of punitive competition" when you dealt with this situation. The Government uses the word "potential." We have tried to carry out what we understood to be the spirit of your view in our definition. Obviously the widow in one view might be a potential competitor, because anybody, I suppose, theoretically could be a potential competitor, but she would not but for the relationship be operating one of the theatres. Therefore we think the word "potential" is far too broad and carries quite a different connotation than your word "punitive."

Judge Hand: Maybe I do not get it too well, but how could anybody on earth tell what she would do? In the case you mentioned she probably would not do it herself but she might do it through somebody else, and she would then be equally an independent.
(4246a)

Mr. Seymour: I think what your Honors had in mind, at least, from having read your opinion, was that there was a restraint in the ownership of somebody who, but for their relationships, would in fact have been an exhibitor.

Plainly, the investor, without any experience in the motion picture business, without any operation of a motion picture theatre, is one who would not be. Now, concededly there are widows who might be, who might be a widow who is an active motion picture operator, and we do not suggest that widow alone disposes of the point. My point is that there are a few situations where we have this distinction excludes situations which your Honors' ruling did not have in mind.

Finally, in Section 4(a) we have a provision in the last three lines for applications to the Court for permission to retain interests which are required to be divested by the first part of Section 4(f), and that is the provision, there are several others, which I was referring to when I said we wanted an opportunity, if so advised, to be able to come in at a later date and show your Honors the particular facts.

Judge Bright: Where is that?

Mr. Seymour: That is the last three lines in Section 4 on page 16.

What we want to do is to have the right to come in at a future date and show your Honors, as required by Section 4(c), that the retainer of a particular interest would not unreasonably restrain competition in the area. Section 4(c) requires such a finding in connection with any such application. I think it is proper, in the present state of this record, since the matter was never litigated, item by item, that that opportunity should be reserved to us, and it is of the greatest importance to Paramount, and we think of equal importance to other defendants, and we would feel that your Honors would want to keep that way open to consider particular facts.

Of course, there is another aspect which is raised by section 4(b). 4(b) is our attempt to comply precisely with your Honors' decision as to how to dispose of these interests. You direct that the interests be disposed of by a sale or a purchase or by a division of assets. Precisely in accordance with your Honors' opinion our section (b) provides that purchases or divisions of assets shall be subject to court approval.

The Government inhibits any purchase now under the form of decree. They just bar any purchase or division of assets by which the defendant could acquire any part of it, even with the approval of the Court. That is plainly directly contrary to your opinion.

I want to state an additional reason for that reservation in 4(f). It is possible that as an attempt is made to work out the various dispositions which will have to be made under the decree some impasses may be reached. For example, the Paramount theatres that are affected are owned by in the vicinity of 300 corporations which are located in many states. The laws of the various states differ as to the rights of forcing a dissolution, which might be possible in some situations, one cannot tell yet, and since there is no control, really, over what the other party to the transaction does, there may be impasses, and, in that event, Section 4(a) would give us a right to come to the Court and ask to be relieved of a direction because of that particular situation, and, of course, we would have to come and make a showing as required by 4(c). So that 4(c) really states the standards which we would have to satisfy the Court of under the other sections.

You will note in 4(b) that the time within which that direction that is to be complied with, that is on page 17, has been left blank in this draft. Your Honors can appreciate what a colossal task it is to attempt to carry out this direction, where so many theatres, so many interests are involved. We hope that your Honors will give us a substantial period of time. I think the Government has suggested two years. We think that is inadequate. We think that with the most diligent effort it will take a considerable period of time to clean these situations all up, as, in accordance with your directions, such must be cleaned up. We would suggest, as a tentative period, I think, something like three years, with the expectation that under your reserved jurisdiction, if we need more time on a particular situation we may come in and ask for it; but if your Honors were disposed to give us more time, that would be welcome.

Judge Bright: You have the same privilege on two years to come back and ask for relief.

Mr. Seymour: That is true, but your Honor can appreciate what the problem is in trying to deal with the vast number involved here, and we think if we had a somewhat longer period, the chances to make substantial progress within the initial limitation would be somewhat greater.

Judge Hand: Have you been trying to do any of these things now?

Mr. Seymour: You cannot do anything, if your Honor please. You cannot really do anything in the way of trying to make a deal with a co-owner while the uncertainty as to whether this is the final disposition of the case remains. The Government has indicated that they are going to appeal, that has been widely published in the trade press and elsewhere, and until the decree becomes final it would be very difficult indeed to make any progress in the direction of working out negotiations.

And, of course, as my learned brother has pointed out, if we did make any changes in the situation, non constat, it might not be at all affected by the results of an appeal.

So, really, until the decree becomes final, it is difficult to make progress in this direction with the best faith in the world.

Finally, we have gotten to 4(d). Here I want to tell your Honors about it, because that is almost entirely a Paramount problem. 4(d) on page 18 provides that when it is shown that a joint relationship between an exhibitor defendant or a subsidiary or an independent exhibitor resulted from the sale by the exhibitor defendant or a subsidiary or a trustee in bankruptcy of the partial interest, the exhibitor defendant may apply to the Court for relief to retain it.

I believe there are four situations affecting Paramount, there may be one or two more, but I think four is correct, where the trustees in bankruptcy, either of Paramount or of Paramount Publix, or some other subsidiary then owning 100 per cent of a theatre, were, by reason of the bankruptcy, put in a position where they had to dispose of a portion of the interest in order to preserve the rest, and those dispositions were approved by the trustees, and, in some instances, at least, by the Court. We do not say that that disposes of the issue for this Court. We do say that that ought to present a situation where, if the transfer back of the 50 per cent interest, or its retainment does not involve any substantial restraint or any unreasonable restraint, we ought to have a right to apply to the Court to keep it. Only special situations result in that condition.

Judge Hand: There are a great many theatres, though, aren't there?

Mr. Seymour: There are a number of theatres involved.

Judge Hand: Where are those theatres, on the West Coast mostly?

Mr. Seymour: No, the theatres are, some of them, in Virginia, some are in Pennsylvania, some are in New England, and some of them are now in Nebraska.

There are four different situations where the backgrounds indicate that the transfer could not possibly have been made for the purposes of restraint; and we have been hopeful, if we could satisfy your Honors on a hearing of those facts, if we decide to apply, that your Honors might perhaps take those out of your decree in the event that we ask for the opportunity to present that situation.

(4252)

Judge Hand: That rather leaves me cold.

Mr. Seymour: Well, I hope your Honor won't prejudge it.

Judge Hand: No.

Mr. Seymour: I hope, because again——

Judge Hand: We have pretty well prejudged it already.

Mr. Seymour: But, you see, the difficulty is on this situation, as on some of the others, we did not have an opportunity, really, to present the detailed facts which would enable you to examine the details of a particular situation because this issue was really not litigated. There was some brief reference——

Judge Hand: I thought there was a great deal of talk about it.

Mr. Seymour: There was a lot of talk about divestiture, but I do not believe that anyone, until your Honor had reached that conclusion, had supposed that a 95 per cent and 5 per cent line would be drawn, or it was argued that that should be drawn. I think that is your Honor's line. All I ask is, you having drawn the line after the testimony closed, that we be permitted to reserve the right to come in. If your Honor, upon such application, decides against us, that is the chance we must take, but I hope you will preserve the right to come in. That disposes of Section 4.

Section 5——

Mr. Wright: Would you rather hear me now or later?

The Court: (Judge Hand) On this, yes.

Mr. Wright: I do not know, if the Court please, how much time you want me to spend in discussing their proposal or whether you want me to confine my discussion to ours.

I think it is quite apparent to the Court what has been attempted here by them in the modifications that they proposed in the opinion. What they seek is essentially an opportunity to relitigate all of these questions that we think the Court decided.

In so far as evidence is concerned, ample opportunity was given them to put in the whole story of every acquisition, every pool they had. We facilitated the presentation of that evidence by letting them put it in through stipulated testimony without the necessity of calling witnesses. There cannot possibly be any occasion here for further hearings, such as they contemplate, except to relitigate these questions that have already been decided.

On this deadlock question that was raised by Mr. Seymour, the possibilities of deadlock, on this question of sale or purchase by two parties, that is what led us to propose in our proposal, which also departs from the Court's opinion, that instead of trying to permit a purchase by these defendants, or a sale by them to the independents, that the thing ought to be settled here and now, and settled, in our view, in favor of a sale to other parties, not necessarily the partner, but a sale, in any event, a divestiture of the defendant's interest.

(4253a)

Now, the reasons for that, the practical reasons for that, are these, that this Court simply does not have any control over what the independent partner does with his interest. If he does not want to buy or sell at a particular price, there is nothing you can do to make him buy or sell; but you do have jurisdiction over the defendants, and it seems to me rather than postpone indefinitely the resolution of those controversies—it is perfectly obvious that they want to maintain every one of these joint relationships that they can—that you should and you properly may order that these pools be dissolved by a sale of the defendants' interests, and that is what we have provided, not necessarily to the partner but simply by sale to someone.

Now, of course, I do not think the time limitation there as it is put in the first instance is so important, whether it is two years or three years. In any event, we know in situations of this kind they always get extensions if it appears they have a good reason for not having been able to carry out the kind of divestiture that has been ordered; but I do not think we ought to be in a position where we do not know until the end of some two or three-year period whether anything has been or is going to be sold at all, and what if any difficulties are preventing it from being sold; and I think the provisions we incorporated for periodic reports to the Court as to what is being done are essential to any efficient administration of this plan to dissolve these pool situations.

Now, our definition of "independent" of course does differ greatly from theirs. They say the term independent exhibitor as used in this decree means an exhibitor. Now, that takes care of the widow or the mere investor. They say it has to be an exhibitor. That is more rigorous than our definition right there; but then they go on and put this proviso on the end so that even when he is an exhibitor they can come in and litigate the rather vague question as to whether or not that particular exhibitor but for this interest would be operating these theatres, a wholly speculative inquiry that I think would——

Mr. Seymour: Is that an "or", Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: You are right, I beg your pardon—"or a person, firm of corporation." But, in any event, this last proviso it does seem to me to introduce a completely vague standard there that would permit them to retain any one of those interests.

Judge Bright: What do you say about the criticism being made of your use of the word "potential"?

Mr. Wright: I would say as to our "potential," if your (4256)

Honors' word "punitive" is preferred, I think that might be a reasonable substitution. But it is essential, I think, that you do not get into an inquiry at this late date as to what might have happened five, ten, fifteen years ago if the pool had not been made.

Now, as far as their test of exemption in (c) there, they want to hang on to these relationships if on a retrial here we do not show that they unreasonably restrained competition, and that just seems to me is an express provision for relitigating what you have already decided. That gives us nothing. If we can show that any relationship unreasonably restrains competition between two people, we can dissolve it and enjoin it under the Sherman Act by an independent suit. That, it seems to me, has no place in this decree at this stage of the game.

Now, as to this last one, (d), obviously all of that data that he wants to again submit to the Court was in the record, and I assume it was considered by the Court when the decision was made that these relationship were, per se, violations and should be dissolved, and I can see no occasion other than to frustrate the dissolution of the pools to permit them to relitigate the matter in that fashion.

Mr. Seymour: Your Honors, Mr. Wright keeps talking about these things as pools. It was for precisely that reason that I thought you had assimilated these two pools and had not had occasion to examine the particular facts which we never litigated. When Mr. Wright says that we litigated them and therefore we are trying to relitigate them—all we are asking is for a chance to avoid the potential, terrible destruction of values which may occur by having the matters submitted to your Honors' discretion if a decision is reached, to apply at some future time; and I think that is the kind of reservation that ought to always be made by a court of equity which has not heard proof on the particular subject.

Now, the suggestion that Mr. Wright should now have a provision in the teeth of your Honors' opinion that these interests must be sold rather than that we may be able to satisfy your Honors that it would be proper to buy, seems to me a most shocking suggestion. Mr. Wright shows very little concern with the public interest in preserving the values that are involved, an interest which is shared by the stockholders of the companies and I think by the public.

Judge Hand: Well, I do not think we are going to do any such thing as that.

Mr. Seymour: I should think that matter ought to be (4258)
left flexible as your Honors directed it should in the opinion.

Judge Hand: That is what we intended to do.

Mr. Seymour: Now I will pass on, if I may, to section 5 at the top of page 5. That is the injunctive provision dealing with future acquisitions. We have tried in our language to follow the Court's opinion. Mr. Wright has suggested an absolute ban on any future acquisitions. He says "from expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever." Now, that is directly in the teeth of your Honor's opinion.

Judge Hand: We are not going to have any such drastic provision as that. We considered that.

Mr. Seymour: Section 6 is a provision for notice to the Department of Justice, of course, in connection with any application to the Court on the reserved matters; and IIII on page 19——

Mr. Wright: May I discuss for a moment their 5 and our β on the question of expansion?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Wright: What we proposed, if the Court please, was not a provision against any acquisition. We proposed a planned injunction against expansion, and we did that for two reasons: one to resolve the question as to what kind of expansion the Court intended here in their proposal. We do not see that their proposal there would prohibit expansion of any kind, and certainly during the pendency of the final disposition of the divorcement issue we would suppose that it would be proper, in the face of the findings that have already been made, to at least maintain the status quo during that period by preventing the defendants from taking advantage of the period to expand their theatre holdings.

Now, if you will read the provision as they write it, it may be in the terms of your decree, but under it I do not know what if any form of expansion is prohibited; and if none is prohibited, the provision in that form offers nothing to the plaintiff—that is, if it is a question of the 5 that they have there——

Judge Hand: Get down to some specific situation and not just talk in general terms.

Mr. Wright: Let us read it. It says, "from expanding its theatre holdings except for the purpose of acquiring the interests of co-owners of jointly owned theatres pursuant to the provisions of subdivision 3 and 4."

That is plain enough. That means they can expand when they buy out independent partners.

Now they say, "provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall prevent an exhibitor defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments or in order to enter a competitive field."
(4260)

Now, if you enter a new, competitive field I suppose that is one thing; but I would imagine that any theatre you acquired in an area where you were already competing might be regarded as a protection of the investments you already had there.

Judge Hand: I should think you are right about that.

Mr. Wright: So the result of this would be that no form of expansion that I can conceive of would be prohibited at all. They can buy out the partners; they can pick up theatres in the fields where they already are, and they can go into new fields where they do not operate now. Well, that, I submit, is a plain grant of immunity. It does not offer any protection whatsoever to any of the objectives that we are trying to achieve.

Judge Hand: They have said, as I understand it, if in the latter case this Court or the district court of the district shall approve, in the latter case.

Mr. Wright: The new competitive field is subject to court approval. Well, may I ask what the Court regards as circumstances which would lead to your approval of their entry into a new competitive field?
(4261)

Judge Hand: Wasn't that very largely in the consent decree?

Mr. Wright: The consent decree—

Judge Hand: Never mind. Answer my question, please.

Mr. Wright: Yes, quite right, and as far as we are concerned the consent decree provision proved in practice to be wholly inadequate to prevent an expansion during that period.

Judge Hand: Why was it inadequate? Was Judge Goddard inclined to let any theatres that wanted to come in? What do you mean by inadequate?

Mr. Wright: There was a proceeding brought under the decree—there were substantial acquisitions by Fox; there were substantial acquisitions by Paramount——

Judge Hand: Did you object to those?

Mr. Wright: Yes, we went in and objected and we litigated the issues——

Mr. Caskey: And you lost.

Mr. Wright: We lost the case. Judge Goddard found that those acquisitions were not a part of a general program of expansion. That was what was prohibited by the consent (4262) decree, a general program of expansion, and they had these same exemptions to protect investments——

Judge Hand: How many cases were there?

Mr. Wright: Oh, I would say there were perhaps 60 or 80 theatres involved, but there were some of those which were actually closed towns, these acquisitions which converted competitive situations into closed situations.

Now, I repeat if the purpose of this provision is to give protection to the Government, we would think we would be better off with no provision dealing with the subject of expansion at all than this proposed V; that is the rights that we have under the Sherman Act as such we think are superior to the rights that we would get with such a provision as is proposed here; and we think in effect it would be a grant of immunity from the Act.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Wright, is it your recollection that the Court permitted them to acquire 60 or 70 theatres?

Mr. Wright: That I think was about the net result of the Court's decision. Of course, there was no provision if your Honor will recall, for submitting the proposition prior to acquisition. These acquisitions had gone on for some time, and then they were set forth in petitions which we filed.

Judge Hand: You mean after the consent decree?

(4263)

Mr. Wright: Yes, the consent decree itself provided that that provision was enforcible.

Judge Hand: That may have been acquired after the consent decree.

Mr. Wright: Yes, after the consent decree but prior to the institution of the petitions on which we sought to prevent the expansion.

Judge Goddard: Each of those presented a particular situation, and I thought it quite evident that there was not a general plan of expansion. I was convinced of that.

Mr. Seymour: I think the failure of those theatres—as Judge Goddard will no doubt recall—arose due to the fact that one Sparks who had a fifty per cent interest in a number of theatres in Florida, wanted to go out of business and came to Paramount and asked to have Paramount buy his remaining fifty per cent interest, which he did, and that is the way a number of theatres were involved.

Mr. Wright: Don't misunderstand me, Judge Goddard; I am not arguing that your decision in that case was wrong. If we thought it had been we would have appealed from it. We didn't appeal. We thought from the terms of that decree your decision was right, but I am merely pointing out that that kind of decree provision we are not satisfied does us more harm than it does good.

Judge Hand: I don't see why you don't think his decision was wrong. Maybe you didn't think his decision was wrong. Of course you changed many times in your position in this whole litigation. How could you have failed to appeal if your views about the subject matter had been the way they are now?

Mr. Wright: Because, if the Court please, we were bound by the decree. We had a decree which did nothing to prohibit expansion in those terms which were adequate to do it.

Now the failure of the decree to live up to proper Sherman Act standards was essentially our fault in negotiating rather than Judge Goddard's, and that is why we did not appeal and could not appeal, as I saw it, from his decision.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Wright, do you think the defendants should be prevented from acquiring an interest of a partner?

Mr. Wright: From what?

Judge Goddard: A situation like that, where a defendant owns fifty per cent of a theatre together with another.

Mr. Wright: Yes, we do. We think the proper disposition of those situations is to dissolve that pool by a sale of the defendant's interest.

Judge Hand: You mean a sale in which the defendant was prohibited from buying? A sale under which the defendant was prohibited from buying?
(4265)

Mr. Wright: That is right, a sale to independent interests. That is the way we think those relationships should be dissolved.

Mr. Seymour: Of course, your Honor, what we have done here, I think, is to follow your Honors' language precisely. There is no intention on the part of my client to start a campaign of expansion; but as your Honors properly recommend in your opinion, to shackle these defendants so that they cannot go into a new competitive area, and that they can only do as your Honors permit, or to shackle them so that they could not fix up or build to take care of an obsolescence or a fire situation, would be a very burdensome provision.

Mr. Wright: I don't understand how the District Courts other than this Court are to have jurisdiction to approve these applications. Has any thought been given to that? That is not in the opinion. That apparently is something that has come up here.

Mr. Seymour: That is right. Your Honors wrote that it shall be subject to the approval of this Court or other competent authority. We assumed that by that that your Honors meant the District Court in the district, and we put it in.

(4266)

If your Honors have something else in mind, we will put it in.

Judge Hand: Well, what about that? Is this court supposed to live and endure forever?

Mr. Proskauer: We hope so.

Mr. Wright: Insofar as it reads the Southern District of New York, I suppose that it will endure as long as any district.

Judge Hand: Then you want instead of "District Court," you want to say "or the District Court for the Southern District of New York."

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, we don't want that in at all.

Judge Hand: Now assume that it is going to be put in there. We put it in.

Mr. Wright: I would assume that would be necessary to fix the limits of your own jurisdiction in that connection.

Judge Goddard: Will all those proceedings come to the Southern District of New York, no matter where they arise throughout the country?

Mr. Wright: This Court is sitting in this litigation as a specially constituted district court for this district.

Judge Hand: I know, but I think you ough to get rid of this specially constituted district. Are you going to create in every case ex necessitas? If these judges are out a new set of judges so as to have a three-judge court, and call it an emergency court, fifty years from now?

(4267)

Mr. Wright: No. If the Court please, I assume that for the purposes of administration of whatever final decision comes out of this litigation we don't need three judges.

Judge Hand: All right, then you mean the District Court for the Southern District of New York.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Hand: I should think that might be reasonable; maybe necessary. Now go on.

Mr. Caskey: Section IV, which is printed on page 19, follows the language of the opinion and enjoins a defendant from operating, booking or buying features for any theatre through any agent known by it to be acting in such capacity for any other exhibitor whether it be independent or affiliated. The only difference between us and the Government is that we have inserted the words, "known by it," which is obviously a necessary precaution.

Roman numeral V——

Mr. Proskauer: Not to argue but to help your Honors to keep track of what is going on, you will note that Paragraph 8 under plaintiff's proposed judgment column on page 18 is the Government's provision about diagonal licensing that we have all been talking about.
(4268)

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: That is the one that we have the best sentence passed on.

Judge Bright: Just a minute. Is there any objection to the insertion of "known by it" in your provision?

Mr. Wright: It seems to me too trivial to argue about. I would assume with them the responsibility in any of these provisions in knowing what their agents are doing.

Mr. Caskey: Well, do you say yes or no?

Mr. Wright: I say that I can't believe that it is a matter of substance. It seems to me a silly thing to put in.

Mr. Proskauer: That means yes.

Mr. Leisure: If the Court please, Section 5 under the defendants' proposed decree reads:

> "Nothing contained in this decree shall be deemed to apply to the leasing or otherwise contracting for the temporary use of a theatre for the road showing of a particular feature."

Now that only applies to a picture, as you will observe by the footnote 12:

"Because of its character or unusual cost, cannot, in the judgment of the distributor defendant, exercised in good faith, be distributed as advantageously by the distributor's normal method of distribution, and which is exhibited by such defendant at advanced admission prices."
(4269)

Now the reason for that provision is that from time to time the industry has produced these extremely costly pictures which have advanced the art, and we believe thereby benefited the public, and over a period of years those pictures have never been large. In the past ten years there were four.

Judge Hand: Wouldn't they become large if they were exempted from this decree?

Mr. Leisure: I don't think so.

Judge Hand: I mean, wouldn't there be a great inducement to claim road showing over them?

Mr. Leisure: No, because of the risks involved and the losses I don't think it would ever be large. In fact the past history shows that they have never been large. In the last ten years there has only been four of these pictures.

Judge Hand: You mean by any of these defendants? You mean by all of them?

Mr. Leisure: By all of us, yes. Only four in the last ten years. If your Honor feels that there is any chance of there being a large number, and I don't feel there is, you could limit it by placing a number on them.
(4270)

Judge Hand: I think it is a kind of unimportant thing to provide if there are only four that have been produced in the last ten years.

Mr. Leisure: Let me say why it is important to us, why Universal pointed out why it is important to them.

It is important to RKO, as I have said, because of the unusual cost for the pictures. They must be distributed at an advanced admission price if the cost is to be recouped.

Judge Hand: Have they cost any more—these road shows —than any other expensive pictures?

Judge Goddard: The Vanguard cost five and a half million.

Mr. Leisure: If I may advert for a moment from what I was about to say, just to give an example on that, Judge Hand, long prior to the decision in this case, on April 18, 1943, to be exact, RKO contracted with an independent contractor to produce a best seller book known as The Robe, dealing with a deeply religious subject. The picture is to cost about five million dollars. By the time we finish with distributing and advertising it will cost well above nine million dollars. Although we entered into that with an independent contractor the risk is entirely RKO's. With the experience of every producer—not just ours alone—the experience has shown that it would be extremely hazardous if not impossible to recoup anything like nine million dollars in the regular course of business. The road showing for those great shows such as Birth of a Nation——
(4271)

Judge Hand: Now RKO could show that in a dozen theatres at any price at any place it chose ahead of anybody.

Mr. Leisure: We only have one hundred theatres your Honor, and we simply would never have attempted to make a nine-million dollar picture and have only the right to show it in our own theatres. It would be just impossible.

Mr. Proskauer: Why don't your Honors limit it by putting in something about the upset cost of the picture. Nobody wants to apply that to ordinary pictures.

Judge Hand: How about that, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Our position, as I explained before in connection with the Vanguard petition, is that we don't see any merit in any road show exemption as such, and particularly not in this kind of exemption that is proposed here. What they want to do here is pick up a theatre and lease it temporarily for a particular exhibition anywhere, any time that they have a picture that they think is special and that that is the best way to exploit it.

Judge Hand: Now assuming that this could be limited to a very few, to very expensive pictures, what harm would it do? It might induce them to make them when they wouldn't make them otherwise.

Mr. Wright: That I doubt, if your Honor please, but on the assumption that it would be so limited to the mostly costly pictures, I would still say that the provision by itself, by its terms, provides an obvious means of avoiding the price-fixing provisions of the decree.

Now what would you do here? In the ordinary exhibition you lease a film to a theatre for a percentage of the gross receipts, or, as these defendants have done in some cases, a percentage of the profits. Now suppose that you just change your agreement into a form of a theatre lease for the duration of the engagement and the theatre operator simply leases the theatre to the film owner with the license term stated so that he receives the reverse percentage of the receipts of the engagement?

Now obviously, if you are going to permit, open the door to what this provision says you can do there, I think gradually you just eat away all of the prohibitions that are now in the decree.

Mr. Raftery: May it please the Court, we are vitally interested in this proposal. We are road-showing now one picture here in New York, Henry V, by a man named Shakespeare. The only way you could get the public, really, to come to see that picture was by a special presentation. That is the first road show that we have had now in nearly ten years, and we think we have had more road shows than any other company. We have one ahead of us, "Duel in the Sun". I don't like the provision here as written, because it does not read—well, it reads to me more the way brother Wright construes it. If you limit this to one picture a year per defendant, and under condition that the negative cost—we will forget advertising and exploitation—is three million dollars or more, that is putting it way up in the high brackets, and then, say, instead of talking about leasing a theatre, so we won't be guilty of subterfuge, as brother Wright has said, and say, "Nothing contained in this decree shall be deemed to apply to licensing the exhibition of one road show picture per defendant in a theatre or theatres, use whatever language he wants, really you are making a licensing of an exhibition right, whether you do it by leasing the theatre or whether you do it by percentage of the gross, or whether you do it by flat rental, it is not going to affect (4274) anybody; then define your road show and in your definition of road show put your limitation of one picture a year for a defendant, negative cost $3,000,000, and I do not believe that there will be any harm to anybody; there will be no restraint of commerce.

This particular "Duel in the Sun", the negative cost that our producer, Vanguard, has acquired to date, and I got these figures from his banker, is five and a half million dollars actual negative cost to date, without advertising, without printing. The picture has been nearly three years in the making, in preparation. It was conceived long before we got into this trial. I do not anticipate we will have another road show for a good long time unless somebody else decides to make a Shakesperian thing again, and we will be, perhaps, in again.

The Shakesperian picture I speak about, I think we would be barred of because of the definition of negative cost. As I understand, the negative cost of that did not quite reach three million dollars, but I say three million dollars because that is way above the average cost of any of the important pictures.

Mr. Wright: I would say this, if the Court please, if there were to be any exemption at all it should, I think, be in terms of numbers that could be released during a year rather than negative cost. I do not think negative cost is something that is readily ascertainable, as far as we are concerned, and I can't think it offers a very satisfactory standard for determining what ought to go in——

(4275)

Judge Hand: He has both:

Mr. Wright: One year.

Mr. Raftery: One year and three million dollars.

Judge Hand: He proposed one year and three million dollars.

Mr. Isseks: May I say just a few words? I started this?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Isseks: We object as an independent producer to the defendants' proposal just as the Government does, and just as counsel for United Artists does. We think it will help the major defendants only. We think, if there is going to be an exception, it will be flat, just as Mr. Raftery has suggested, nothing in this decree shall apply to any picture road shown, and then define road shown as to cost, one year or some other way, but I think if you take the defendants' provision somebody like ourselves is going to be hurt, because we release through United Artists, and they do not have any theatres, and they do not have facilities for leasing theatres, or getting theatres, and I submit there should be some road show exemption to apply to everybody equally.

(4276)

Judge Bright: It is only to the road show; after it is road shown the picture will take its regular course.

Mr. Isseks: Yes, and then it should be subject to the injunctions against price-fixing and everything else, and it should be that that is so, after the road showing, that it is subject to the injunctive provisions applied in connection with general release. I think we made that clear in our brief and in our petition.

Mr. Wright: I think it would be proper, if you were going to grant a road show exemption, to limit it to non-theatre-owning defendants. It seems to me their owning theatres gives them substantial facilities for that kind of exploitation that others don't have; and if you are going to have an exemption, we would urge that kind of limitation as well as a numbered limitation.

Judge Goddard: What is the history? Haven't they had many more? Apparently you haven't had as many.

(4277)

Mr. Raftery: We have had more road shows, I think, because generally the road show comes from that type of producer that Mr. Keough described on the stand, who takes all his own money and goes out and makes some one of these important pictures, one a year.

Judge Hand: I think you had better propose some of these clauses in your proposed decree. I think Mr. Isseks would like to propose them.

Mr. Isseks: I would like to work on that with Mr. Raftery. We distribute through him.

Judge Hand: Get together with him and agree with him.

Mr. Isseks: We will get together.

Mr. Proskauer: May we revise our proposal along the lines of this discussion——

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: (Continuing) —so we will be restricted to one a year a company, to a cost of at least three million dollars?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Judge Bright: Do you road show in more than one place that particular picture?

Mr. Proskauer: Oh, yes.

Mr. Isseks: Oh, yes, we do.

(4278)

Mr. Proskauer: For instance, we have a contract with Mrs. Clarence Day to road show "Life With Father." The picture is costing about four million dollars, and we are required to road show it in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles. It has nothing to do with the general contract.

Judge Bright: What is to prevent, under this general talk we have had here, having all exhibitions of any particular picture called a road show?

Mr. Proskauer: I did not get your Honor's question.

Judge Bright: Under the talk we just have had here now, what is to prevent you from calling all exhibitions of some particular picture a road show?

Mr. Proskauer: What I suggested, that we can only do it with one picture a year.

Judge Bright: That is right.

Mr. Proskauer: And that it has got to cost at least three million dollars.

Judge Bright: That is right, but how many times can you road show that picture all through its existence?

Mr. Raftery: That happened once in 27 years——

Mr. Proskauer: We can road show it through the country.

Mr. Raftery: (Continuing) In 27 years it happened once, and it happened with the same producer who is making (4279)

"Duel in the Sun" who made "Gone With the Wind." It was road shown from coast to coast first time around. It later came back and played all the theatres at popular prices.

Judge Bright: That was so of one of Griffith's pictures.

Mr. Raftery: Birth of a Nation, that was before 27 years ago. That was in Judge Proskauer's time.

Judge Proskauer: Your Honor, we have to show it through the country, and of course, we would like to get the road show through and get into general distribution after that, and then it is subject to all the provisions of the decree.

If you don't do that, you are just going to eliminate pictures like "The Robe" and these pictures of Mr. Isseks' clients, and we won't make them.

Judge Bright: What I had in mind was not to exempt a picture on every show, not to exempt from this decree the showing of a picture all the time as a road show.

Mr. Isseks: Your Honors' definition says clearly your Honors' definition of road show says it is prior to general release, and that assumes there is going to be a general release, and I think we can work up a definition pursuant to (4280)

Judge Hand's suggestion. Mr. Raftery and I will work together on it and we will distribute it to counsel, and I think it ought to satisfy the Court.

Judge Bright: We enter into the study of semantics again and——

Mr. Isseks: No, I am not going to get into that.

Judge Bright: (Continuing)—I think it is in vain.

Mr. Isseks: I think if we can limit it by making it prior to general release, limit the cost of the picture, and other limitations as such, I think it will prevent any evasion.

Judge Hand: What about these wild wests they talk about?

Mr. Raftery: Westerns?

Judge Hand: I mean westerns

Mr. Raftery: We have a contract to distribute what are known as Hopalong Cassidys. They are made at a very inexpensive cost and you sell them six at a time. An exhibitor won't buy them unless he can get the whole six, and they are generally popular down in the South and Southwest —very, very popular down there, and Mr. Frohlich here goes to every one of them.

I would like to ask Mr. Wright if he has any exemption those from the provisions of this decree, westerns as they are understood?
(4281)

Mr. Wright: I see no reason for exempting a picture just because it is popular.

Judge Hand: The Government never consents to anything, no matter what. It is a waste of time to ask, and it prolongs our argument. Now proceed.

Mr. Proskauer: We are to redraft something and to submit it to your Honors?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Leisure: There is only one thing I would like to add, your Honor, and that is on this question of limiting it to one.

We are a little like United Artists, we represent some independents, Walt Disney, for instance, and Sam Goldwyn. If they do present one of these unusual pictures and come in to have it distributed, I do not see what there is in equity or in the Sherman Act that cause this Court to prevent unusual pictures from being shown. And that situation may arise. It won't happen often. People don't reach in to spend nine million dollars; they just don't do it.

Judge Hand: You would either get ahead of the other fellow or he would get ahead of you for that particular year. I know time is regarded as of the essence in these things, but it would only result in not having it as a road show or delaying it as a road show. Would that be one of the calamities of the 20th century?

(4282)

Mr. Leisure: It would never be made, if you did not have some opportunity of recouping the expenditures. You just wouldn't make it. Why should you? And that would mean a decree——

Judge Hand: If it was so good, you might make it a few minutes later.

Mr. Leisure: I cannot conceive of making it as a business enterprise unless you could see your way clear to recoup what money you have put into it.

Judge Hand: Yes, it would be your only road show for the next year or for that year.

Mr. Leisure: Let us suppose Mr. Goldwyn came in, or Walt Disney, and wants to show one the same year? What reason is there in law or equity to say you have had your one this year, we are going to portion this out?

Judge Hand: I do not know. What you say is more or less persuasive, but the exemption is doubtful and maybe we won't grant it, and you had better be contented with what has been suggested, I should say. Now go on, please.

Mr. Leisure: I thought it would be better, instead of having it limited, say, to a number, if you had it limited so you know it was an outstanding picture, it would advance the art and be to the benefit of the public. In other words, use as your criterion not some arbitrary number, but some figure that would convince the Court that it was one of these outstanding pictures.

(4282a)

The Court: Do you want to use five million?

Mr. Leisure: I think three million would be a better figure.
(4283)

Mr. Caskey: If the Court please, VI at page 20 confines the scope of this decree to the Continental United States. That is a provision which is copied from the provision of the consent decree, and is particularly acute with respect to the distribution of pictures in Hawaii and Alaska in which places none of the defendants operate exchanges.

In the Hawaiian Islands, on the four principal islands, which as your Honors know are somewhat widely separated, there are 107 theatres, many of them extremely small. The method of distribution is to grant to a single company the right to exhibit and in turn sublicense other exhibitors. We furnish only one, very rarely two prints. The picture print is shipped to Hawaii to that company; they exhibit it, and in turn circulate it among the islands. This whole scheme would be utterly inapplicable and probably would result or might well result in a withdrawal from the Hawaiian Islands. There was no evidence whatsoever concerning the situation in either Hawaii or Alaska or Puerto Rico, which are the only three places which would be affected by our proposal—there has been no suggestion of any violation of law in those places, and we respectfully submit that the ambit of the decree should be limited to the proof, and that this should not apply to those territories. I am sure that there will be no purpose served, and it might very well deprive the people of those communities of an opportunity to see motion pictures. I do not want to offer proof on the subject unless it is necessary, but we are informed that it is utterly impossible to build in the Hawaiian Islands at the present time; so if some other system of distribution were required and we were compelled to erect our own facilities, it might be years before the physical facilities themselves could be supplied.

Judge Bright: Any objection, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: I do not understand why the statement in the terms "nothing contained in this decree shall apply to operations or activities or any defendant outside of the Continental United States period" would not suffice. Now, I may be unduly skeptical, but that last proviso strikes me as a little odd. I do not quite see what they are getting at there.

Judge Bright: Activities in the United States relating to distribution of pictures outside of the United States.

Mr. Wright: Well, what possible activities within the United States that come within the scope of this decree would relate to distribution or exhibition of motion pictures outside? I just don't understand.

(4285)

Judge Bright: Mr. Caskey said they distributed them from here.

Mr. Wright: Yes. I suppose to the extent that their distribution activities are here and done here, they ought to be controlled here. Now, it just seemed to us that that is a little too vague to make a satisfactory exemption, as far as we are concerned.

Mr. Caskey: At the time the consent decree was drawn, from which this is copied, we had innumerable decrees under the antitrust laws from the published decrees, and this is standard practice, and the only thing we want to be sure of, the thing that is most important, which I understand you now to agree to, is that it need not apply to the licensing of pictures outside of the Continental United States, which excludes Hawaii, Alaska and Porto Rico.

Mr. Wright: I think that is right.

Judge Bright: I think you made a statement at the beginning of the trial, Mr. Wright, that you were only interested in operations within the Continental United States.

Mr. Wright: That is quite right.

Judge Bright: That you were seeking to suppress a national conspiracy.

Mr. Wright: Quite right.

Judge Bright: Then what is the matter with this?
(4286)

Mr. Wright: I merely repeat that as far as I can see the first three lines take care of any exemption that is needed adequately.

Mr. Caskey: Section VII on page 20 is designed to express that portion of the Court's opinion at page 63 which relates to the right of a defendant to exhibit its own pictures in its own theatres upon such terms as to admission prices and clearance and on such runs as it sees fit. We think it should be included in the decree and not left, because this Court saw fit to include it in the decree part of its opinion. For the purpose of this section we have defined a theatre as one's own in accordance with the footnote 14. That is, it applies to any theatre which we are permitted to retain an interest of 50 per cent or more.

Paragraph 8 I think is without controversy, and relates to the right of the Attorney General to inspect the documents and interview witnesses of the defendants.

Paragraph 9 on page 22 relates to the retention of jurisdiction, and in our judgment that is vital to any decree dealing with an antitrust case in this industry.

The first section (a) is standard language which permits their the plaintiff or any defendant to apply for such orders and directions as are necessary or appropriate for the interpretation, construction, application, enforcement and punishment of the decree. I take it that that language is substantially the same as suggested by the plaintiff, and from page 66 of your opinion.
(4287)

Judge Bright: Doesn't the form proposed by the plaintiff comprehend all the subdivisions that you seek to incorporate?

Mr. Caskey: No, sir, I think not, sir, and if I may respectfully say, the form contemplated by the plaintiff only is coordinate with our sub-paragraph (a). For example, our sub-paragraph (b) enables us or the plaintiff to apply at any time to modify our set aside the decree, or to take further proceedings in the event that it should appear that the operation of the decree has failed to bring about a correction of the violations of the Sherman Act. We think that this is appropriate in this type of case to show that the Court has retained a supervisory power to modify this decree or to take further proceedings in the event that they are necessary to bring about a compliance with the Sherman Act.

Subdivision (c) is a provision which makes it possible for a defendant to apply to this Court to enlarge any period of time which is required to do an act under the decree. I (4288) think it is a necessary and reasonable provision in view of the drastic reorganizations which the decree envisages. We hope we will not abuse it.

Sub-paragraph (d) enables any defendant to apply to the Court to modify or set aside the decree as to that defendant in the event that economic conditions or other conditions so change as to make the decree or a provision thereof inappropriate. That we think is necessary in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in the Swiss case; it is a precautionary provision which we think the Court should adopt in order to keep this decree flexible and capable of dealing with the problem as it may exist in future years.

Paragraph X on page 23 relates to a condition which might exist if either by legislation or by a decree which should grant divorcement of other relief similar to that prayed for in the amended and supplemental complaint that would give the defendants who desire a right to withdraw from any arbitration system which might be set up.

Paragraph XI is the paragraph to which Mr. Seymour has already adverted. It fixes the final effective date of the decree and the period for the commencement of the time within which a defendant is required to take action as the time when the decree becomes finally effective either by a failure to appeal or by the entry of the final decree upon mandate of the Supreme Court.

Mr. Frohlich: May I be heard for a moment on that section, your Honor?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Frohlich: The Government, I see, has a corresponding provision that paragraphs 8, 9 and 10 of section II will not become effective until January 1, 1947. I respectfully ask that the time there be extended to July 1, 1947. That is a very radical change of the whole system of selling pictures, especially for these smaller companies like Columbia and Universal and others, and January 1st is just six or seven weeks off from that, and we feel we could use five or six months to build up an inventory to give us an efficient inventory on hand so we can operate with some hope of recoupment. I am not asking for too much. I do not think the Government will seriously oppose it.

Mr. Caskey: Paragraph 13 on page 24 deals with the existing consent decree. We provide that this decree shall be a modification of and in substitution for the existing decree entered on November 20, 1940, and that the existing consent decree shall remain in full force and effect with respect to any act or conduct occurring prior to the effective date of this decree. We think the suggestion by the plaintiff that the provisions of the consent decree are to be of no further force or effect except in so far as necessary to liquidate the financial obligations of the defendants in the arbitration association are utterly inadequate; conduct has been taken under the decree, and as to that conduct the decree should be effective.

Plaintiff has suggested in its last sentence that even the existing awards made under that decree and decided by the Appeals Boards should be enforcible only to the extent that they are consistent with the provisions of the decree; or, in other words, that the validity of each one of the existing awards must be reviewed and determined by someone in the light of this proposed judgment.

Finally we respectfully suggest, although the sum of money involved is comparatively small, that it is inappropriate in an equity antitrust case such as this that costs should be taxed against the defendants.

Judge Hand: Do you want to say anything?

Mr. Wright: That last comment, if the Court pleases, really poses very aptly the question that has got to be decided, whether or not we won the case. In every equity case (4291) that we have brought and won that I know anything about, costs have been imposed as a matter of course.

Now, there are a number of these other last provisions that have been gone over here that I do not think merit serious discussion except on the theory that what you were going to enter here would be some kind of a charter of immunity for these defendants rather than a decree which is intended to prohibit unlawful conduct. If you want that discussion I will be glad to embark upon it. It seems to me to be a waste of time. This retention of jurisdiction, all the elaborate escapes that have been set forth there, if it had ever been submitted to us in the form of a consent decree would never have received the slightest serious consideration.

Now, if the Court is going to give that kind of consideration to it we would like to be heard on it, but it seems to me on its face that it is——

Judge Bright: I think you had better discuss it. Take No. 8. Is there any objection to that insertion that counsel may be present when you are making the examination?

Mr. Wright: As far as whether they have one lawyer or two lawyers looking over the shoulder of our people when they examine books, it is not worth discussing as far as we are concerned.
(4292)

Judge Bright: The answer is no objection?

Mr. Wright: No objection.

Judge Bright: All right.

Mr. Wright: That is right.

Judge Bright: How about 9?

Mr. Wright: 9 is the one I had reference to which I did not think was worth serious discussion. Now let us just take a look at this (b). All that is a restriction on the powers that the Court might otherwise enjoy. He says, enabling the plaintiff or any defendant to apply to this Court at any time to modify or set aside the decree or to take further proceedings in the event that it should appear that the operation of this decree had failed to bring about a correction of the violations of the Sherman Act hereby found to exist and which are the basis of this decree. "Sherman Act violations hereby found to exist." In other words, he wants to limit any further action solely to those violations, notwithstanding that other violations might appear.

For example, what would be the effect of this provision if on a mandate of reversal it appears that there were other violations here by subsequent conduct? I mean, it just is nothing but a device to cause doubt on what the Court might be able to do.

Now, this (c), enabling any defendant——

Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, just a minute. The authorship of (b) is the Supreme Court of the United States, and that provision was directed by the Court to be inserted. You will find it discussed in the Appalachian Coals, Inc. v. United States of America. We did not invent the language. That is what the Supreme Court held was an appropriate provision to bring about supervisory control over the soft coal industry.

Mr. Wright: In so far as I know, I know of no decree which we have entered in my time, which is relatively short in the Antitrust Division, which contains elaborations of that sort. The provision that we put in there is the standard provision that has been in use.

Now, let us take a look at that (c), enabling any defendant to make any application to the Court provided for in this decree including any application to enlarge the time, etc., etc., which would make enforcement of such requirement—be relieved of any requirement at all when it is inappropriate, oppressive, unduly burdensome, or otherwise.

Now, what does that open up? I do not know, but I should suppose it would invite a petition any time that somebody decided he did not like to abide by the provisions of the Court's injunction.

And the same thing is true with your (d), and that concludes what we have to say about 9.

Now, your 10 is simply another escape, this time from arbitration provisions, and in this connection I must say that I think it was rather an odd position to take that in view of the Court's opinion which said that arbitration could only be imposed by the consent of the defendants, to come in here now and say that of course whenever he saw fit to impose it it could do so over the objection of the defendants, and at the same time they come here with a provision which says that even arbitration that they consent to only stays in effect as long as more effective relief which they succeeded in avoiding here is not imposed upon them.

Now, as far as the provision as to appeal, I would see no occasion merely because there is an appeal, that that automatically stays the operation of the decree. I would suppose that any stay pending appeal would normally be limited to such provisions as are appealed from, where someone asks for a stay. If a provision is not appealed from, I should see no reason why it should not go into effect unless it were so intimately related to some provision that was (4295)

appealed from that you could not have that provision in the decree in the event of a reversal or modification of the other provision.

That again I think applies to both 11 and 12.

As far as the time element is concerned, I do not think it makes any difference whether you say January 1 or some other date, so long as there is a date that is fixed and you know when there will be some relief.

Now, as to the treatment of the consent decree, it seems to us that the provision that we proposed is the only kind of provision by which you can accomplish an orderly liquidation of the system as such. In cutting it off you have got to remember there are still pending and undisposed of cases; there are awards that were made during the period the decree was in operation.

Now, I should suppose that those awards as we have provided should be enforcible to the extent that there is no conflict between them and any new provisions that are entered here.

Now, their provision of course contemplates a continuation of virtually what would be a consent decree between them and the Court over our objection; and as to that, that is something which is primarily a matter for the Court to determine. We have said all we have to say about the propriety of that suggested procedure.

Now I should like, if I might, to address myself to a question that Judge Bright asked which my colleagues tell me that I did not understand at the time. I gather from what they say that the situation you asked me about and which I answered you about was a one-theatre town rather than a town in which there were a number of theatres owned by all of the defendants; and in that connection I would like to say that in so far as I can see, there is no town which would not benefit by two theatres as against one. That is, two theatres are always in a position to show more pictures, give the public service, make more pictures available to them than one. But if your Honors should feel that you have evidence in the record from which you can independently conclude that any one-theatre town that these defendants are now in would not under any circumstances support another theatre, then you would be completely justified in simply eliminating that one-theatre town situation and all one-theatre town situations from the proposal that we made, and the effect of such elimination would be very insubstantial because of the limited number and small size of those situations.

There is just one other comment I should like to make on Mr. Davis's fear that the demands imposed upon the three minor defendants to supply product which our proposal would involve might not be met by them. Well, his argument and the entire argument of the defendants assumes that from now on the pattern of the distribution in the motion picture industry is fixed to the extent that there are not going to be new distributors of quality pictures outside of the eight defendants in this suit. Now, I say that that is just the kind of situation that cannot be accepted by the Court if it is going to actually effectuate a dissolution of this combination of these eight defendants to control distribution of pictures in this country.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, I have studiously obeyed the admonition of Judge Hand not to strive for the last word here. I shall make no reference to the last remarks of Mr. Wright. I think we have argued that back and forth here to an extent which has tried the patience of the Court.

I want to make an observation about this retention of jurisdiction clause, however, because I think that is vital.

Mr. Wright always finds in our conduct a searching for immunity. Now just look at his section 7 on page 22. He retains jurisdiction of the cause only for the purpose substantially of enforcing the decree or punishing violations thereof.

On Tuesday Judge Hand observed that this was a tremendously more complicated industry than any that had ever come before a court. These discussions here for the last three days indicate that nobody should have the hardihood to say that what is done here now necessarily has finality in the sense that experience won't show that there should be a change.

Now, how in God's name have we sought to get immunity when we ask this Court to retain jurisdiction to enable the plaintiff or any defendant to take further proceedings in the event it should appear that the operation of this decree has failed to bring about a correction of the found violations of the Sherman Law?

(4299)

Mr. Proskauer: We haven't asked your Honors to say that we are the only ones who can come in. We have subjected ourselves in what we propose here——

Mr. Wright: You want an answer to that question, your Honor?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Wright: The difference between our proposal and theirs is this: anyone can come in under this proposal, "Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of enabling any of the parties to the decree to apply to the Court at any time for such orders or directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of the same," that is, this decree.

Now we haven't attempted to limit in advance what the Court can consider on the petition of any party as an appropriate ground for modification. But the purpose of the modification is always the construction or carrying out or enforcement of the decree.

Now they are suggesting that they might wish to come in and they want to have it stated in advance simply as a means for getting out from under the decree if it appears that it becomes more burdensome than they think it would be. I don't think that is a reason, a sound reason for including——

Judge Hand: We think your clause "or for other or further relief" doesn't cover it.

(4300)

Mr. Wright: Their standards in my view represent a considerably more favorable position than they could possibly derive by applying adjudicated cases to the construction of our words "or for other or further relief."

I think the safe way to handle it is—you have here the language, "or for other or further relief," and if anybody makes an application he is entitled to get whatever relief he can show he is entitled to under whatever authorities he can then muster, rather than by some prestated set of standards that he thinks are going to help.

Mr. Proskauer: May I say, Mr. Wright's interruption has not tended to clarify this situation. His language of the retention section relates solely to construction and enforcement. There is not a word in his section that relates to modification in the language which has been told you by Mr. Caskey was taken from the Appalachian case. If there is an issue between us here, let's face it. We ask this Court to retain jurisdiction practically for all purposes. We do it because nobody is omniscient. We do it because as these complicated provisions of this decree get into action it may well be that the Government can come in and say, "This has not done the job." We are willing to subject ourselves to that under this form, or it may well be that we can come in and say there is something here which obviously creates an inequity and we ask your Honors to do exactly what the Court said in the Appalachian case, a District Court ought to reserve jurisdiction to do.

Now the only thing I have heard which gives any pause at all—and I don't think it is really pause—is the suggestion that possibly the words "or for other or further relief" may cover these things. I don't think they do, your Honors, and I believe we should have with the Government the clear right to come into this court in a situation as complicated as this and show—not relief from things occasioned—shall I proceed, Judge, or wait?

Judge Hand: Well, I had in my mind—I didn't hammer it out—I really had in my mind if this thing became impracticable as a means of controlling your monopolizing tendencies, that the Government could come in and make another application and say that there must be divestiture or something else. I had that in mind.

Mr. Proskauer: That is what this says.

Judge Hand: I am rather surprised that Mr. Wright should raise this question. You might have raised it.

Mr. Wright: We ourselves, if the Court please, suggested, of course, specific reconsideration after specific periods of certain provisions by the Court. But if the decree is going to have finality at all, I think it must not open up every provision of the decree the way in which this Section 11 seeks to open.

(4302)

Judge Hand: Are you afraid you could not appeal from it because it is not final?

Mr. Wright: Whether or not it would have finality for those purposes I don't think there is a serious question. I think it probably would.

Judge Hand: We shan't lightly disturb any such decree. You would have to show something on either side that was very controlling.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Judge Hand: In other words, we don't any of us, I suppose,—and certainly I don't above almost all other men—pay very much attention to rearguments after I once crystallize. I used to, but I found it did a great deal more harm than good. I find that it was a terrible practice, a weakness. And we have always here tried to differ very fundamentally from the various courts in the west in which a decision is only a step in talk and other decisions that go on for years. And in the reports you generally see both opinions printed as to what they thought of their first decision and what they thought after the second and so on: I don't believe in that and I don't think it is sensible or practical. It is not because I don't very often doubt my own conclusions and decisions, but having decided how to jump after more dubitation than is in the heads of most men, I don't intend to recant until somebody has told me I must who is superior.

Mr. Wright: I take it what we were concerned with in Section 7 is not any recantation at all, but the circumstances under which at some later time reconsideration might be had. For our part we would much prefer to take our chances under that provision than we would under the provision that they have proceeded under in their Section 9.

Mr. Proskauer: May I proceed very briefly along the lines you indicated?

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Proskauer: This is a judgment against us and you are going to orient in this decree a procedure for curing these evils of which we have been found guilty. I don't want any reargument. I don't want anything but for you to keep jurisdiction over this case so that if by reason of what transpires after the decree it becomes apparent to you either that the Government should have greater relief than you gave it or that we should have some modification of the relief you gave it—not that they are going to get it or we are going to get it—but that you have the jurisdiction to entertain an application. Now that is all we are asking and unless we all claim omniscience here, I should think Mr. Wright would agree with us that that was a sensible thing in the public interest to do in a great and complicated industry like this.

Now I sense what is in Mr. Wright's strategy. He wants to go to the Supreme Court and argue that he should have divestiture and that this does not give it to him and he doesn't want to have it said that this Court acted reasonably in retaining jurisdiction, and he believes his chances of reversing this Court on appeal are less if you do what the Supreme Court said in the Appalachian case should be done —that when you are dealing with a continuous and complicated situation you should retain jurisdiction.

I don't want to prolong the argument at this hour. I commend that to your Honors as something fundamental and serious and the language of it I ask that your Honors take and consider what is the right and the decent thing to do here.

Now Mr. Wright, may I proceed just a few minutes with-(4305)
out interruptions? I don't mind them when they are relevant, but I don't hear many relevant ones. And when I say this my lips are going to be closed on this decree because it would be just repetition.

I am going now to the last provision about the effect of what is to be done with this consent decree.

There again I argued that this morning in connection with my argument on arbitration. Mr. Wright replied to it. Now we have got the whole thing thrown into the hopper again. I restate my position, your Honors. The consent decree is the judgment of this Court. It remains in full force and effect except as you choose to modify it. Nobody has ever questioned it. The cases have questioned the right of a court to modify a consent decree, but nobody has ever questioned the fact that the consent decree was a judgment of the court, and we ask that language because it gives vitality and basic root for our contention with respect to these arbitration provisions.

(4306)

And when Mr. Wright said to me this morning that I was misrepresenting him when I said that they wanted to throw the arbitration in the ashcan, I call your Honor's attention in support of that statement to the very provisions he has been arguing here for about the liquidation of the whole arbitration system.

Judge Hand: You don't any of you care for any more discussion of this case before it is finally submitted for a decree?

Mr. Proskauer: I think not, your Honor, as far as I am concerned. I can't speak for all my colleagues.

Mr. Raftery: I only would like to have a few days to submit that proposed decree.

Judge Hand: Yes.

Mr. Raftery: I will get it in.

Judge Hand: And Mr. Isseks.

Mr. Cooke: I would also like to submit a decree on behalf of Universal.

Judge Hand: All right.

Mr. Leisure: How long a time will we have to submit something on road shows? What period of time?

Judge Hand: Oh, ten days.

Mr. Leisure: Ten days. Thank you. On the findings?

Judge Hand: Yes. That is for Mr. Raftery, too.

(4307)

Mr. Raftery: That will be fine.

Judge Hand: And Mr. Isseks—any of you. You have ten days.

Mr. Leisure: On the findings of fact and conclusions of law I asume you want no discussion on that?

Judge Hand: On the findings of fact and conclusions of law and the proposed decree. I should think this discussion of the proposed decree covered all this minutia as to findings.

Mr. Proskauer: With just one exception.

Judge Hand: It seems to me if you are going into all these findings it will just take forever and we will probably forget.

Mr. Proskauer: Being in entire agreement with your Honor's suggestion, as far as we on this side of the table are concerned, I don't see any advantage of going over the findings. I just want to call attention to one fundamental thing, and that is that the Government has omitted from its proposed findings everything that was said or found in our favor. That is why we have a great deal more findings than the Government.

Mr. Frohlich: I don't think it necessary for Columbia to submit a decree. Whatever changes are to be made can either be made by changes in the Government's decree or in the (4308)
Court's own decree. I dont want to burden the Court with too many documents.

Mr. Seymour: We have certain changes for Paramount. May we arrange with your secretary?

Judge Hand: Yes. There is such a multitude of paper we may never be able to determine which should be first and which should be last.

Mr. Seymour: I just want to add one word with regard to the findings. As Judge Proskauer has said they contain many which were left out in the Government's findings because they were favorable to the defendants. Second, our findings are consistent with the opinion, follow the Court's opinion, and the Government's are directly inconsistent in many respects with the opinion.

And finally we didn't propose in that blue book any findings with respect to the limited divestiture phase in the decree, and that was because until we knew how your Honors wanted the decree, to deal with that subject it was pretty difficult, Judge Hand: Wait a minute. What is that?

Mr. Seymour: In our proposed findings in the blue book there are no findings which relate to the portion of the decree which is subsection (4) of subdivision (3), that is the limited divestiture section. Now would this proper procedure: When your Honors get to that point of the decree to decide what you are going to do with Section 4, if we could get advice from the Court informally, both sides, as to what those provisions are to be, and then we will submit the appropriate findings rather than burden you otherwise.
(4308a)

Judge Hand: Yes, I think you better do it now. Submit anything you want.

Mr. Seymour: May we have a few days on that?

Judge Hand: Oh, yes. Ten days for everybody.

(4)

The Clerk: In the matter of the motion of the five majors in United States of America against Paramount Pictures, Inc., et al.

Mr. Donovan: If the Court please, the motion before your Honors was to amend the decree filed by this Court on Christmas Eve.

To amend that decree for RKO I respectfully ask the Court to conform the decree to the opinion of the Court in this case by adding language which will make paragraph 6 of section III read as follows:

> "From expanding its present theatre holdings in any manner whatsoever except as permitted in the preceding paragraph; or except for the purpose of acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments or in order to enter a competitive field, if such defendant shall show to the satisfaction of the Court and the Court shall first find that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition in the exhibition of feature motion pictures. Reasonable notice of the intention to make any such acquisition shall be served upon the Attorney General and the plaintiff shall be given an opportunity to be heard with respect thereto before any such acquisition shall be approved by the Court."

Your Honors will observe that the language follows very (5) closely the language of your Honors in outlining the terms of the decree on page 65 of your opinion, because there it was said that the decree to be entered—and now I quote your language—"shall not prevent a defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein in order to protect its investments or in order to enter a competitive field; if in the latter case, this Court or other competent authority shall approve the acquisition after due application is made therefor."

In fact, our proposed language is more restrictive because it applies to any expansion.

Now, that position, your Honors, that you took in that paragraph had already been foreshadowed by what your Honors said on page 60—and I quote:

"The remedy we are giving against the infractions is certainly no more drastic in effect than the one the Supreme Court granted in Interstate Circuit, nor more severe than the one it imposed in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co."

It is true, your Honors, that if this language should be added it would make the remedy in this case conform very closely or almost exactly as in the Crescent case. And as I read the Crescent case, your Honors, it would appear that the essence of that case was theatre expansion by unlawful means, and the Court there found that there had been an unlawful monopoly established in the operation of theatres (6) in various States of the South, and in addition it found that there had been coercion or attempted coercion upon independents for the turning over of their theatres. But even in those circumstances and with those findings the Government requested and the Court approved a provision prohibiting expansion—and now I quote from the opinion of Justice Douglas—"except after an affirmative showing that such acquisitions will not unreasonably restrain competition."

In pointing out the considerations which governed the Court in the formulation of such a decree, the Supreme Court used this language:

"The growth of this combine has been the result of predatory practices condemned by the Sherman Act. The object of the conspiracy was the destruction or absorption of competitors. It was successful in that endeavor. The pattern of past conduct is not easily forsaken. Where the proclivity for unlawful activity has been as manifest as here, the decree should operate as an effective deterrent to a repetition of the unlawful conduct and yet not stand as a barrier to healthy growth on a competitive basis. . ."

Now, within the principle laid down by your Honors, it seemed to us only fair that the same opportunity should be given to RKO and to the defendants here as was given the defendants in the Crescent case, particularly since there is no finding here of any unlawful monopoly such as was established in the Crescent case, and there is no finding of coercion such as was established there. The contrary has been found by the Court in this case: First, that the organization of RKO increased competition in every branch of industry; second, that RKO achieved no monopoly of theatres individually or collectively, considering it with the theatres of the other defendants; and the basic finding of this Court was that the irregularities and restraints arose not from the ownership of theatres by the producer-distributors, but in the trade practices and in the joint ownership and joint operations referred to and enumerated in Finding 154.

Now, if it please the Court, as I read your Honor's opinion, it seemed to me that the underlying philosophy in the approach to a remedy was in the necessity, as your Honors expressed it, on page 60, of restoring competition to the moving picture industry that would be fair both to the competitors and to the public; and that the best way of dealing with it was by the abatement of these trade practices rather than by total divestiture.

Now, your Honors, if this decree can be construed to mean absolute prohibition of expansion regardless of circumstances, then I am advised by my client that RKO would be in an impossible competitive position. And there are a few specific facts that need to be considered. There are certain findings based upon the testimony of Mr. Rathvon, president of RKO, which tend to show that RKO had always endeavored to operate its theatres as showcases for the initial exploitation of its features, of the features it distributes, with the result that the advertising by reason of that exploitation meant the increase of revenue to all who exhibited those pictures.

Of course RKO is not in a position to take advantage of that situation because she has no theatres in the South except in New Orleans, none in the Southwest, none in the Northwest, and only two in California. And more than that, your Honors, out of the 19 years of its existence, seven of those years were spent in receivership in which she lost many theatres.

I think your paragraph 118 of the Findings shows that while RKO had 109 theatres, Paramount had 1,395, Fox 636, Warner 501, and Loew 135. At the trial RKO had 106 theatres. Today she has 102. And without applying further to the Court for relief, she will have somewhere between 80 and 85 left of which she owns only 32 in fee.

Now, if it please the Court, in view of that situation, if RKO is to be locked into a position where she cannot get (9) that healthy growth that was spoken of in the Crescent case, and which was the basic purpose of your Honors in the opinion, then she will be subjected to a kind of a progressive divestiture which will mean slow strangulation for her; and I respectfully submit that the public interest would be fully safeguarded by giving to RKO and to these other defendants the same relief which was given in the Crescent case, so that expansion could be prohibited except where there is an affirmative showing that such acquisition would not unreasonably restrain competition; and I suggest, your Honors, that if there is to be such a fixed determination in the prohibition of expansion, that then not only will the purpose of the Sherman Act be defeated but also the purpose of your Honors' decision.

Mr. Seymour: May it please the Court, I want to add a few words on behalf of Paramount with respect to this same portion of the motion.

The decree as promulgated by your Honors may be ambiguous as to what you intended with respect to theatre expansion. As one reads paragraph 5 with paragraph 6, it seems probable that your Honors were following your opinion in that decree and were providing not absolutely against expansion but only against expansion where more than 5 percent but less than 95 percent interests were acquired. So one may read the first sentence of paragraph 5. But in view of the very strict language of paragraph 6 of subdivision 3, we felt it desirable to come back to your Honors for clarification at this time so that there could be no misunderstanding about what the decree meant.

(9a)
(10)

Now General Donovan has referred to the opinion which indicates that you did not intend to ban expansion absolutely but recognized the propriety of acquisitions to protect investments and theatre expansion, or the acquisition of theatres to enter a new competitive field; and in your opinion you indicated that the latter should involve court approval.

The language of the opinion, when we came to the argument on the decree seemed to be quite clearly what your Honors had definitely determined because in examining the colloquy I am reminded as we set forth in our little memorandum that we filed yesterday that when I was arguing against the Government's absolute ban on expansion and began to attack that as contrary to the opinion, Judge Hand said, "We are not going to have any such drastic opinion as that. We considered that." And naturally I passed on because that seemed to be precisely in accordance with the opinion, and I took it that your Honors had rejected the Government's suggestion.

Now the findings and conclusions, like the findings and like the colloquy, point not to a complete ban on expansion but point only to the divestiture of those joint interests which your Honors held to be unlawful and there is nothing in the findings or in the conclusions to support an absolute ban on any theatre acquisition.

In our proposed clarification we have gone even farther than your Honors went in your opinion. In the opinion the Court indicated it would be content with a decree which required court approval only when the acquisition was for the purpose of acquiring a theatre in a competitive field. It did not require court approval where a theatre was acquired in order to protect investments. In our proposed clarification we have provided for court approval for both. Not only did we think that was consistent with everything that happened in this case to have this clarification in substantially the form suggested, but to read the decree as intending to ban absolutely any theatre acquisitions in the way of an expansion to protect investments or to enter a competitive field would go beyond, we think, relief which has been authorized even in more extreme cases.

General Donovan has pointed out that in the Crescent case, with all the Sherman Act violations which the court found there, the Supreme Court directed a decree which permitte acquisition upon court approval and recognized that (12) that did not impose an undue burden on the court. In the Schine decree, where, as Judge Bright recognized, the facts went far beyond any facts in this case, the same right of acquisition with court approval was allowed in the decree.

If these defendant-exhibitors should be denied the right upon a proper showing and court approval to expand, then your Honors' holding that they had a lawful right to own theatres would be substantially negated because it is surely a part of the right to own theatres to protect your investments, and it is surely a part of the recognition which your Honors gave to the public interest in the ownership of theatres, the public advantage in these fine large theatres, that these defendants should be allowed to enter a new competitive field,

Now they might have been allowed to do that without any application to the Court, merely being restrained by the requirements of law. But surely with approval of the Court, so that any acquisition in either of those fields may clearly involve no undue or unreasonable restraint of trade, they should be entitled to do it, and indeed to deny them that right would be to relegate them to a class in the community where everybody else can do this and they can't, though they have not been found guilty of violation in theatre expansion or acquisition except in regard to joint interests, which of course are forbidden.

Now I shan't labor the importance of the right to protect investments or to enter a competitive field, because your Honors have recognized that without any guidance from us in your opinion, and reiterated it in the colloquy, and seem to have recognized it in the findings. But plainly, there are many situations in which a theatre-owning defendant must be free with court approval to take action to protect its theatre investment.

Let me give—and I don't attempt to exhaust them—a couple of examples which show the kind of thing which they surely must be free to do with court approval under the opinion.

U. N. is about to build a magnificent part of the City on the East River. It seems probable that a part of that will be a theatre section. No one can say now whether it will draw substantial patronage from the Times Square area and as congestion and transportation in New York City gets worse it probably will.

Now Paramount owns a fine theatre in the Times Square area. Surely if there should be a substantial migration of theatre patronage to that new section of New York, Paramount ought to be free to come to your Honors and ask leave to acquire a theatre there to protect its investment.

There are situations where the business section of the City moves from an old area to a new area. Surely the owner of a theatre in the old area ought to be able to come to the Court and get the right to erect a new theatre to protect its investment in the old theatre from diversion of patronage.

Another example which is perhaps not of great general interest but of some interest is this: Open air theatres have become more and more common. These so-called drive-in theatres. Surely if that movement shall spread, Paramount, owning a theatre in the community and finding that during the summer months a substantial portion of the patronage was taken away, ought to be free to come to court and get leave to acquire a drive-in theatre or an outdoor theatre.

Now those are just examples of the kind of thing that might be necessary to protect investments.

Now on the entry into the competitive field, as I say, it was a public advantage and the Sherman Act recognizes that it is a public advantage to have competition in exhibition, and that it was a public advantage to have competition in exhibition from these defendants. Now there are areas where these defendants have no theatres where it is not a public advantage to have that competition. The Sherman Act does not take that view and your Honors didn't seem to. Your Honors knew that there are areas where, for example, Paramount has no interests or theatre interests, and the exhibitors have boycotted pictures and denied the exhibitor an opportunity to exhibit pictures. That is a public disadvantage and of course it is a serious disadvantage to the distributors, and surely Paramount and the other defendants ought to be free to go into such an area and compete and assure an outlet for their pictures and an opportunity to the public to see their pictures.

That boycott situation is not the only one where such an opportunity ought to be afforded.

Now I submit to your Honors that the decree should be clarified so as to conform to everything your Honors have said in this case which indicates that your Honors have recognized the propriety of leaving some flexibility in the future development of this business and not denying these defendants the lawful rights which they were held by your Honors to have, to-wit, the right of owning theatres and exhibiting pictures; and we submit to grant this clarification will simply put the decree in clear harmony with everything your Honors have done in this case, and not to grant this clarification will put the decree out of harmony with everything your Honors have done in this case and out of harmony with the current course of recent Supreme Court decisions on relief.

Judge Hand: Now Mr. Seymour, we in drawing up this decree—and it was in the opinion—reserved jurisdiction. That is at once a benefit and a danger to anybody connected with the business, of course. In other words, if it doesn't work you are at liberty to divest on further hearings and if this arrangement bears too hard on any theatres in any given situation you can still come to court and ask to modify where the specific right to modify in this respect was not preserved.

Mr. Seymour: Your Honor is aware of the difficulties with applications to modify under the general reservations. Now we submit that there should be a specific reservation in this regard as your opinion foreshadowed, and also the discussion foreshadowed, so that it may be plain to whomever might be hearing the case at the time that your Honors specifically reserved the right to come in with such applications.

(17)

Judge Hand: Does anyone else want to be heard on this clause that General Donovan and Mr. Seymour have been talking about?

Mr. Caskey: Not on this reservation.

Judge Hand: All right, that being so——

Mr. Arnold: I would like, if the Court please, to address a few remarks to the effect of this acquisition on expansion, or the effect of expansion upon our clients, the purpose of which is to suggest a possible reconsideration of our right to intervene.

Our clients represent every sort of situation. For example, many of them would be affected—are affected by subsection 4 on page 6 of the decree, the section which restrains the defendants from making or continuing leases of theatres in the same competitive area to an independent for a share of the profits.

Now they haven't seen this motion. I don't know what position they would take under the motion, but I suspect that many of them would take this sort of position: as the decree now stands, a lessee from a major under a profit-sharing arrangement can change that lease I assume to a fixed rental but the major cannot expand by taking over the operation of that theatre itself. Now here is a section of the decree which goes further than our original grounds for intervention in that it takes away a specific property right and here is a motion for expansion which takes away all bargaining power when that property right is affected, when that lease is cancelled.

Now I assert that the Court cannot consider this motion until it has given notice to those in our situation whose property rights will be affected. They have, I think, a clear position as necessary parties with respect to this motion. I haven't contacted them. It is difficult to explain this thing over the long distance phone but I do want here in protection of the various members I represent to suggest that as the decree now reads they have the right in the situations covered by section 4 to change a profit-sharing rental into a fixed rental, the expansion will permit the major to take that over in order to protect his own investments, and their property rights, specific lease property rights, would be adversely affected, and therefore, while I can't take a position on the motion I suggest the Court has no jurisdiction to grant that motion without notice and without a hearing, and I wish to point out again the effect which this motion might have with respect to competitive bidding.

Judge Bright: That was the only ground you asked to intervene on?

Mr. Arnold: That was the only ground on which I asked to intervene, but now a new motion is made which our clients have never seen, which affects specific property rights. Of course we claim no right to intervene until such time as our specific property rights are affected. I am not here doing anything more than in the interests of my clients suggesting until we have an opportunity to intervene on this new motion the Court should not pass on it, and I further suggest that we are necessary parties with respect to any motion which affects our leases. I can't tell the Court who these people would be; I am simply making a record to protect their interests if any.

I wish to say further with respect to the effect of expansion on competitive bidding, the situation we can imagine might be this: a group of independents are in any given city buying their pictures on competitive bidding from one of the majors. The major puts a minimum bid of $5000 a picture on. No one is able to bid for the picture. The suggestion is always there that that is a boycott and that they can now come in and build a theatre in order to protect their pictures and in order to expand their own competitive situation. That, if the Court please, is exactly what will happen, the threat of the building of a new theatre, the pressure—you see, we start out with a seller's market, and on top of that seller's market there is the pressure of a possible new theatre coming in. I suggest that that is one of the things which should be taken into consideration with respect to the operation of the beginnings of competitive bidding and expansion. I quite agree that my only right here is to talk in this connection about competitive bidding. I have no right to talk about expansion except insofar as it affects competitive bidding, and I think I have the right to point that out. And then one final thing and I am through; and that is, I would like to call the Court's attention to the fact that since this decree has been handed down there are a number of events and actual evidence which could be produced to show that the Court should give reconsideration to its competitive bidding proposal. I think it would be presumptuous for me to repeat that which the Court heard very courteously and at great length on competitive bidding, but I think it is proper for me to outline a few situations which have developed since the Court entered its decree, and suggest the proof would be available of that character.

Since the decree old customers' relationships and franchises are being cancelled and repudiated from Massachusetts to New Mexico. And I think we could show that this competitive bidding scheme is becoming the greatest bonanza to the majors that they ever have had in the history because of the bargaining position in which it would put them. We argued that before. The only thing I add now is that we offer to show the thing in actual operation.

Now I will give a typical situation to show how that is working. In one city an old customer relationship which has lasted for fifteen years has been broken, and the picture, a major and most important picture has been sold to another major defendant.

Now, I think that instances like that would build up the picture of the piecemeal destruction of a competitive system by legalized operations one by one under a decree which prevents the Court or any other court from looking at the entire situation and seeing where the practice of competitive bidding is leading.

I will use one analogy and then I am through. It is an analogy in reverse. The A. & P. Stores have been recently convicted of violation of the Antitrust Laws. Their policy was to go into town after town and accumulate retail outlets. Their money was made behind the retail outlets. Their methods of getting retail outlets would be to indulge in fierce competition in a given town until their outlets were established and competition was destroyed. I think that in no single town could it have been shown that the A. & P. had violated the Antitrust Laws. The Court, however, was able to look at the entire acquisitions of A. & P. and they were convicted of violation of the Antitrust Laws.

Now, I think that the practices since the decree would show a pattern of that character taking place in the operation of competitive bidding, and it is that new matter only which I wish to call to the attention of the Court.

Judge Goddard: Judge Arnold, are you opposed to giving the exhibitor the option of competitive bidding?

Mr. Arnold: The option, if the Court please, is purely illusory. He does not have any option. He is compelled in a competitive situation, if one man makes a bid, to come in. In other words, the Court, it seems to me, has effectively allowed a combination of major defendants to impose this on the market. I do not want to go into that too much; I do not want to repeat all the arguments I made before. That, of course, has been our position. I do not think that the decree has substantially changed it at all.

Mr. Proskauer: May it please your Honors, I just have a word to say. I do not want to go far afield with Judge Arnold. We are not here on our motion on this competitive system, and I would not have got up if it had not been for his suggestion that in some sinister way we were using this decree for the purpose of coercing his clients.

I suggest the impropriety of such a representation to this Court, and I ask your Honors to consider the improbability of such a thing in the light of the fact that we are coming here with a motion, a part of which is to be submitted to you bye and bye asking for a stay of these provisions for the very reason that we do not want to go through with this change of system which does bring hardship in its wake—I admit—to us and to everybody else until we get reoriented. This talk about competitive bidding giving us an option to coerce independents by our own collective action has no substance whatever, and I am suggesting that the determination of this motion we have made should not be influenced by the somewhat atmospheric observations of my friend Judge Arnold.

I should like to say a word about Judge Hand's suggestion made to Mr. Whitney Seymour, and that was that perhaps we could get this relief as to the theatre situation by coming in under the general power of amendment section of the decree. I should like to point out the great differences between coming into court and saying we are here by virtue of a provision of the decree, asking permission to do a thing where we have got the burden and must sustain the burden of showing that we are not violating the law by doing it—that on the one hand—and on the other hand coming into a court and saying we want the decree itself modified. That burden is too great to impose on us in a practical situation like this where you will probably have from time to time perhaps six, seven, perhaps a dozen applications a year from one company or another to acquire a theatre under circumstances which it undertakes to show to the Court are perfectly proper, and the Court might very well and probably would say in many of those cases we think you have sustained that burden and we will permit you to acquire theatre A, where a court would be wholly unwilling to say that on this showing we are going to modify the decree. The troubling part of this wholly surprising provision in your Honor's decree was that it was completely unforeshadowed. You had in your opinion, as was pointed out, very carefully envisaged the validity of these situations in which we want to expand theatre ownership. You had in colloquy expressly said that you would not put such a drastic provision in the decree. Therefore why is not the thing to do to make this decree conform with the necessities of the case, as your Honors yourselves noted them, and merely put in a provision that we are entitled to come here and take the burden of showing you that we should be entitled to acquire a theatre under specific circumstances?

Judge Hand: Mr. Wright.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I do not propose to make an argument here. I assumed that the time for argument over the provisions of the decree were covered last October, in view of the extraordinary length of time that was given everyone to have his say about the decree prior to that date. I merely want to say with respect to this prohibition (26) against expansion that in so far as the Government is concerned, its meaning is perfectly clear that there shall be no expansion except such expansion as might occur pursuant to an order entered by this Court approving an acquisition in the course of dissolving an existing joint relationship.

Now, that, it seems to me, is what the provision clearly said, but if it does not mean what it said, I think the Court ought to say so now.

There has been some inadvertent misrepresentation here, I think, of what the colloquy was and what these other similar provisions in the Crescent and Schine decrees provided that I think should also be cleared up. The provision you entered was a compromise between the position that we advocated and what the defendants advocated. We asked for an unqualified prohibition against expansion, and that was the request to which your Honors' remarks that were quoted by Mr. Seymour were directed. We did not get that. The defendants have an express authorization to expand in the course of acquiring these partnership interests. They also have, as I understand the decree, a much more flexible position than that which was actually accorded to either the Schine or the Crescent defendants. Those decrees, in terms, prohibit any acquisition except with the Court approval. Schine at this moment has a petition pending for leave to (27) build a theatre to replace one which was burned down.

Now, the prohibition here is not in terms a prohibition against acquisition but one against expansion; so I should suppose without any court proceeding whatsoever these defendants are free to replace such existing facilities as they lose or abandon.

Now, I had assumed that one purpose——

Judge Hand: Repeat that last thing.
Mr. Wright: Will you please read that.

(Last remarks of Mr. Wright read.)

Mr. Wright: In prohibiting expansion except in the course of this dissolution proceeding pursuant to Court approval, I should suppose that one of the things the Court had in mind was preventing any substance being given to exactly the sort of claim that Mr. Arnold said some exhibitors were now making with respect to the probable effect of the competitive bidding system. I should suppose that the prohibition in its present form is, of course, intended to see that the operation of that system or other practices of the defendants would not be used as a means of promoting the over-all theatre position of the defendants.

Now, I think it is perfectly clear that where the Court has found, as it did here, that there has been an attempt to monopolize, even though the monopoly has not been made effective, it is clearly entitled to adopt adequate measures to see what monopolization does not in fact result; and I think in accordance with the existing findings of the Court it was clearly authorized to go further than it did, and that is unqualifiedly prohibit expansion of the theatre holdings of these groups that have been found guilty of the violations which are recited in the findings. It did not do that, and it seems to me that the exception that was provided—that is, permitting these people to actually expand at the expense of independent partners—was an extremely liberal exception which, under no circumstances, ought to be broadened. If the Court, however, has any intention of broadening it, I do not think the matter should be deferred to some future application. I think we ought to know now what the actual intention of the Court is in that respect. I assume that its intentions are actually reflected in the provision as written; but if I am incorrect in that, I think we ought to know now.

Mr. Sulzberger: Your Honors, I represent certain stockholders who own a 50 percent interest in a single theatre presently operated by Loew's. We are vitally affected by the provisions of this decree, especially those provisions which involve the sale to or the purchase of that stock interest to Loew's. There are probably hundreds of similar individuals in a similar situation. We feel that it is impossible for this Court to envisage every situation where an independent or an investor is going to be vitally affected by a provision of this particular decree, and it seems fair to us that before this decree is put in final form wherein a modification of the decree will have to be applied for on notice to all the defendants, which would be an expensive procedure for a single theatre owner or a stockholder who owns an interest in a single theatre,—that your Honors provide by publication or other adequate means that all persons who will be vitally affected by this particular decree, and who may lose substantial sums as a result of the provisions of this particular decree, be given an opportunity to come in and to be heard so that they may present to this Court ways in which their financial interest is being adversely affected by the decree so that the same may be clarified now.

Now, in our particular case—and I do not want to burden the Court at this particular time with that individual situation—my clients own a 50 percent stock interest in a single theatre. I do not think that they would be classed by this Court as either independents or theatre operators, though it might very well be that the Court could or would come to such a conclusion. This particular person may be required under the provisions of that decree to sell its stock interest, though it may not prefer to do so, or to buy when perhaps it it is not in a position to buy the stock interest of Loew's in that particular theatre. This particular stockholder, if it should buy, or, rather, if it should sell, is going to be vitally affected by that particular provision of the decree which provides that a theatre is not a defendant's own theatre unless it owns 95 percent or more of the stock interest in that particular theatre. And there are many provisions in this particular decree which affect independents and investors in a way not envisaged either by the Court or by the Government. And in concluding I would like to say for my own clients and for independents generally that we would like an opportunity to present to this Court suggestions with reference to the decree before it becomes finally operative.

Mr. Davis: If your Honors please, I do not know what the situation is to which Mr. Sulzberger refers. I do not want to be understood as opposing to his attitude as a co-stockholder with Loew's. It is not clear to me how the Court can sit here day-in day-out and pass on the equities of everyone of this multiplied number of instances.

Judge Hand: Of course we cannot, and we are not going to either. We are going to allow them to ventilate their ideas, but the idea that we cannot make a decree against some defendants in an equity suit under the Sherman Act without bringing in stockholders and everybody else, has been exploded by a number of authorities, and we dealt with it in the decree, and we do not propose to follow that trail much further even by listening to vocal exercises.

Mr. Davis: Well, I do not find myself in dissent with the Court. I want to make it clear, however, that I am not speaking in opposition to Mr. Sulzberger or Mr. Sulzberger's clients.

Now, I have not said anything on this question of expansion because I am content with what my colleagues have said on that subject. It does seem to me that a hard and fast rule, no expansion whatever, which freezes the present holdings of the parties, is apt to work more hardship than it is public benefit, and the question which we present there is whether the Court follows the language of its opinion, or whether it follows the more restricted language of the decree. The opinion seemed to use to leave a proper degree of latitude, and we think the decree should preserve it.

Now, on the question of competitive bidding, still a very contentious subject, as one may perceive from the remarks of my brother Arnold, what we suggest in that connection is this, that the operation of that system, experimental as we all know it to be, should be suspended until reasonable time, 90 days or whatever, after the entry of final decree in this case if and when an appeal should be taken. If no appeal is to be taken by any of the parties and the case ends here, then we know what to do. If an appeal is to be taken, we submit that this rather expensive and experimental process should await the final determination of the case so that we would not be put in the attitude of beginning it today and dropping it again tomorrow. We should like the case to reach a stage of finality before we are compelled to enter upon that experiment and we so suggest.

When it comes to the dissolution of pools, your Honors have provided that joint ownership should be disposed of in two years. You set no time whatever for the dissolution of pools. We submit that the same sort of latitude in time should be extended to the dissolution of pools as to the dissolution of joint ownerships; because in essence the problems are very much the same and require the same sort of negotiation and readjustment to the interests of the parties; and we should like a time limit set on the dissolution of pools.

I am not disposed to argue this matter to any great extent. We have tried by our memorandum and our brief to give your Honors the exceptions we have to make for the moment to the decree, and I make it clear that this is not a proceeding on our part for a rehearing or a retrial of the case. It is to the interest of the public that there should be an end to litigation, I suppose, and we accept your Honors' opinion for present purposes. Our object is only to bring the decree into conformity with that opinion and with the necessities of the parties.

Mr. Caskey: I might make a slight technical suggestion: We are not asking for any addition of time to dissolve the relationship between co-defendants to the extent that that has not already been accomplished. We propose to accomplish it by March 1st.

The requested provision for two years with regard to pools and leases are arrangements with independents and not as among ourselves.

With regard to the so-called competitive bidding, as far (34) as the five theatre owning defendants are concerned, we are not asking for any stay with respect to provision 8(b) which requires that each license shall be granted solely upon the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or otherwise; nor are we asking for any stay as to 8(d), which provides that each license shall be offered and taken theatre by theatre and picture by picture. That too it is contemplated will go into effect immediately. In fact, it is, generally speaking, in effect now. Nor are we asking for any stay from section 9 which provides that we are enjoined from arbitrarily refusing the demand of an exhibitor for the run that he desires and licensing it to another. Thus, your Honors will see that the essence of the reform is in effect, and what we are asking is that the precise procedure or ritual specified in section 8(a) and 8(c) shall not become effective until final disposition.

We are not asking for a postponement of the general plan which this Court has suggested, that licenses shall not be refused arbitrarily, that they shall be granted solely on the merits without discrimination theatre by theatre, picture by picture.

Judge Goddard: What about the admissions?

Mr. Caskey: We are not asking for any stay with regard (35) to that. I think it is a fair statement to say that that provision has been taken out of most of the contracts of the five theatre-owning companies. I do not know what the others have done. I do know that in the case of Twentieth Century-Fox the provision was taken out as soon after June 11 as we could do it, and I think that generally speaking it has been taken out.

Judge Goddard: June 11?

Mr. Caskey: That was the date of the opinion. We took it out as soon as the opinion came down. And you may recall that we addressed a letter to the Court on this subject in the early summer of 1946, so I think as far as the five companies are concerned, the practice of fixing admission prices has been stopped.

Judge Hand: Of course, when it comes to the extra time you have asked for a stay, if there is an appeal you can go right down to Washington and try to get it.

Mr. Caskey: Yes, but it must be clear to your Honors that this is the appropriate forum for the stay, and I think on consideration you will see that the two-year period should have applied. I think it is merely a matter of mechanics; if the paragraph had been renumbered it would have applied to all three. I do not think there is any essential difference between a pool with an independent or a lease to an independent, or a joint stock ownership such as has been described by Mr. Sulzberger. They all fall into the prohibited category.

Mr. Seymour: May I just make a comment in answer to your Honor's suggestion that we could go to the Supreme Court for this stay on the competitive bidding thing. I think it is plain that the thing is so complex, the whole problem of distribution is so complex, and the question of whether this represents a real change which ought not to go into effect until it has been considered, is one which your Honors can appraise far better than the Supreme Court can on an actual motion. Now, it is plain that it is a revolutionary reform; that is what you intended it to be. Whether it can be made plain to the Court on a motion for a stay, I do not know; and it seems to us that your Honors are in a far better position to pass on that than the Supreme Court would be on that application. This case will be complicated enough for the Supreme Court when it gets there on the merits, and this question of distribution and the change in distribution, it seems to me ought to go to them on the merits rather than on an application for a stay.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, we are asking one other clarification in your decree, and it relates to a conclusion of law. As the decree is now drawn, that conclusion reads (37) (9(d))—and if you look at page 11 of the little memorandum we handed you you can follow I think very clearly the rather simple argument I propose to make to you.

The conclusion reads:

"Conspiring with the distributor defendants"—

Mr. Wright: Excuse me, Judge. If you would rather hear me now on this question of the stay, or put the whole thing over—the order that you have been following I thought was to discuss one subject at a time.

Mr. Proskauer: Oh yes, I will gladly give way.

Mr. Wright: If you would rather do it this way, all right.

Mr. Proskauer: I waited to see if you were going to get up. I will give way.

Mr. Wright: With reference to the stay of the competitive bidding provisions of the decree, it seems to me quite clearly that is an integrated section. You can't, it seems to me, stay part of those provisions and have others operate effectively.

Now, for our purposes there are many situations of people who have been in communication with us which are contrary to the representations which have been made by many (38) of these organizations here; they thought their particular situations would be helped when and if competitive bidding went into effect. They, of course, have been advised that the effective date of the provisions will be July 1. In view of that fact, our inclination, I think, is to see that the provision is at least given an actual trial in operation; that you cannot determine whether all of these dire consequences will ensue, or what its actual effects will be without actual experience under it. The only way to get experience under it is to put it into effect.

Now, I have this qualification in that. I had assumed that serious consideration would not be given to motions to amend the substance of the judgment at this time; and if there were not this protection against affiliated theatre expansion along with it, I would have some qualms myself about seeing that it goes into effect without that protection; but as I assumed the matter will be now, I assumed that the judgment will stay in its present form, and under those circumstances it is very doubtful whether we will appeal from the competitive bidding provisions as such at all.

Now, nobody else has filed an appeal, and I do not see how the Court can possibly say at this time that the provision is going to be under attack on the appeal. The only point at which that can be determined, I think, is at the expiration of the 60-day period when all appeals will be on file and the Supreme Court will then obviously be the proper forum in which to consider what if any stay should be granted to whom with respect to what provisions, and what if any conditions might be appropriately imposed; and I suppose one of the main considerations in connection with any stay based upon a until final disposition of the Supreme Court, would be when the case was going to be so disposed of, and I submit that only the Supreme Court itself would be in a position to speak on that point or to give consideration to that question. It might very well insist as a condition of a stay on an expedition of the appellate process, or that the case could be more quickly disposed of than it might otherwise be. Of course, the position that the defendants are asking for here is one in which they could sit back and without any appeal of their own simply have complete protection with no incentive whatsoever to cooperate with the Government in getting a speedy determination. That I think would be a very unfortunate place in which to put the case.

Judge Hand: Now, Mr. Wright, regarding the time they ask for on divestiture of these pooling contracts as compared with joint ownership—what have you got to say to that?

(40)

Mr. Wright: With respect to that, your Honor, I see no essential difference between a pooling agreement or a profit-sharing lease or those other agreements which the Court found to be unlawful in themselves, and, let us say, a franchise. I assume that all of these agreements of that character which are found to be unlawful are terminated and become unenforcible on the date that the judgment becomes effective. Now, I see no special reason for any extension of the period at which those agreements become unenforcible. It is true that the declaration of unenforcibility will lead to the making of new arrangements between the present parties. They have already had six or seven months in which to explore the possibilities, and are given additional time in which to complete them; and it seems to me that if any special hardship case should develop and the facts were brought to the attention of the Department, I would assume that there would be no difficulty in granting such particular time as might be necessary to avoid a particular hardship. But I see no reason whatsoever for just a blanket postponement of the effective date of that relief. These agreements are illegal in themselves, and I see no reason why their continuance should be countenanced after the date of the judgment.

(41)

Judge Hand: What about the joint ownership?

Mr. Wright: Well, the joint ownership is appropriately taken care of now by a two-year provision. They are given a two-year—

Judge Hand: They say they would like them coterminous.

Mr. Wright: Well, it seems to me they are essentially different things.

Judge Hand: Well, that is just what I wanted to hear.

Mr. Wright: The reason for the two-year period in dissolving the joint ownerships, I take it, is that these involve transfers of stock and property which by their nature require a more elaborate treatment. Now, these pools which are the product of simply an agreement, it seems to me, are effectively terminated simply upon a voiding of the agreement. That settles the pool. Now, I see no reason why any time is required for the termination of one of that character other than what has already been given. The judgment, as I say, declares franchises invalid as of the date it becomes effective. I see no distinction between such agreements and the pooling agreements in so far as illegality is concerned or the time at which they should be terminated. It seems to me they should all be terminated when the judgment becomes effective.

(42)

Mr. Caskey: If your Honors please, it seems to me that the distinction which Mr. Wright seeks to make between the pools and the joint ownership is utterly unrealistic. Many of these so-called pools involving two or more theatres which are operated by one of these defendants for the joint account of themselves and a third party are in corporate form; many of them are set up by joint ventures; others exist by virtue of leases or subleases or assignments of leases. In many cases, or, at least, in a number of cases, the pool itself has acquired for the joint account a third or a fourth theatre; there is no operator; it is not possible just to say that on March 1st the third party will come and take his theatre.

Judge Hand: Well, you have got some time, and a lot of those pools are very obnoxious things. They ought not to have been had; the parties ought to have known enough not to have them even in the vague state of the law about the Sherman Act.

Mr. Caskey: Whatever that fault may be, the fact is that it is not feasible to get third parties to come in to operate by March 1st. Many of these pools represent theatres owned by third persons, who may technically come within your definition of an operator but who, in fact, are not operators, (43) who will have to make arrangements for the operation of their theatres, for the purchase of films and for the detail of conducting business again.

We are not seeking delay just for delay's sake but seeking it in order that the rights of both parties will not be prejudiced by any precipitous action, and I think that an orderly dissolution of these pools over a two-year period will be more beneficial to the non-defendants who are involved. We quite agree with your Honors' statement of the law as to its effect upon third parties, but, nevertheless, the orderly return of their property is of importance to us and to the Court.

Mr. Seymour: May I just comment a moment on Mr. Wright's answer to our argument about this stay of the competitive bidding provisions. He suggested that we ought to have waited until we saw whether there was an appeal, and who appealed, and so on. Well, we could not wait because that decree fixed an effective date, and the only way that this application could be made was under the 10-day rule, and we had to come to your Honors to ask you to postpone that effective date.

Now, it is just idle to suggest that no attack upon this competitive bidding provision is going to be made in the Supreme Court. All the friends of the Court practically that (44) have been here have indicated that they do not like it and they have now, I think, entered orders on your Honors' denial of their interventions; and Judge Arnold, if I could understand it this morning, had not embraced competitive bidding with enthusiasm nor indicated that he was not going to attack it above.

Now, our real point is that if we put this system into effect, and then if the Supreme Court should modify it or strike it out or do something else in response to the attack which will certainly be made upon it, the whole industry would be just convulsed, and your Honors know that better than the Supreme Court does, and that is the reason we ask your Honors for relief.

Mr. Arnold: If the Court please, I can clarify that. I am authorized to tell the Court that the ATO is going to appeal, and I appreciate Mr. Wright's suggestion that we learn by experience. Pending appeal. We just prefer not to learn by experience during that period, so our position is quite clear on that. I am sorry I did not mention it in my first discourse.

Judge Hand: What?

Mr. Arnold: That there is going to be an appeal, and on (45) the stay of competitive bidding.

Judge Hand: And what else?

Mr. Arnold: On our desire to have competitive bidding stayed. I am speaking only to competitive bidding.

Mr. Rosenberg: If the Court please, I am an associate of Mr. Levy's, counsel for M. P. T. O. A.—that is, for the independent members thereof. Mr. Levy's train has been delayed from Missouri, and I have been authorized to say that he and the independent members of M. P. T. O. A. are in favor of the distributors' suggestion that the provisions relating to competitive bidding be stayed until such appeals as may be taken are taken.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honors, the correction we wish made, as I was saying, is on a conclusion of law, No. 9(d). Perhaps the simplest way to get it before your Honors is to give you the present reading and then give you in contrast the way we ask to have it changed.

It now reads, as you find it on page 11:

> "Conspiring with the distributor defendants to discriminate against independent competitors in fixing minimum admission prices, run, clearance and other license terms."

The change we wish made is to make that read as it is printed on page 12, namely:

(46)

"Conspiring with the distributor defendants to receive discriminatory license provisions, as found in Finding 110 above."

Our difficulty with this is that it runs directly counter in its general form to the facts as you found them, and subjects us, we think, to very great hazard in treble damage suits.

Now, let me make that clear. If you read the conclusion as it is printed in the decree, and on page 11, it is a general finding of illegality in conspiring against independent competitors in fixing minimum admission prices, run, clearance, and other license terms.

Now, this is what you said in your opinion which directly negatives that in its present form, and I am reading from page 52 of the opinion:

"The foregoing is not to be construed, however, as indicating that the distributor defendants have discriminated among their licensees with respect to film rentals, clearances, or minimum admission prices."

Then follows a discussion which I omit.

"In the absence of such facts, we are unable to infer that the distributor defendants have violated the Sherman Act in this particular regard, but any discriminations in other ways noted above in favor of affiliated licensees connected with the independent circuits must be enjoined."

And you found specifically in Finding of Fact 110 what those things that were to be enjoined were. If you will look at Finding 110 as it is printed at the bottom of page 11, you will find that you found it as a fact that various contract provisions have resulted in discrimination against small independent exhibitors, and you listed what those were. There is no finding of fact to justify the present conclusion of law in its general form. That Finding of Fact 110 amply justifies it in the form that we suggested, and, indeed, your opinion, that portion of it which I have read, negatives the validity of the general form in which Conclusion of Law 9(d) now reads. And as I said, your Honors, while at first blush this may sound as if it had a semantic phase, it becomes a matter of intense moment to us in defending those treble damage suits which we contemplate as a probability in the light of the decree which you are here making. We fear that if that 9(d) remains in its present form, a man will come in and offer in evidence a contract between us and a theatre, one of our co-distributors, and say he rests, and that the court found that we were conspiring with the distributor defendants to discriminate against (48) independent competitors in fixing minimum admission prices, run, clearance and other license terms, when, in fact, all that your Honors found in your finding of fact was certain specific violations which we are not asking you to change. Indeed, when it is all said, we are asking you to conform Conclusion of Law 9(d) with Finding of Fact 110 and with your opinion.

Judge Hand: Do you want to say anything, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Not unless the Court wants to hear me on this. It seems to me quite obvious that Conclusion of Law 9(d) in its present form is a necessary consequence of the factual findings that were made. The Court found that these distributors jointly maintained by conspiracy a system of uniform admission prices, runs and clearances, which, as a matter of law was itself a discrimination against all those not embraced in that combination; and to make the change that is suggested now it seems to me is utterly inconsistent with the findings of fact.

The Clerk: The Court will now proceed with the next motion, which is that of Columbia Pictures.

Mr. Frohlich: If your Honors please, I have but one suggestion to make on the decree. I have proposed that section 7, the very last paragraph in your decree, shall be amended to read as follows:

(48a) "Paragraphs 7, 8 and 9 of section 2 of this judgment shall not become effective until July 1, 1947, and in the event of an appeal to the Supreme Court by any party from those paragraphs, such paragraphs shall not become effective until 90 days after the entry of final judgment upon the mandate of the Supreme Court."

(49) Now I am speaking, your Honors, on behalf of a company that owns no theatres, and we feel that with the exhaustive provision and the very precise mechanism for competitive bidding, Columbia, owning no theatres, has been placed at a very terrific competitive disadvantage with regard to the Big Five. We can't take our investment and put it in theatres and at least recoup part of our investment. We have got to go out on the highways and byways and sell to strangers. We are going to take an appeal. We feel we have been placed in a position where we can't compete against these five defendants and we are going to appeal against competitive bidding and against the jurisdiction of this Court to make that sort of a decree on competitive bidding, and we are going to do it in view of that fact, that it would be a hardship to compel us to go into this competitive bidding. And until we get a decision from the Supreme Court—and it is going to take a long time to print these voluminous exhibits—I think the Supreme Court adjourns in May—I don't think we can get this appeal on before the summer and I don't think anybody in the country is going to be hurt or injured if there is a restraining provision in the decree giving us additional time until the Supreme Court decision comes down. The exhibitors don't want it. There is not an exhibitor in the United States who wants competitive bidding. The Little Three don't want it. The Big Five say, "Well, it is all right with us; we are not asking for any time." They ought to be very happy. But we are in a different spot. I want a square deal. I want this Court to give me something to protect ourselves and give me a chance to go up to the Supreme Court to test out whether I have got to compete with five gigantic companies in this matter of competitive bidding and selling because I am afraid we are not going to be able to do it and I am not speaking only for Columbia but I am speaking for every small distributor in the United States.

(50)

The Clerk: The Court will now hear counsel in the motion of Universal Pictures.

Mr. Cook: My argument will be directed to one point only: the propriety of franchises of reasonable length with small exhibitors which the decree read literally presently prohibits. I say "read literally," because I believe the matter should be litigated before your Honors or some other court and that it would not be construed to mean that because of the fact that there was no issue in this case as to the invalidity of franchises with small exhibitors, as I shall presently attempt to show.

But that would not help us in a business deal. If we want to make a deal, a franchise deal with a small exhibitor, they won't be satisfied with any such construction of the decree.

Now on the theatre-by-theatre aspect of competitive bidding we think it is a good thing as tending to produce a free market. We do not think it will have the effects that ought to be expected, that might perhaps be expected.

We also assume that picture-by-picture bidding must be followed before we can license a picture to a circuit theatre. We do not believe that either or both of these requirements will succeed in restoring competitive conditions without considerable change in the present theatre setup.

In this connection concerning the stay on competitive bidding which we have also asked for, I think it will make considerable difference in our attitude what the Supreme Court does with other aspects of this, on the theatre setup for instance. Under a different theatre setup we might favor competitive bidding.

Now we take the position, however, that where we desire to license our pictures to a small exhibitor, insistence upon (52) picture-by-picture bidding will go far to defeat the purposes of this proceeding. These purposes are very plainly stated in the section of the Government's complaint dealing with franchises. They are to protect the independent theatre from the dominance in the buying of pictures of the circuit theatre which is defined as a member of a circuit or buying combine of more than five theatres. There is no complaint whatsoever about franchises as an institution. All of the complaint is about franchises with circuit theatres because they are highly discriminatory against small distributors.

Now here is what the complaint says on the subject of long-term franchises and this is all it says:

"Generally, distributors enter into license agreements with exhibitors every season, and most license agreements cover only a single season's output of pictures. In their dealings with circuits, however, both affiliated and unaffiliated, the distributors engage in the practice of entering into long-term franchises. These franchises are for periods varying from two years to twenty years, and they cover the exhibition of pictures released by a distributor during their term in the theatres of the circuits with which they are made. The amount of film rentals involved in a single franchise has (53) sometimes exceeded two million dollars and a single franchise has sometimes covered the terms of exhibition in more than five hundred theatres in widely separated localities."

Your Honors will note that all that refers to franchises with circuit theatres.

"Long term franchises are generally advantageous to the circuits with which they are made. By virtue of the fact that the circuits have large buying power and pay to the distributors large sums of money, these franchises often discriminate against independent theatres whose buying power is small."

That is the whole burden of this whole thing, that they discriminate against independent theatres, that they discriminate against the independent theatres, and maintain this discrimination during the period of the franchises. They establish the runs and protections with respect to all the theatres in the circuit, and "These franchises deny to other theatres during their term, the opportunity to bid for or to license the runs of pictures covered by such a franchise in competition with the circuit theatres. Another effect of these long term franchises is that they restrict the market for films independently produced and released. Many of these franchises do not contain all the terms and conditions pursuant (54) to which pictures are licensed, but are simply agreements to enter into binding licenses at some future time.

"Franchises generally provide for the exhibition of pictures in all of the theatres operated by the circuit involved, and some of them have even provided that additional theatres acquired by the circuit during the term of the franchise are to be included within its terms."

And then without reading, it goes on to talk about the discriminatory terms of these franchises, the practice known as underage and overage with double features, vaudeville performances, and so on and so forth. The whole complaint is against franchises with circuit theatres. There is no complaint whatsoever about franchises as an institution. The entire complaint is about franchises with circuit theatres because they are highly discriminatory against small exhibitors.

Then why prohibit franchises of reasonable length with small exhibitors—and I may say that practically all our franchises are two and three-year franchises. Less than one per cent are over that.

Why prohibit franchises of reasonable length with small exhibitors when the best interests of such exhibitors requires a precisely opposite course?

Judge Bright: Aren't you rearguing the merits of the decision instead of whether this decree should be amended? Why should we go back and reargue the merits of the decree on this motion? The findings of fact have stated what we found on this subject. We are not going to go back to the complaint. We are not interested in going back to the complaint now.
(55)

Mr. Cook: I am trying to get a construction of the decree which the complaint really intended.

Judge Bright: Why don't you go back——

Judge Hand: I can't imagine the decree intending any such thing as you are saying. We thought these things were bad because they tied up the thing for a very long time and kept it out of the market. It tended to be discriminatory.

Mr. Cook: Against small exhibitors. Franchises made with circuits were discriminatory against small exhibitors, but franchises with small exhibitors are nevertheless under the prohibitive language of this decree prohibited.

The argument I am making thus is a plea for a more effective decree, not a less effective one, with respect to this particular aspect, franchises.

Now if franchises with small exhibitors are prohibited in this decree, as the literal language would indicate that they are, it must have been for one of two reasons. Either they were considered to be inherently illegal or they were part of the remedy.

Now that is one reason, Judge Bright, why I speak of the issue, because the prohibition of franchises with small exhibitors could not be part of the remedy if the issue in the proceeding was the legality or illegality of franchises with circuit theatres and not with independent exhibitors. I think it is quite obvious that it is not part of the remedy.

Are they inherently illegal? That is, franchises of reasonable length.

Well, a franchise is nothing more than an exclusive dealing contract. As a matter of fact the way "franchise" is defined in this decree, it not only prohibits what I regard as a franchise but it prohibits any commitment of your pictures because it does not contain the reservation that I am asking for here, it does not contain the clause that a franchise confers exclusive exhibition rights, for a certain time at least. In other words, any commitment of your pictures for any length of time is legal.

Judge Bright: Under the definition it confines it to one season. You said any length of time.

Mr. Cook: I accept your correction, of course.

Judge Hand: Accept the correction? That was the whole (57) meat of the cocoanut. What is the use of talk about it as a correction? We don't intend to have these long franchises whether you have been accustomed to make them or haven't been accustomed to make them. We decided that. Is there to be no end to our decision, no termination of this situation so that people can take their appeal if dissatisfied and go on?

Mr. Cook: I am confining myself to one very close point here, your Honors. If I said "any length of time," of course I misspoke myself, but the requirement of picture by picture selling would prohibit us from selling our pictures for any length of time in conjunction with the other provision concerning franchises.

My argument is going to be very brief here.

Judge Goddard: Is your point, Mr. Cook, that you ought to have the right to license pictures for more than one year, or one season?

Mr. Cook: Yes, to small exhibitors.

Judge Goddard: That is your point?

Mr. Cook: To small exhibitors as defined by the Government in the complaint, and that is independent theatres. Independent theatres are defined as theatres which are not members of a circuit of five or more theatres. I can't see for (58) the life of me how under the Sherman Act an exclusive dealing arrangement which obtains throughout all business and has time and time again been held to be legal, can be prohibited. As appears from a restatement of the law of contracts, that is stated as one of half a dozen legal restraints of trade. Likewise in Williston on Contracts, there are multitudinous cases holding them as legal. I am not talking about circuits. I am not talking about the suppression of exhibition franchises of that kind or our right to make franchises in the future of that kind. I am only talking about franchises with independent exhibitors for a reasonable period of years.

Now what do we have? Universal makes a franchise with a small exhibitor. We make only a relatively small part of the available features. Certainly a franchise with a small exhibitor can't have any appreciable effect in suppressing competition or restraining trade if it is made for a reasonable term of years and without any unduly restrictive features.

Of course franchises can be applied further in restraint of trade or monopoly. As far as your Honor's statement stands here of restraint, franchises with affiliated theatres and circuits undoubtedly aggravate that. There is no question about that. I am talking about an entirely different thing.

Now take the situation of a small exhibitor who wants to open a theatre and he goes to a bank and wants to borrow money. Is it conceivable that a bank would lend him any money without his being able to obtain a commitment for one or more distributors' pictures? Is it conceivable that he would entertain going into an operation with these powerful interests bidding against him picture by picture? What I am saying is this: your Honors have in non-competitive situations very expressly in your decree excluded the necessity of competitive bidding. Now what I am saying is this: that where a distributor wants to license a small exhibitor, commit his pictures to a small exhibitor for a reasonable term of years, that he should be permitted to do so and it can't—

Judge Bright: Where he makes an agreement of that kind in a particular neighborhood he excludes the other exhibitors from getting their pictures, doesn't he?

Mr. Cook: Yes.

Judge Bright: Then he restrains the other exhibitor—

Judge Hand: But this is too long, it is too much.

Mr. Cook: Of course a franchise might be made for too long a period.

Judge Hand: You say you have them for two or three years. Why should you have them any such length of time as that?

(60)

Mr. Cook: Let me explain, your Honor. Under this decree each one of these great theatre chains has an assurance of product from its parent. That is expressly confirmed in this decree. Therefore your chain theatre, your affiliated theatre, immediately has a tremendous advantage over the independent theatre, which cannot have any assurance of product, which must buy picture by picture, every picture it buys. Therefore the franchises of greater importance to the independent exhibitor. I don't mean that I am arguing the case of the independent exhibitor. Of course not. It is of great importance to us because it is very important to us to have show windows for our pictures just as this decree provides for the major defendants to have.

Now what difference does it make in respect to violations of the Sherman Act whether we obtain our show windows through contract or whether we obtain them through the purchase of a theatre or a great chain of theatres. We may not have the resources to buy a great chain of theatres. We may have the resources to obtain them through contract, and I can't see that as long as that contract is between a small factor of the exhibition side and a relatively small factor on the distribution side, that if it is for a reasonable term of years, not excessive, and if it has no other objectionable features why it should not be considered to be legal.

Now it may be that your Honors will want to pass on each individual application with small exhibitors and there might be a lot of them. The Supreme Court has time and time again said, in the Nash case, and in the Appalachian Coal case, in the Chicago Board of Trade case, that whether there is an unreasonable restraint depends upon all the surrounding facts and circumstances, and I am not saying that every franchise would be legal.

Judge Goddard: Mr. Cook, supposing the pictures are licensed for a period of years, several years. What chance has the independent theatre to get these pictures during those years? He is out of them, isn't he?

Mr. Cook: You mean a competing independent theatre?

Judge Goddard: Yes.

Mr. Cook: That is true of all competing theatres. That is true in all businesses. That is true in the oil industry.

Judge Goddard: It ties it up too long.

Mr. Cook: Too long a period ought not to be permitted.
(62)

Judge Goddard: I suppose the difference is we think beyond one season as too long.

Mr. Cook: I just wondered if your Honors considered a franchise with one exhibitor for a reasonable term discriminatory. This is not the case of these highly discriminatory franchises made with circuit theatres.

Judge Goddard: One of the very purposes of the decree is to protect the rights of the independent theatres.

Mr. Cook: Yes, and I say if this provision of the decree is read in that way it greatly injures the independent theatre.

Judge Hand: I don't understand it at all. You say that, but I don't understand it. I don't think it is necessary. If the particular arrangement benefits one independent theatre, which of course it may, it keeps the other out of the market in regard to that matter, and you simply say that that is customary in all trades, and that is inevitable in all dealings. That is true. It is a question of degree. We guard this thing beyond one season. You haven't said a thing to show me, either in the record or outside of the record, that it was necessary for anybody to tie these things up for more than a season.

Mr. Cook: I, of course, agree with your Honor that the unreasonableness of any restraint in anything of this kind is a matter of degree, and that you approach a borderline and you go over unto unreasonableness. But whether this is reasonable or unreasonable, you have got to look primarily at the economic power of the persons involved. Mr. Justice Brandeis in some of his decisions has been particularly clear on this subject in the Katz case which I cite in my memorandum. That is the very basis of the decision in the case. The very basis of the decision in the case was that the business unit indulging in it was not in a monopolistic position.

Judge Hand: I think we have got your point anyway.

Mr. Cook: It doesn't interfere in the slightest with the working of the decree. It is only a clarification of it.

The Clerk: The Court will hear counsel in the United Artists motion.

Mr. Raftery: You know when your Honors got through whittling down what we thought was the copyright——

Judge Hand: That copyright burns in your mind.

Mr. Raftery: —and when you expressly overruled the Supreme Court in the Interstate case, why naturally we must appeal because we may have some friends up there.

However, I am going to confine myself to one section,
(64)
Article 2, Section 4, of the decree, and one sentence in it.

It is the one sentence that you can see the jail doors in front of you. That is where your Honors have added that "Wherever any clearance provision is attacked as not legal under the provisions of this decree the burden shall be upon the distributor to sustain the legality thereof."

Now in the remaining sentence of that paragraph you took away from the distributors any right to protect or insert in any contract a clearance that the distributor deemed necessary to protect his revenue in the licensing of the particular copyright. In that first sentence you in effect said only such clearance as the exhibitor—which means our licensee but it meant the exhibitor—reasonably needs shall be granted to protect his revenue. In other words, you put into the hands of an exhibitor the right to tell us what clearance we are going to give. I think it amounts to that in the end. You always had to give the exhibitor the clearance that the exhibitor wanted or you didn't sell him.

We submit as a distributor that it is unfair to shift the burden of sustaining the legality of any clearance if it is ever questioned, and we know it is going to be questioned because under Judge Goddard's consent decree the arbitration boards were almost daily in the beginning hearing clearance complaints. We submit if there is any burden—I mean if it is necessary to put a provision in here fixing the burden of proof, that burden should be on the exhibitor and not on the distributor, because the clearance is not the clearance the distributor believes he should reasonably have, but it is the clearance that the exhibitor claims he needs for his theatre, and it licenses to the exhibitor in his theatre. That is the only point I am going to argue. Of course, my pets of price fixing and admission prices and so forth, we say in our brief we have got to go to another forum. And likewise on franchises and the right to make franchises we feel there has been an arbitrary fixing of one year. It could have been three, five, or none. But we submit all those things are subjects for the appeal. Likewise, I am not going to press the point in regard to competitive bidding. I haven't any faith in competitive bidding, because I don't believe the exhibitors are going to knock themselves out for our product. We still have to sell them, as I said on the trial. If we have got good pictures they will buy them. If they are bad, they won't want them.

The Clerk: The Court now stands adjourned.

AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT—Filed November 14, 1940.

Leave of Court having been first obtained, the United States of America, by its attorneys, acting under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, hereby amends and supplements the petition filed herein on July 20, 1938, and the bills of particulars filed pursuant thereto, by substituting therefor this amended and supplemental complaint against the following defendants:

Paramount Pictures, Inc., Paramount Film Distributing Corporation; Loew's, Incorporated; Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, RKO Proctor Corporation, RKO Midwest Corporation; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., Vitagraph, Inc., Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation; Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, National Theatres Corporation; Columbia Pictures Corporation, Screen [fol. 3138] Gems, Inc., Columbia Pictures of Louisiana, Inc.; Universal Corporation, Universal Pictures Company, Inc., Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., Big U Film Exchange, Inc.; United Artists Corporation, defendant corporations, and for its complaint plaintiff alleges upon information and belief, as follows:

I. Jurisdiction and Venue

1. This complaint is filed and these proceedings are instituted under Section 4 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies," said Act being commonly known and hereafter referred to as the Sherman Act, against the above-named defendants in order to prevent violations by them, jointly and severally, as hereinafter alleged, of Sections 1 and 2 of said Act.

2. The alleged unlawful acts and violations hereinafter described, including the unlawful monopoly, attempts to monopolize, combinations and conspiracies to monopolize, and contracts, combinations and conspiracies to restrain trade and commerce among the several states and territories of the United States have been and are conceived, carried out and made effective, in part, within the Southern District of New York, and many of the unlawful acts done in pursuance thereof have been performed by the defendants, or some of them, and their respective representatives, within said District. The interstate trade and commerce involved in the motion picture industry, as hereinafter described, is carried on, in part, within the said District.

II. Description of Defendants

3. III. Definition of Terms.

14. The following terms when used in this complaint have the meaning indicated:[1]

Production

15. (a) Producer.—Any person, partnership, association or corporation engaged in the production of motion pictures.

(b) Major Producer.—One which produces motion pictures for release by a major distributor[2] pursuant to a prior understanding or agreement with such major distributor.

(c) Independent Producer.—One which is not a major producer.

(d) Feature.—Any motion picture, the length of the film of which is approximately five thousand feet (usually five reels) or more.

(e) First Class Features.—A feature which grosses in excess of $400,000 in film rentals from exhibition within the United States.

---

[1] For convenience, they have been grouped under headings describing the three principal branches of the industry; production, distribution and exhibition.

[2] For definition of major distributor see Paragraph 16(b) below.

(f) Short Subject.—A motion picture, the length of the film of which is less than five thousand feet (five reels), and is usually two or three thousand feet.

(g) News Reel.—A motion picture, the length of the film of which is less than five thousand feet and which portrays events of general current interest.

[fol. 3144] Distribution

16. (a) Distributor.—Any person, partnership, association or corporation engaged in the business of licensing motion pictures for exhibition and distributing the positive prints of such motion pictures to exhibitors.

(b) Major Distributor.—A distributor which is a defendant herein or is controlled by a defendant herein.

(c) Independent Distributor.—One which is not a major distributor.

(d) State Rights Distributor.—An independent distributor which does not operate a system of national exchanges but buys from an independent producer the exclusive right to distribute its pictures in a particular state or territory.

(e) Exchange.—An office maintained by a distributor for the purpose of soliciting license agreements for the exhibition of its pictures in theatres situated throughout the territory served by the exchange, and for the physical distribution of such films throughout this territory. An exchange usually has facilities for the receipt, storage and subsequent shipment to exhibitors of films and advertising matter concerning them.

(f) Franchise.—A licensing agreement, or series of licensing agreements entered into as part of the same transaction, in effect for more than one motion picture season and covering the exhibition of pictures released by the distributor during the entire period of the agreement.

(g) Block Booking.—The practice of licensing, or offering for license, one feature, or group of features, upon condition that the exhibitor shall also license all or a majority of all of the features released by a distributor during a period of one year or more.

[fol. 3145] Exhibition

17. (a) Exhibitor. Any person, partnership, association or corporation engaged in the operation of a theatre for the exhibition of motion pictures.

(b) Affiliated Theatre. A theatre owned, controlled or managed by a major producer or distributor, or in the ownership, control or management of which a major producer or distributor has a financial interest.

(c) Unaffiliated Theatre. One which is not an affiliated theatre.

(d) Metropolitan Theatre. A theatre located in one of the following key cities: Albany, New York; Atlanta, Georgia; Baltimore, Maryland; Boston, Massachusetts; Brooklyn, New York, Buffalo, New York; Charlotte, North Carolina; Chicago, Illinois; Cincinnati, Ohio; Cleveland, Ohio; Dallas, Texas; Denver, Colorado; Des Moines, Iowa; Detroit, Michigan; Houston, Texas; Indianapolis, Indiana; Kansas City, Missouri; Los Angeles, California; Memphis, Tennessee; Milwaukee, Wisconsin, Minneapolis, Minnesota; New Haven, Connecticut, New Orleans, Louisiana; New York, New York; Newark, New Jersey; Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; Omaha, Nebraska; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Portland, Oregon; San Francisco, California; St. Louis, Missouri; St. Paul, Minnesota; Salt Lake City, Utah; Seattle, Washington; Washington, District of Columbia [1]

(e) First Run Theatre. One which customarily exhibits the first-class feature pictures released by one or more major distributors on a first run showing in the city or town in which it is located.

---

[1] The cities listed above are a group in which certain statistical analyses of first-run exhibition have been made by the petitioner and the term metropolitan has been adopted as a convenient means of referring to theatres in these cities. They include the ten largest cities in the United States and all of the cities in which any of the defendants maintains an exchange. They are all key cities, as defined in Paragraph 17 (c) hereof. Brooklyn was treated as a separate city in the petitioner's analyses and is, therefore, referred to as such herein.

(f) Theatre Circuit. A group of more than five theatres owned, controlled, or managed by the same person, partner[fol. 3146] ship, or corporation; or a group of more than five theatres which combine with each other, through a common agent, in licensing film.

(g) Circuit Theatre. Any theatre in a theatre circuit.

(h) Independent Theatre. One which is not a circuit or affiliated theatre.

(i) Motion Picture Season. The period from September 1 of one year to August 31 of the next.

(j) Release. The act of making prints of a motion picture available for public exhibition in theatres.

(k) National Release Date. The date upon which a motion picture is first released generally throughout the United States.

(l) Trade Showing. A private exhibition of a film for the trade prior to national release.

(m) Pre-release. A public exhibition of a motion picture prior to national release.

(n) Road Show. A public exhibition of a motion picture in advance of national release in a limited number of theatres at admission prices higher than those customarily charged in first-run theatres in the areas where they are located.

(o) Key City. One of such size and strategic location that the first-run exhibition of a motion picture therein effectively advertises such motion picture among exhibitors and the public in a wide area surrounding such city.

(p) First Run. The first exhibition of a motion picture in a given zone after national release.

(q) Second Run. The exhibition of a motion picture in any zone next subsequent to its first run.

(r) Repeat or Subsequent Run. Any exhibition of a motion picture in a zone subsequent to its first run.

(s) Clearance. The period of time which must elapse between runs of the same picture within a particular area or in specified theatres.

[fol. 3147] (t) Zone. A specified geographical area within which a particular clearance operates.

IV. Growth of the Defendants

A. Paramount [1]

18. Famous Players-Lasky Corporation (now known as Paramount Pictures Inc.) was organized by Mr. Adolph Zukor (Chairman of the Board of Paramount Pictures Inc.) and Mr. Jesse L. Lasky and incorporated on July 19, 1916. The corporate name was changed to Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation on April 1, 1927 and on April 24, 1930 the name was changed to Paramount Publix Corporation.

19. In 1933 Paramount Publix Corporation was adjudicated a bankrupt in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. In June, 1935, it was reorganized under Section 77B of the Bankruptcy Act under the name of Paramount Pictures Inc.

20. Twelve producing companies were merged with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in 1917. At the same time the company integrated production and distribution by acquiring a national distribution system through merger with Artcraft Pictures Corporation and Paramount Pictures Corporation. Thereafter the company from time to time acquired interests in other producing and distributing companies.

21. At the present time pictures are produced by the parent company, Paramount Pictures Inc., which is one of the principal producing companies in the industry. It maintains production facilities in Hollywood, California, and in New York and Long Island, New York. The following chart indicates Paramount's relative position in the

---

[1] The term "Paramount," as hereinafter used, includes all subsidiaries of the parent corporation, Paramount Pictures Inc. The term "subsidiaries" as used throughout this complaint includes all corporations in which the parent owns directly or indirectly, a percentage of the voting stock sufficiently large to permit the exercise of substantial voting control, even though such percentage is less than 51% of the total voting stock.

[fol. 3148] industry with respect to pictures produced for the seasons mentioned.

Season	Features Produced in Industry	Features Produced by Paramount
1930-31	510	58

1936-37	535	41
1937-38	450	40
1938-39	526	58

22. Paramount Pictures Inc. also produces approximately 45 shorts and 104 news reels each season.

23. Paramount pictures are distributed directly by it and also by its wholly owned subsidiary Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, through exchanges in 33 key cities. During 1936-37 season Paramount distributed 59 features, 18 more than it produced, and ordinarily distributes each season a substantial number of features produced by others for release by it.

24. In 1919 Paramount entered upon a program of theatre acquisition. In that year it acquired a stock interest in Southern Enterprises, Inc., which operated approximately 135 theatres in the South. In 1920 a stock interest was acquired in New England Theatres, Inc., which operated approximately 50 theatres in the New England states. About 1926, Paramount acquired a stock interest in the Butterfield Theatre Circuit, which operated approximately 70 theatres in Michigan. During the same year a stock interest was acquired in Balaban and Katz Corporation, which operated approximately 50 theatres in Illinois. Theatres were also subsequently acquired in the West and Middle West through the acquisition of various theatres and of stock interests in various corporations operating theatre circuits.

25. The number and location of theatres now operated by Paramount are approximately as follows:

26. The parent corporation, Paramount Pictures, Inc., has gross assets of approximately $90,000,000. Its consolidated gross income was in excess of $100,000,000 for the fiscal year ended in 1939.

B. Loew's [1]

27. In about the year 1905, the late Marcus Loew (who before his death in 1927, was president of Loew's Incorpo- [fol. 3150] rated), in association with others, began to operate some so-called "penny arcades" in New York City and one in Cincinnati. Shortly thereafter, certain of these penny arcades were remodeled so as to permit, in part of the premises, the exhibition of single reel motion pictures, for which an admission price of 5¢ was charged. In 1907 the enterprise acquired its first theatre. It was located in Brooklyn, New York, and was operated with vaudeville and single reel pictures.

28. The motion picture subjects were bought by Mr. Loew from various picture producers and exhibited in the Loew theatres; the custom was to buy one print of each subject. By the year 1910, Mr. Loew and his associates owned stock interests in a number of corporations operating store shows and theatres in New York and elsewhere, all of them showing vaudeville and short-subject pictures.

29. In 1910, Mr. Loew and his associates organized Loew's Consolidated Enterprises, which, in 1911, was succeeded by Loew's Theatrical Enterprises.

30. Between 1911 and 1919, Loew's Theatrical Enterprises, through subsidiary corporations, extended its activities in the operation of theatres devoted to motion pictures or a combination of vaudeville and motion pictures. Additional theatres were acquired in New York City and in certain cities other than New York. By 1919, Loew's Theatrical Enterprises had financial interests in approximately 56 theatres.

31. In October 1919, Loew's, Incorporated, was organized, and acquired all of the outstanding stock of Loew's Theatrical Enterprises. The extent of the theatre business of Loew's, Incorporated, has increased gradually since 1919.

32. The number and location of the theatres now operated by Loew's is approximately as follows:

[Fol. 3151] (a) Metropolitan First-run Theatres:

City	No. of Theatres
Atlanta, Ga.	1
Baltimore, Md.	1

33. In 1920, Loew's, Incorporated, entered the field of production and distribution of motion pictures by acquiring the outstanding stock of Metro Pictures Corporation. In 1924, Metro Pictures Corporation merged with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation under the name of Metro-Goldwyn-Pictures Corporation. The result of this merger was that Loew's, Incorporated, became the owner of all of the common stock of Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. At about the time of this merger, Louis B. Mayer Pictures, Inc., contracted to supervise the production of all pictures produced by the merged company, and turned over to Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corporation certain of the assets of Louis B. Mayer Pictures, Inc. The business of Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corporation was subsequently assumed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation. On December 31, 1937, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation ceased to do business and the production activities were taken over by Loew's, Incorporated.

[fol. 3152] 34. The following tabulation indicates the feature pictures produced by Loew's as compared with the total number of features produced, for the nine year period ending with the 1938-39 season:

Season	Features Produced in Industry	Features Produced by Loew's
1930-31	510	43
1931-32	490	40

1936-37	535	40
1937-38	450	41
1938-39	526	51

35. For the eight year period ending with the 1937-38 season, Loew's produced an average of 36 short subjects per year.

36. Loew's product is distributed through exchanges maintained by it in 31 key cities. During the 1936-37 season Loew's distributed 50 features, 10 more than it produced, and ordinarily distributes each season a substantial number of features produced by others for release by it.

37. The parent corporation, Loew's Incorporated, has gross assets of approximately $150,000,000. During the fiscal year ending in 1939, its gross income was in excess of $100,000,000.

C. Fox[1]

38. Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation was incorporated under the name of Fox Film Corporation on Feb-

1938-39	526	56

40. Movietonews, Inc., a wholly owned Fox subsidiary, for the eight year period ending 1937-38, produced an average of 20 shorts and 104 news reels per year.

41. Fox product is distributed directly by Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and Twentieth Century-Fox Distributing Corporation and Twentieth Century-Fox Corporation of Texas, wholly owned subsidiaries, through exchanges in 31 key cities. During the 1936-37 season Fox distributed 65 features, 13 more than it produced, and ordinarily distributes a substantial number of features produced by others for release by it.

42. In August 1925, Fox Film Corporation acquired approximately one-third of the common stock of West Coast Theatres, Inc., a company operating theatres in California and other western states; and, in March 1928, Fox Film Corporation purchased all the common stock of Wesco Corporation (now National Theatres Corporation), a holding company for theatre operating corporations.

43. In 1934, Wesco Corporation readjusted its capital structure by voluntary agreement among its creditors and stockholders, pursuant to which The Chase National Bank of the City of New York acquired 58% of the stock of Wesco Corporation and Fox Film Corporation retained 42%. At about the same time the Chase Bank acquired a substantial stock interest in Fox Film Corporation and still owns a substantial interest in Twentieth Century-Fox Film Cor- [fol. 3154] poration. The name of Wesco Corporation was thereafter changed to National Theatres Corporation and the Chase Bank still retains 58% of the stock of National Theatres Corporation. National Theatres Corporation operates theatres in the middle and far western parts of the United States through numerous subsidiary operating corporations.

44. In 1937, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation acquired all the common stock of Roxy Theatre, Inc., which owns the Roxy Theatre, a large first-run theatre in New York City.

45. The location and number of theatres now operated by Fox is approximately as follows:

(a) Metropolitan first-run theatres:

City	No. of Theatres
Denver, Colo.	4
Detroit, Mich.	1
Kansas City, Mo.	3
Los Angeles, Calif.	5

1936-37	535	58
1937-38	450	52
1938-39	526	54

50. During the eight year period ending 1937-38 Warner produced an average of 102 short subjects per year.

51. In 1925 Warner Pictures, Inc. acquired Vitagraph, Inc., which operated 34 exchanges in the principal cities of the United States and Canada, and two other affiliated companies which operated exchanges in foreign countries. Warner products distributed through Vitagraph, Inc. During the 1936-37 season Vitagraph distributed 60 features, 2 more than it produced, and ordinarily distributes some features each season produced by others for release by it.

[fol. 3156] 52. Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., entered the exhibition field in December 1924, when it acquired a theatre in Youngstown, Ohio. In 1925, it acquired 13 additional theatres in various parts of the United States. In December 1928, the corporation acquired a majority of the stock of Stanley Company of America, which operated, directly or through subsidiaries, 182 theatres and had partial stock interests in theatre companies that owned or leased 51 theatres. The theatres of the Stanley Company of America were located in the Middle Atlantic States and the District of Columbia.

53. Subsequently, the company acquired interests in theatres in Missouri, Pennsylvania, Maryland, New Jersey, Ohio, Connecticut, New York, Illinois, Wisconsin, Virginia, and Kentucky.

[fol. 3157] E. RKO [1]

56. Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation was incorporated under the laws of the State of Maryland on October 25, 1928. Since its incorporation it has been primarily a holding company for subsidiaries engaged in the production, distribution, and exhibition of motion pictures. Shortly after after its organization, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation secured control of its principal exhibition and production companies, Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation and FBO Production, Inc., respectively.

57. Organized on January 28, 1928, as a Delaware corporation, Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation acquired, in February of the same year, all of the outstanding stock of B. F. Keith Corporation and approximately 90% of the outstanding stock of Orpheum Circuit, Inc. Subsidiaries of B. F. Keith Corporation owned and operated in various cities in the eastern part of the United States a large number of theatres which, although originally devoted to the performance of vaudeville, were converted and used for the exhibition of motion pictures. Orpheum Circuit, Inc., directly or through subsidiaries, operated theatres throughout the Midwest and Western parts of the United States.

58. In addition to Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation and Orpheum Circuit, Inc., Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation obtained the controlling interest in numerous other companies engaged in the motion picture exhibition business, the most important being RKO Proctor Corporation and RKO Midwest Corporation. operated the Proctor circuit of theatres located in the New York metropolitan district and in up-state New York. RKO Midwest Corporation controlled a group of theatres in Ohio and Michigan.

59. The number and location of theatres now operated by RKO is approximately as follows:

62. In January 1931, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation took over, through subsidiaries, the news reel and other production business and facilities of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

63. For the eight-year period ending 1937-38 RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. produced an average of 33 short subjects per [fol. 3159] year and the Van Beuren Corporation, a wholly owned subsidiary, produced an average of 48 short subjects per year. During the same period Pathe News, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary, produced an average of 10 short subjects and 104 news reels per year.

64. RKO product is distributed by RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. through its exchanges located in 32 cities. During the 1936-37 season RKO distributed 47 features, 8 more than it produced, and ordinarily distributes a substantial number of features produced by others for release by it.

65. On January 27, 1933, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation went into an equity receivership and Irving Trust Company was appointed Receiver. On June 8, 1934, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation filed a petition for reorganization under Section 77B of the Bankruptcy Act in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Irving Trust Company was appointed Trustee in reorganization. A plan of reorganization was approved January 17, 1939, confirmed April 11, 1939, and such approval and confirmation were affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit on September 8, 1939.

66. The parent corporation has gross assets of approximately $70,000,000. During the fiscal year ended in 1939 its consolidated gross income was about $40,000,000.

F. Columbia [1]

67. Columbia Pictures Corporation was incorporated in the State of New York on January 10, 1924. Its organizers and, at that time, sole stockholders were Joe Brandt, Harry Cohn, and Jack Cohn. Commencing on February 4, 1925, with the acquisition of the assets of C.B.C. Film Sales Corporation, Columbia Pictures Corporation bought up exchanges throughout the country for the marketing of its product. By 1929, its distribution system was organized upon a national scale. In 1930, it secured exchanges for the foreign distribution of its film.

[fol. 3160] 68. During 1928, Columbia acquired, through merger, Screen Shapshots, Inc., Hall Room Boys Photoplays, Inc., Starland Revue, Inc., all producers of short subjects, and in 1931 secured 50% and, in 1937, the remaining 50% of the capital stock of Screen Gems, Inc., also a producer of short subjects.

69. The following chart shows the number of features produced by Columbia, as compared with the total number of features produced during the nine-year period ending with the 1938-39 season:

[1] The term "Columbia", as hereinafter used, includes all subsidiaries of the parent corporation, Columbia Pictures Corporation.

70. During the eight year period ending 1937-38, Columbia Pictures Corporation, produced an average of 39 short subjects and Screen Gems, Inc., produced an average of 22 short subjects per year.

71. Columbia product is distributed through its 32 exchanges located in key cities. During the 1936-37 season Columbia distributed 51 features, 13 more than it produced, and ordinarily distributes a substantial number of features produced by others for release by it.

72. The parent corporation has gross assets of approximately $15,000,000. During the fiscal year ended in 1939 its gross income was about $20,000,000.

G. Universal[1]

73. Universal Pictures Corporation, formerly Universal Film Manufacturing Company, was incorporated in New York, in 1912, and with its subsidiaries, engaged in the production and distribution of motion pictures in the United States and throughout the world.

[fol. 3161] 74. Universal Pictures Company, Inc., was formed on January 10, 1925, and at approximately the same time purchased the entire outstanding capital stock of Universal Pictures Corporation. From 1925 to 1936, Universal Pictures Corporation was the production branch of its parent company, Universal Pictures Company, Inc. During such period, motion pictures produced by Universal Pictures Corporation were distributed by Universal Film Exchanges, Inc. and the Big U Film Exchange, Inc.

75. In April 1936, Universal Corporation was organized for the chief purpose of acquiring the controlling stock interest of Carl Laemmle and his associates in Universal Pictures Company, Inc., a producer, and Big U Film Ex-Exchange, a distributor of motion pictures.

1937-38	450	45

77. For the eight year period ending with the 1937-38 season, Universal produced an average of 111 short subjects and 104 news reels per year. During the 1936-37 season, Universal distributed 40 features; no more than it produced, but it ordinarily distributes each season some features produced by others for release by it.

78. In January 1926 Universal Pictures Corporation and its president, Carl Laemmle, secured a substantial stock interest in Universal Chain Theatres Corporation, which, through subsidiaries and affiliated companies, operated a [fol. 3162] large number of theatres. In 1928, Universal Chain Theatres Corporation and its affiliates operated about 315 theatres in Canada, the District of Columbia, and 20 States of the United States, including the Griffith Amusement Company circuit of 40 theatres in Oklahoma and Texas, and the Schine chain of 90 theatres in New York and Ohio. A substantial number of its theatres were disposed of between 1929 and 1931. It went into receivership in 1933, and its remaining theatres were sold by the receiver.

79. The dissolution of Universal Pictures Corporation in December 1936, was accompanied by a transfer of its assets to Universal Pictures Company, Inc. Since January 1, 1937, Universal Pictures Company, Inc., has been engaged in the production of motion pictures which are distributed in the United States by Big U Film Exchange, Inc., and Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.

80. Universal Pictures Company, Inc., has gross assets of approximately $12,000,000. During the fiscal year ended in 1939, its gross income was about $20,000,000.

H. United Artists [1]

81. United Artists Corporation was organized in 1919, by a group of individuals who had achieved prominence in the production branch of the motion picture industry. The purpose of the corporation was to distribute the features produced by its organizers.

82. Most of the features distributed by United Artists Corporation have been first-class features, although as a general rule it does not release as many pictures per year as the other major companies.

83. The following tabulation indicates the number of United Artists releases as compared with the total number of features produced during the nine year period ending 1938-39:

[fol. 3163]

Season	Features Produced in Industry	Features Released by United Artists

1936-37	535	19
1937-38	450	16
1938-39	526	18

84. United Artists now distributes pictures for the following producers among others: Samuel Goldwyn, Charles Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Alexander Korda, and London Film Productions, Ltd., Selznick International, Edward Small, Sol Lesser, Hal Roach, David Loew, Ernest Lubitsch, Walter Wanger, and Richard Rowland.

85. United Artists maintains exchanges in 26 cities.

86. The corporation is owned by five stockholders, Charles Chaplin, Samuel Goldwyn, Mary Pickford, the Estate of Douglas Fairbanks and Alexander Korda. It issues no public statement of gross assets or business done but for the fiscal year ended in 1939 its gross income exceeded $10,000,000.

[1] The term "United Artists", as hereinafter used, refers to the defendant, United Artists Corporation.

I. Joint Theatre Interests

87. Each of the producer-exhibitor defendants is jointly interested financially in one or more theatres with one or more of the other producer-exhibitor defendants, through profit sharing arrangements with respect to particular theatres; through so-called pools where several theatres owned or controlled by two or more are operated as a unit; through direct or indirect ownership of stock in a single theatre operating corporation by two or more of such defendants; or through arrangements where one owns or leases a theatre and the other manages it. Such joint interests include all of the following combinations with respect to one or more theatres: Fox with Loew's, Fox with Paramount, Fox with RKO, Fox with Warner, Loew's with Paramount, Loew's with RKO, Loew's with Warner, Paramount with RKO, Paramount with Warner and RKO with Warner. [fol. 3164]. 88. There are about 200 theatres in the United States in which such joint interests are held, including a substantial number of metropolitan first-run theatres.

89. In addition to the foregoing joint theatre interests of the producer-exhibitor defendants with each other there are numerous other joint theatre interests where executive employees, or managing agents of one producer-exhibitor defendant have direct or indirect stock interests in a theatre operating corporation in which another producer-exhibitor defendant also owns a direct or indirect stock interest.

V. Competitive Conditions in the Motion Picture Industry

A. Limited Source of Supply of Features and Particularly First Class Features

90. In the early stages of motion picture production films possessed entertainment value for the public merely because of the novelty of watching figures and objects in motion projected on a screen. They were priced by the foot or by the reel without regard to their quality as dramatic productions. As the novelty wore off, it became increasingly necessary to produce films which had stories of dramatic interest, employed well-known acting talent and eliminated technical faults in photography and projection.

91. By 1908 there were ten well established companies in the United States which were either producing or importing motion picture films and selling them to independent exchanges scattered throughout the country, but operated on a local basis. From these exchanges films were distributed weekly to exhibitors for a rental based on footage, although some attempts had been made to produce and market individually features of distinctive quality. At that time there were between 125 and 150 exchanges and 6,000 exhibitors in the United States.

[fol. 3165] 92. In 1908, largely to escape the effects of a patent war conducted chiefly by the Edison companies, which held basic camera and projection equipment patents, the ten leading manufacturers decided to pool their interests and patents in the Motion Picture Patents Company. These companies were: Biograph, Kalem, and Pathe, in New York; Vitagraph in Brooklyn, Edison in New Jersey; Lubin in Philadelphia; and Essanay, Kleine, Meli and Selig in Chicago.

93. Each manufacturer took a license from the Patents Company entitling it to produce and lease motion pictures. By a system of licenses extending to distribution and exhibition, control of the entire industry was attempted. The licenses generally covered all branches of the industry, including cameras, film, and projectors.

94. The General Film Company was then organized to distribute the films of the ten producers on a national scale. Exchanges were either established by it or existing exchanges bought out. Other distributors had to secure the films of other producers in order to continue their business.

95. The Patents Company and the General Film Company were met by a militant group of producers, distributors, and exhibitors who operated without their licenses. And a number of law suits followed. Private suits for damages under the antitrust laws were instituted by them, and finally the Government instituted a suit in equity in 1912 which brought about the dissolution of the Motion Picture Patents Company by a decree dated January 24, 1916.

96. Meanwhile, the art of producing motion pictures had been going forward. The standardized film of one reel of 1,000 feet was rapidly displaced after 1912 by the feature picture of five reels or more. While the Motion Picture Patents Company adhered to the idea of short, standardized films of one reel and a daily change of program to be sold on a footage basis, others who had made a careful study [fol. 3166] of audience reaction were convinced that the time had arrived for further advances in production. Complete stories, plays, and books were translated into motion pictures. Among the early advocates of this change was Adolph Zukor, who formed the Famous Players Company in 1912, and produced "Queen Elizabeth," in which Sarah Bernhardt appeared, and soon "The Prisoner of Zenda," with James K. Hackett, a well-known actor, was produced.

97. From a position of comparative obscurity in 1912, Adolph Zukor and his Famous Players Company by 1916 had become the dominating influence in the industry. The feature pictures of this company were in demand the country over and were recognized generally as the best pictures on the market. A national distribution system had been secured through the acquisition of the control in that year of Paramount Pictures Corporation, which had been organized two years before by William W. Hodkinson, a San Francisco distributor.

98. The cost of making pictures had mounted abruptly, due principally to the rise in salaries of stars, directors, and technicians of all kinds. Then these costs were passed on to the distributors and exhibitors, who had largely remained independent of producers, great alarm was felt by the persons engaged in these two branches of the industry, and resulted, in 1917, in the organization of First National Exhibitors Circuit, an association of exhibitors, which, through production and distribution units financed by its membership under a system of franchises, sought to assure its membership of a constant, satisfactory supply of pictures.

99. Many of the theatres in the new association were and had been customers of Famous Players. Thus the market for the pictures of that company was being threatened, and soon stars, feature players, directors and other personnel, were leaving the employ of Famous Players-Lasky for that of First National Exhibitors Circuit.

[fol. 3167] 100. In 1919 Famous Players-Lasky Company began its acquisition of theatres as hereinbefore recited. By 1930, as hereinbefore recited, five of the major companies, Paramount, Loew's, Warner, Fox and RKO, had all developed nationwide businesses, in which production, distribution and exhibition were integrated. During the interim feature production costs had mounted steadily and the returns from their exhibition kept pace. This trend was accelerated in 1927 by the introduction of commercially profitable sound films which required costly equipment to produce, with the result that by 1930 the best features produced by each of these companies were costing as much as $500,000 or more each to produce.

101. By 1930 the eight defendant distributors were releasing substantially all of the features produced in the United States at a cost of more than $250,000 as they were the only ones which had the national distribution systems and established first-run outlets necessary to make the production of such features profitable. Since that date, they have continued to maintain complete control of the distribution of such features, although many of them have been produced by producers not employed by a major company but pursuant to arrangements made preceding the production of such films for release by a major distributor. Such arrangements generally included the use of equipment owned by, or production talent under contract to, one or more of the defendants. These arrangements have often included financing of the production directly by the major distributor involved or the borrowing of capital by the producer upon its showing that it has been assured of release through a major distributor. Ordinarily, no funds have been or are available for this type of production in the absence of such an assurance.

[fol. 3168] 102. As the equipment and technical and artistic talent necessary to produce profitable features became more costly, competition for the use of such talent became even more costly to producers; and since 1930 the major producers have preferred to loan and exchange the highest priced technical and artistic talent which they may have under exclusive contract to and with each other on standardized terms rather than drive the price of such talent higher by competing for the privilege of placing it under contract in the first instance.

103. The producer-exhibitor defendants have an additional inc tive to pool their production resources arising out of th act that each owns theatres which share the profits of s cessful features released by any of the others.

Ordinarily, the major producers make available to each other their stars, feature players, directors and other personnel and their sets, scenery, and other technical equipment necessary for the production of motion pictures while they do not readily make them available to independent producers. Even where such talent has been made available to independent producers, the terms have frequently been discriminatory as compared to the terms upon which it has been made available to major producers.

104. Since 1933 the number of instances in which stars, feature players, directors, writers, cameramen or other production talent under contract to a defendant has been loaned to another major producer as compared with loans to independent producers during the same period are approximately as follows:

	Number of Loans by Defendants
Defendant	To Major Producers	To Independent Producers
Loew's	610	56
Paramount	439	46
Warner	223	12
RKO	109	12
Fox	251	7
Columbia	175	36
Universal	198	11

[fol. 3169] 105. Fox, Loew's, Paramount, RKO and Warner have collectively received during the past five years approximately 70 per cent of the total film rentals received by all distributors of motion pictures from exhibition in the United States, and Columbia, United Artists and Universal received about 25 per cent of such total film rentals. Fox, Loew's, Paramount, RKO and Warner have during each of said years collectively released about 80 per cent of all first class features, and Columbia, United Artists and Universal have during each of said years released about 15 per cent of all first-class features. The first-class features represent those which have generally cost the most money to produce, have received the most intensive exploitation by distributors, have been successful in attracting patrons to theatres, and have yielded the largest gross box-office returns to exhibitors. No other distributor has released more than 1 per cent of such features during any of said years and in no year have all other distributors combined released more than 5 per cent of such features.

B. Block Booking and Blind Selling in Long Term Contracts

106. In the early stages of motion picture distribution, the uniform quality of films and dependence by exhibitors on their novelty, rather than quality, to attract audiences, was well adapted to the method of licensing still employed in the industry. Then as now films were licensed sight unseen in large groups for delivery at weekly intervals over a period of a year or more.

107. License contracts today ordinarily contain the terms on which a group of features are to be exhibited over a period of at least one year. With the exception of United Artists, which usually makes a separate contract for the films released by each of its producers, the distributors cover in one license contract all of the features released during the one-year period or a lesser number to be selected from all released, as and when released. The licenses are [fol. 3170] generally negotiated prior to the commencement of each motion picture season before any of the features covered have been released. The exhibitor has no knowledge of the quality or character of the features he licenses other than data concerning the stories, directors, stars, and featured players, supplied as to some pictures by some of the distributors in prospectuses of the coming season's production program and the exhibitor's past experiences with similar productions. Such production programs are always subject to change without notice to any exhibitor and his license contract offers no protection against loss which may result from the failure of the pictures produced to live up to the claims made for them as box-office attractions at the time they are sold.

108. The quality of feature pictures, as box-office attractions, varies widely even with respect to those released by the same company and they are accordingly priced in various brackets in the license agreement in accordance with anticipated quality. The feature released by any of the defendant distributors during any one season which is the most successful in attracting theatre audiences will ordinarily gross more than $1,000,000 in film rental and play in more than 10,000 theatres, in the United States, while the least successful feature will ordinarily gross less than $200,000 in film rental and play in less than 5,000 theatres, in the United States. The features assigned to the top price bracket in license agreements ordinarily have rental terms based upon a percentage of the box-office receipts, sometimes against a guaranteed figure, and those in the lowest price brackets are ordinarily licensed for a flat rental. The pictures in each bracket are usually untitled and unidentified.[1] The result is that most features are not definitely allocated to a price bracket until after their release and [fol. 3171] the question of proper allocation is a continuous source of dispute between exhibitors and distributors.

109. Each distributor defendant releases each year a certain number of features (generally those in the lowest price bracket) which most exhibitors do not wish to exhibit at all. Therefore, in negotiating licenses, the distributor attempts to secure a commitment by the exhibitor to play all of the features released by it during the one-year period with as small a cancellation or rejection privilege as possible and the exhibitor attempts to limit his commitment by either obtaining as wide a rejection or cancellation privilege as possible or sometimes by licensing a specific number of features, less than all released during such period. The extent to which the exhibitor is able to limit his commitments to those features which he thinks he can profitably exhibit depends upon the relative bargaining strength of the parties. In view of the limited supply of profitable features, a defendant distributor, in dealing with small independent exhibitors with limited buying power, is ordinarily able to compel the exhibitor to commit himself to play many features which he does not want and cannot profitably exhibit as a condition of licensing other features which he does want and can profitably exhibit. To the extent that such commitments are made, the market for films of other distributors which the exhibitor wants to play is correspondingly limited, and one result of the tying of unprofitable features to profitable features in the license contracts of the major distributors has been to prevent or discourage the entry into the market of independent producers and distributors. Another result of such block booking has been to encourage the production of features by the major companies which are not sufficiently attractive to be sold on their own merits but which may be successfully marketed by block booking them with other features of superior quality.

[fol. 3172] 110. While the restrictive effect of such block booking is substantially lessened in the case of United Artists by the employment of separate license agreements for each of its producers, most of which produce no more than four pictures a year, this defendant generally negotiates the licenses for all of its producers' pictures with the same exhibitor at the same time and sometimes conditions the sale of one producer's pictures upon the purchase by the exhibitor of the pictures of another producer which he does not desire to use.

111. In addition to the rental to be paid, the license contracts also ordinarily specify the run on which the features are available to the exhibitor, the clearance, if any, which his theatre shall have over competing theatres, and usually specify the minimum (adult and children, matinee and evening) admission prices to be charged by his theatre when exhibiting such features.

C. Run, Clearance, and Minimum Admission Prices

112. Although the entertainment value of the feature pictures released in the United States from week to week varies widely, theatre admission prices are generally uniform at a particular theatre regardless of the quality of the particular feature exhibited. Under the prevailing system of licensing features for a particular run for periods of a year or more with clearance at a specified minimum admission price, each theatre ordinarily plays all of the feature pictures it exhibits on the same run with the same clearance. All theatres which play features on the same run in the same competitive area ordinarily play them at the same admission price regardless of changing competitive conditions which might otherwise affect admission prices during the period of the license.

113. The incorporation of the foregoing provisions with respect to run, clearance and admission prices in annual licensing agreements and franchises, has tended to stabilize the playing positions and operating policies of particular theatres from year to year and the negotiation of license [fol. 3173] contracts with subsequent-run exhibitors is always subject to whatever rights have been established by license agreements with the prior-run exhibitors. Even where there are two or more theatres in a position to compete for the privilege of exhibiting the same features upon the same run, negotiations are seldom conducted simultaneously with the competing exhibitors for the licensing of pictures on such run. The distributor ordinarily negotiates the rental terms to be paid without any competitive bidding and only if an agreement is not reached with the exhibitor with whom negotiations for a certain run are started are negotiations undertaken with a competing exhibitor for that run.

114. In the very early years of the motion picture industry the age of films was not a significant factor. As films acquired plot content and as certain players became known to the motion picture public, however, it became important to exhibitors to show them as early as possible after release. Prior to the advent of the feature picture, films were licensed generally on the basis of age, with the license fee becoming smaller as the reel grew older. There was evolved during this period the concept of "run" which eventually displaced the earlier method of licensing pictures and instead of licensing pictures one week old, two weeks old, etc., exhibitors licensed product on first run in a given territory, on second run in said territory a specified period of time after first run, on third run in said territory a specified period of time after second run, etc. As the form of the motion picture developed from single reel to the feature picture and as certain players attained great popularity, motion picture theatres were able to command higher admission prices, and the operation of deluxe first-run theatres in large cities charging a high admission price became feasible and profitable. From about 1915 or 1916, when the first of these deluxe theatres, designed primarily [fol. 3174] for motion picture exhibition at advanced admission prices, were constructed, exhibitors operating such theatres sought to obtain and frequently did obtain long periods of protection over all other theatres in the city and surrounding territory where they were located.

115. From about 1915 to about 1931 it was frankly conceded by distributors and exhibitors generally that uniform runs and clearances were desirable, even though arrived at as the result of agreement between distributors, and many efforts were made to eliminate differences in the run and protection terms on which distributors dealt with theatres. During this period a number of contracts and franchise agreements provided in effect that the run and protection terms therein granted by a given distributor were to be the same as those granted to the theatre or theatres involved by other distributors.

116. In about 1930, after the producer-exhibitor defendants had substantially completed their theatre acquisition programs, they made a concerted effort to establish uniform zoning and protection plans throughout the United States through the Film Boards of Trade.[1] It was the purpose of those plans to establish in each exhibition territory a uniform plan of zoning and protection which would give a definite status to each theatre in the territory and which would prevent any distributor from dealing with such theatre with respect to run, zoning, or protection, on any terms other than those provided for in the plan. Such uniform zoning and protection plans, through agreements of the exhibitors and the distributors, were adopted for the 1930-31 season for the following cities: Charlotte, North Carolina; Detroit, Michigan; Los Angeles, California; [fol. 3175] Omaha, Nebraska; Salt Lake City, Utah; Denver, Colorado; Kansas City, Missouri; Milwaukee, Wisconsin; St. Louis, Missouri; San Francisco, California. There were also proposed and recommended by the local committees of the exhibitors and distributors and were awaiting acceptance by the home offices of the distributors in New York City, uniform zoning and protection plans for the 1930-31 season for the following cities: Albany, New York; Cincinnati, Ohio; New Orleans, Louisiana; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Buffalo, New York; Memphis, Tennessee; Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; and Washington, D. C. There were also under consideration for the 1930-31 season, by local committees, uniform zoning and protection plans for the following cities: Atlanta, Georgia; Chicago, Illinois; Des Moines, Iowa; Minneapolis, and St. Paul, Minnesota; New York, New York; Portland, Oregon; Boston, Massachusetts; Cleveland, Ohio; Indianapolis, Indiana; New Haven, Connecticut; Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; and Seattle, Washington.

117. In 1932 the United States District Court for the District of Nebraska [1] held that the Uniform Zoning and Protection Plan for the Omaha Distribution Territory was an agreement between distributors which restrained trade in violation of the Sherman Act. After the illegality of these uniform zoning and protection plans became apparent in 1932, the distributors, refrained from employing any express agreements with each other with respect to uniform protection and zoning.

118. Another concerted effort was made to establish uniform zoning and protection plans under the code of the motion picture industry adopted pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act in December 1933. From that time until May 1935, when that Act was invalidated by the Supreme Court, efforts were made by local clearance and zoning committees throughout the country to establish uni- [fol. 3176] form clearance and zoning plans. (It was at about this time that the term "clearance" was substituted in the industry for the term "protection" which had been used prior thereto.) Such a plan was actually arrived at in Los Angeles, California, and a modification of that plan is still in effect in that territory. Although such plans were under consideration in numerous other territories, the invalidation of the National Industrial Recovery Act prevented those plans from going into effect. Since May 1935, the industry has made no open effort to establish uniform clearance and zoning by express agreements between distributors.

119. Notwithstanding the disavowal by distributors of agreements between themselves with respect to uniform clearance and zoning schedules, such schedules are actually in effect in every exhibition territory in the United States. Many of these schedules were arrived at by agreement before 1932 and have been carried forward since that time as a matter of tacit understanding and custom. Other uniform clearance and zoning schedules have developed as a result of pressure uniformly exerted by the dominant exhibitor in a zone upon all of the distributors. The dominant circuits in every exhibition area, whether they be affiliated or unaffiliated, in purchasing product generally request and secure the same runs and the same protections from all distributors with whom they deal and such terms are incorporated in express agreements with each such distributor. The result is a uniform system or plan of clearance which is embodied in a series of similar clearance schedules agreed to by the dominant exhibitors with each distributor rather than a single schedule.

120. Each distributor knows the run and clearance [fol. 3177] granted by every other distributor licensing the same theatres and knows that the effect of such uniformity is to freeze the playing positions and admission prices of all theatres in an area where such uniform schedules prevail.

D. Long Term Franchises

121. Generally, distributors enter into license agreements with exhibitors every season and most license agreements cover only a single season's output of pictures. In their dealings with circuits, however, both affiliated and unaffiliated, the distributors engage in the practice of entering into long-term franchises. These franchises are for periods varying from two years to twenty years, and they cover the exhibition of pictures released by a distributor during their term in the theatres of the circuits with which they are made. The amount of film rentals involved in a single franchise has sometimes exceeded two million dollars and a single franchise has sometimes covered the terms of exhibition in more than five hundred theatres in widely separated localities.

122. Long-term franchises are generally advantageous to the circuits with which they are made. By virtue of the fact that the circuits have large buying power and pay to the distributors large sums of money, these franchises often discriminate against independent theatres whose buying power is small. These franchises generally give to the circuit theatres a selective choice of pictures and, regardless of changes in circumstances that may take place during the term of such a franchise, the circuit is permitted to tie up all the pictures or a substantial portion of the pictures released by the distributor while it is obligated to take only a selection of said pictures. By establishing the runs and protections with respect to all the theatres in the circuit, these franchises deny to other theatres, during their term, the opportunity to bid for or to license the runs of pictures covered by such a franchise in competition with the circuit [fol. 3178] theatres. Another effect of these long-term franchises is that they restrict the market for films independently produced and released. Many of these franchises do not contain all the terms and conditions pursuant to which pictures are licensed, but are simply agreements to enter into binding licenses at some future time.

123. Franchises generally provide for the exhibition of pictures in all of the theatres operated by the circuit involved, and some of them have even provided that additional theatres acquired by the circuit during the term of the franchise are to be included within its terms. Some of these franchises also provide that where a circuit has not exhibited all the pictures licensed in certain theatres, it may make up for this deficiency by exhibiting in other theatres more pictures than have been licensed for exhibition in such theatres. This practice is known as overage and underage. These franchises also confer advantages upon certain theatres by providing for reductions in film rentals where vaudeville performances are given and where double feature programs are used and also by providing that in certain situations advertising costs are to be paid by the distributor or shared between the distributor and the exhibitor. Rental terms in such franchises are frequently calculated in accordance with formulae which are based upon the net profits to the exhibitor, rather than gross receipts, from the exhibition of the feature picture involved and are in effect profit sharing agreements.

E. Circuit Discrimination

124. In licensing films to an exhibitor who owns or controls a number of theatres, such as a large circuit, the terms with respect to all of the circuit theatres are generally negotiated at the same time regardless of how many theatres there are in the circuit or where they are located. The exhibitor in negotiating such terms attempts to secure the [fol. 3179] most favorable terms for all of his theatres and in so doing frequently conditions the granting of certain terms in one theatre situation which he controls upon the granting of certain terms in another unrelated theatre situation which he also controls. In negotiating terms for such a circuit, the distributor sometimes conditions the use of its films in certain competitive situations where the circuit needs the distributor's films upon the acceptance by the circuit of films which the circuit does not need in other competitive situations. The result is that an independent exhibitor, operating a single theatre in competition with a circuit is unable to compete for the privilege of licensing the distributor's films on the basis of what his theatre can offer as against the circuit theatre in immediate competition with him, but is frequently excluded from any consideration as a prior-run outlet for the distributor's films because of competitive conditions existing in an entirely different exhibition situation, over which the independent exhibitor has no control.

125. In licensing films to an affiliated circuit, the same procedure is followed as with respect to any other circuit except that the factor of affiliation introduces into the negotiations an inducement to discriminate in favor of affiliated theatres at the expense of unaffiliated theatres. A producer-exhibitor defendant, in negotiating for the licensing of films released by it for exhibition in theatres owned and controlled by another producer-exhibitor defendant, must take into consideration the terms demanded by the other producer-exhibitor in licensing its films for exhibition in theatres owned or controlled by such first producer-exhibitor. The granting of certain terms and privileges with respect to the exhibition of one producer-exhibitor defendant's films in another producer-exhibitor defendant's circuit is necessarily conditioned upon the granting of similar terms and [fol. 3180] privileges by the latter with respect to the exhibition of its films in the circuit of the former.

F. Control Over Exhibition Exercised by First-Run Exhibitors

126. A number of prints of each feature, depending on the number of theatres to be served, are delivered to each exchange prior to national release date and delivered by the exchange to the various theatres which have licensed the film in accordance with the priority established by their contracts and returned to the exchange after each use. The picture is privately screened on or shortly after arrival for the benefit of the trade and particularly the exhibitors which hold first-run contracts. The contracts held by such exhibitors generally give them wide selective privileges which enable them to reject a substantial number of the features covered by their contracts after the picture has been screened for them. If the theatre is accepted for first-run exhibition, it is exhibited in a first-run theatre and subsequently in the remaining theatres in accordance with their respective playing positions, established by the run designated in their respective license contracts. If it is rejected it is offered for license to other exhibitors operating first-run theatres or successively offered for license to exhibitors operating subsequent-run theatres in the order of the runs on which they play. As the first-run exhibitor not only has the opportunity to screen the picture but also frequently obtains reports on the box-office performances of the picture in key cities before making his selection, the pictures rejected are almost invariably inferior as box-office attractions to those selected.

127. Exhibitors holding first-run license contracts for the pictures released by one or more of the defendant distributors ordinarily charge the highest admission prices in the towns or cities where such first-run theatres are located as [fol. 3181] their programs consist of selected features comprising the highest quality of available motion picture entertainment.

128. The first-run exhibitor is also usually required to charge the highest admission price as a condition of securing a given clearance over subsequent-run theatres. Subsequent-run theatres could not normally play a picture so profitably at the same admission price as the first-run in view of the fact that they must play it at a substantially later date after the capacity of the picture to attract an audience from the particular clearance zone has been partially exhausted by the first run. The same considerations generally compel a difference in admission prices corresponding to a difference in run and clearance for the same picture in all subsequent-run theatres. The result is that the entire admission price, run and clearance structure of the theatres in a given town or city is subject to run and clearance terms fixed in license agreements between the major distributors and first-run exhibitors, and the availability to subsequent-run exhibitors of the most profitable features is determined by the manner in which the first-run exhibitor exercises his selective privilege. In recognition of this fact the producer-exhibitor defendants have uniformly refrained from operating subsequent-run theatres in towns or cities where they do not operate first-run theatres.

G. Local Exhibition Monopolies

129. In the course of integrating the production and exhibition branches of the industry as heretofore recited, the producer-exhibitor defendants have acquired control of a substantial number of local exhibition monopolies. In many instances they acquired circuits of theatres which had already established such a monopoly prior to affiliation and have maintained such monopolies. In either case these monopolies consist of receiving a substantial majority of [fol. 3282] the total theatre admission revenue in large communities, generally cities of more than one hundred thousand population, and paying a substantial majority of the total film rentals received by distributors from all theatres located in such a community. In such communities competing unaffiliated exhibitors operate only at the sufferance of the producer-exhibitor defendants and they can offer no substantial competition to affiliated exhibitors either with respect to the terms on which films are licensed or the terms on which they are exhibited to the public.

130. Such monopolies have been established and maintained by acquiring control of the first-run theatres or the theatres operating on the first and other early runs. By control of first-run theatres alone, affiliated exhibitors have been able to secure as much as two-thirds of the total theatre admissions paid in cities as large as 250,000. This result is accomplished in part, by maintaining a long clearance and substantial admission price differential between the first and subsequent runs. In larger cities, affiliated exhibitors have found it necessary to control the theatres operating in the first two or three runs in order to secure a similar proportion of the total available film revenue, but, in either case, clearance and runs have been so adjusted that few unaffiliated theatres, if any, have an opportunity to play a first-class picture until all or nearly all of the affiliated theatres have exhibited it. A similar pattern occurs with respect to affiliated exhibitor control over first and subsequent-run theatres and the distribution of total film revenue in a substantial majority of the cities of the United States with a population of 100,000 or more. In acquiring such film revenue monopolies the defendants have not generally found it necessary to acquire control of all the theatres most suitable for first and early run exhibition in such cities. By this control of the licensing of all first class features they have been able to exclude such theatres from first or early run operation while in unaffiliated hands.

[fol. 3183] 131. More than 80% of all the metropolitan first-run theatres [1] are affiliated theatres. More than 95% of the features exhibited in metropolitan first-run theatres are released by the distributor defendants. In the following metropolitan cities all of the first-run theatres are affiliated theatres:

Boston, Mass.; New Haven, Conn.; Albany, N. Y.; Brooklyn, N. Y.; Newark, N. J.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Washington, D. C.; Charlotte, N. C.; Memphis, Tenn.; New Orleans, La.; Houston, Texas; Dallas, Texas; Oklahoma City, Okla.; Kansas City, Mo.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Cleveland, Ohio; Chicago, Ill.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Des Moines, Iowa; Minneapolis, Minn.; St. Paul, Minn.; Omaha, Nebr.; Salt Lake City, Utah.

132. In only 4 [2] of the 92 cities of the United States with populations of 100,000 and over are there no affiliated theatres. In 73 of the remaining 88, the producer-exhibitors operate enough first-run theatres in each to receive a substantial majority of the total theatre admissions paid in each of these cities. The five producer-exhibitors also own or operate one or more theatres in 200 of the 283 cities of population between 25,000 and 100,000.

VI. Interstate Commerce

133. The business of producing motion pictures embraces the photographing of scenes on reels of celluloid film, said scenes having been prepared in advance by the assemblage,

---

[1] For definition of a metropolitan theatre see Paragraph 17(d).

[2] Tulsa, Oklahoma; Fall River, Massachusetts; Tacoma, Washington; and Fort Wayne, Indiana.

[fol. 3184] at the studios, or upon location, of the necessary directors, actors, actresses, extra players, and other persons and facilities necesary to complete the scenes to be photographed. The personnel necessary to the production of a motion picture is usually assembled at the studios in California, where most of the pictures are made, and costumes and raw materials entering into the making of pictures, in many instances, are manufactured outside the State of California and shipped across state lines to the studios for use in production.

134. Approximately two billion feet of negative stock celluloid film are used in the production of motion pictures annually, practically all of which is manufactured at plants located in the states of New York and New Jersey. Approximately 90% of the raw negative stock is shipped across state lines to the studios in California to be utilized in the production of motion pictures.

135. After the scenes going to make up a motion picture have been photographed, the film is developed, cut, fixed, edited and arranged at the studios in California. Then the negatives are shipped to laboratories located principally in California, New York and New Jersey, where the required number of positive prints are made (usually between 50 and 250) to fulfill the contractual requirements for the picture in question. The positive prints so prepared are the motion picture films which are protected in motion picture theatres, in most instances, after having been shipped across state lines to the film exchanges maintained in the various exchange cities throughout the country.

136. In the spring of each year, producers of motion pictures announce their prospective programs for the coming exhibition season. These programs describe the pictures to be produced, so far as known, giving their titles, the names of the stars and other featured players, the directors, and such other pertinent material as may be avail- [fol. 3185] able. Plans are then made for the production and release of the photoplays upon the program, at approximately regular intervals throughout the exhibition season, which begins on September 1 of each year.

137. When programs have been arranged and fixed, the distributors, through their salesmen, who work out of the exchanges, solicit exhibitors to enter into license agreements covering exhibition of photoplays for the coming season. Each photoplay is copyrighted under the Copyright Laws of the United States, and the solicited license agreements as signed by exhibitors are, by the terms thereof, usually transmitted to the principal office of the distributor, usually in New York, where such agreements are either approved or rejected.

138. The positive prints, when prepared at the laboratories, are packed in tin boxes which, in turn, are placed in wooden cases, and said positive films as completed, are from time to time shipped and transported from the laboratories where completed, across state lines to the various film exchanges throughout the country where they are utilized.

139. Upon receipt of the motion picture films by an exchange, they are delivered to the various exhibitors in the exchange territory, who, under their license agreements with distributors, have the first or prior right to exhibit the respective films, and are then returned to the exchange and transported to the exhibitors having the next succeeding right to exhibit, and so on until all exhibitors who are to exhibit the photoplays have been served, or transported directly from the prior-run theatre to a subsequent-run theatre. Many shipments of films from exchange to exhibitor, and from exhibitor to exchange, cross state lines. When the films are worn out, they are shipped or returned to laboratories for scrapping; which shipments, as a rule, cross state lines, the final destination usually being New York City.

140. Thus, in the course of producing, distributing and exhibiting motion pictures there is a constant, continuous stream of trade and commerce between the states, in and between the territories and the states of the United States, [fol. 3186] consisting of the solicitation and the making of contracts for the future delivery over periods of time of films to be produced and delivered as hereinbefore described; the assemblage of personnel, property and material at the studios or upon location for the production of pictures; the transportation of negative films from the studios to the laboratories where positive prints of motion picture films are prepared, and from there shipped to film exchanges throughout the United States; the continuous distribution of said films from the exchanges to and from motion picture theatres located in the areas served by the respective exchanges; the interchange of said films between each exchange and other exchanges of the same distributor located in other states of the United States or in the territories thereof and, finally, the shipment of said films from said exchanges throughout the United States to points within the State of New York or elsewhere for scrapping.

141. The activities of each branch of the motion picture industry are either in or directly affect trade and commerce among the several states.

[fol. 3187] VII. Offenses Charged

A

Conspiracies To Unreasonably Restrain and Monopolize the Production, Distribution and Exhibition of Motion Pictures Participated in By All of the Distributor Defendants

142. All of the distributor defendants, each well knowing all the matters and things hereinbefore alleged, for many years last past, have combined and conspired with each other to unreasonably restrain, and pursuant to said combinations and conspiracies have in fact unreasonably restrained, trade and commerce in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures in the United States, and have attempted to and have succeeded in monopolizing such trade and commerce in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Act of Congress, approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies," commonly known and hereinafter referred to as the "Sherman Act," in the following manner:

143. By concertedly aiding and assisting in the loaning and exchanging of production personnel under contract to each major producer, and costly production equipment owned by each major producer, to and with other major producers on uniform, non-competitive terms.

144. By concertedly aiding and assisting the major producers to exclude independent producers from access to production personnel under contract to each major producer, and costly production equipment owned by each major producer, on the same terms on which they are made available to major producers.

145. By concertedly fixing license terms in contracts made before the licensees have had a fair opportunity to estimate the value and character of the films licensed and before such films have been completed or trade shown.

[fol. 3188] 146. By concertedly fixing the run, clearance and minimum admission price terms on which an exhibitor may play features in license agreements covering periods of a year or more.

147. By concertedly conditioning the licensing of one film or group of films upon the licensing of another film or group of films.

148. By concertedly conditioning the licensing of films in one theatre or group of theatres upon the licensing of films in another theatre or group of theatres, which has no relationship to the first theatre or group of theatres other than common ownership or control or a common film buying agent.

149. By concertedly discriminating with respect to the license terms granted to theatres in large circuits because such theatres are a part of a circuit. The means of such discrimination most frequently employed with respect to such theatres are the following:

(a) Run

In areas where such theatres compete with independent theatres, the defendant distributors have offered to license feature pictures distributed by them to said theatres on a run ahead of said independent theatres, and only if said circuit theatres decline to license said product on said prior run is that run offered to competing independent exhibitors. Said priority of run has ordinarily been continued from season to season, that is to say, the said defendants reserve a prior run for circuit theatres, and refuse to license feature pictures distributed by them on said prior run to independent exhibitors, even though said independent exhibitors request the prior run from one or more of the defendants before said defendants have agreed in writing to license their feature pictures for an approaching motion picture season on said prior run to competing circuit theatres. Feature pictures distributed by the defendants have been licensed to circuit theatres on prior runs, although competing independent theatres, by virtue of their location, seating capacity, equipment, appearance, and the amount of other [fol. 3189] product they already have under contract, are as suitable or more suifable than competing circuit theatres to exhibit the feature pictures requested on a prior run, and although they may offer and be in a position to pay a higher film rental for a feature pictures than the competing circuit theatres. As a result, independent exhibitors operating in competition with circuit theatres have been and are systematically excluded from the opportunity to procure preferred runs of feature pictures distributed by the defendants in the localities in which circuit theatres operate. In many instances the defendant distributors have refused to license an independent exhibitor on any run at all in order to protect a circuit theatre from competition, regardless of how much clearance in favor of the circuit theatre the independent exhibitor is willing to submit to and regardless of what admission price he will charge or what rental he will pay.

(b) Delivering prints

In delivering prints for exhibition by independent exhibitors competing on the same run in the same exchange territory with such circuit theatre, the distributor defendants ordinarily serve the circuit theatre first if there is an insufficient number of prints available in the exchange to serve all theatres operating on the same run simultaneously, and thus give circuit theatres prior playing dates not provided for in their exhibition contracts.

(c) Clearance

The defendant distributors have granted such circuit theatres arbitrary and unreasonable clearance over competing independent theatres. In ...ny instance such defendants have granted clearance to circuit theatres which serves no legitimate interest of the distributor. Such clearance is granted by the defendants solely at the insistence of said circuit theatres and for the purpose of aiding said circuit theatres to sup- [fol. 3190] press the competition offered by independent theatres rather than to secure the most revenue for the distributor. As a result, independent theatres, in many instances, are unable to exhibit feature pictures until their novelty and freshness have worn off and their box office value has been seriously diminished, solely because earlier exhibition in the independent theatres would decrease the profits of a circuit exhibitor.

(d) Minimum admission prices

In many instances each distributor defendant has agreed with such circuit theatres to require independent theatres exhibiting their feature pictures on a run subsequent to that of the circuit theatre, to charge a minimum admission price for such exhibition so high that such subsequent run independent theatres cannot operate successfully.

(e) Prohibition of double features on subsequent runs

In many instances each defendant distributor has agreed with such circuit theatres to prevent independent theatres exhibiting their feature pictures on a run subsequent to that at a circuit theatre from exhibiting, as part of a double feature program, feature pictures which have been exhibited at the circuit theatre.

(f) Selectivity of deals

In contracting with such a circuit of theatres, each defendant distributor ordinarily gives it the right to select a certain number of the feature pictures released by it each season for exhibition at the circuit's theatres. In contracting with independent theatres, however, each such defendant has ordinarily refused to license any of its product unless the independent exhibitor contract for all of the feature pictures released by it. Or, in the event that independent exhibitors are granted selective privileges in licensing pictures, the selection granted to them has ordinarily not been as great as that granted to competing circuit theatres.

[fol. 3191] (g) Designation of play dates

In many instances each distributor defendant, in licensing feature pictures to independent exhibitors, requires that certain pictures be exhibited upon designated days or reserves the privilege of designating the days on which a certain number of the feature pictures licensed should be exhibited. Ordinarily, each such defendant designates that such feature pictures be played on the most desirable days in the week from the standpoint of attracting patronage, that is, Saturdays, Sundays or holidays, and ordinarily the feature pictures which are designated to be played on such preferred days are ones which the exhibitor has licensed on percentage terms. The independent exhibitor is forced to accept such designation of play dates in order to obtain the product necessary for the operation of his theatre. Although each distributor may require such circuit theatres to play certain pictures on designated days, the number of pictures designated by each distributor to be so played by circuit theatres is usually not as great as the number designated to be so played by independent exhibitors.

(h) Forcing of short subjects, news reels, trailers, serials, reissues, westerns and foreigns

In many instances each defendant distributor has refused to license its feature pictures to independent exhibitors unless they also agree to license and pay for the short subjects, news reels, trailers, serials, reissues, westerns and foreigns released by that defendant, even though the independent exhibitor does not wish to license such additional films and has no need for them. This practice is usually not enforced against such circuit theatres.

(i) Film rentals

In many instances, each distributor defendant has required independent theatres to pay higher film rentals for the exhibition of feature pictures on a given run than it requires of such circuit theatres, and in many [fol. 3192] instances independent exhibitors are required to pay as much or more for the exhibition of feature pictures on a subsequent run as circuit theatres pay for the exhibition of the same feature pictures on a prior run. Moreover, independent exhibitors are required to play a greater number of pictures on percentage terms than are such circuit theatres and the latter theatres are permitted to pay flat rentals for many pictures played by independent exhibitors on a percentage basis. Independent exhibitors are also required to play more percentage pictures with a minimum guaranteed film rental than are such circuit theatres.

(j) Advertising allowances

In many instances each distributor defendant, in licensing feature pictures to such a circuit of theatres, agrees to pay the cost of advertising such pictures or share it with the circuit. The defendants seldom, if ever, agree with independent exhibitors to pay for or share advertising costs.

(k) Score charges

Independent exhibitors are required by each defendant distributor to pay score charges * on practically every picture which they exhibit, while such circuit theatres seldom, if ever, are required to pay score charges on more than half of the pictures which they play.

(l) Optional contracts

In many instances each defendant distributor gives such circuit theatres the privilege or option of playing certain specified features without assuming any binding obligation to do so. This is in reality a selective [fol. 3193] contract which gives such circuit theatres wide choice in regard to the pictures which they exhibit. Such benefits are seldom, if ever, extended to independent exhibitors.

* Originally, sound came from a disc or record, the playing of which was synchronized with the picture. A charge was made for the use of the disc, which came to be called a "score charge." As sound developed, the sound track was superimposed on the film and the disc was discarded. Nevertheless, distributors continued to require the payment of score charges which in reality amount to additional film rental.

(m) Contract modifications

In many instances each defendant distributor permits material changes and alterations in its contracts with such circuit theatres. Seldom, if ever, are such modifications made by the defendant distributors in their contracts with independent exhibitors, and in the cases where they are made, the modifications are much more limited than when the contract is with such a circuit of theatres. Among the types of modifications made in contracts with such circuit theatres are the following:

1. Reduction of film rentals where box-office receipts upon the exhibition of pictures covered by the contract have been disappointing.

2. Reduction in film rentals where pictures covered by the contract are double-featured.

3. Reduction in film rentals where pictures covered by the contract are shown with vaudeville.

4. Reduction in film rentals where pictures covered by the contract are shown in connection with a premium give-away, by which attendance at the theatre is encouraged.

5. Changing pictures covered by a contract specifying percentage of box-office revenue as rental, to a flat rental, so-called, which means a fixed rental designated in terms of dollars and cents.

6. Elimination of pictures covered by contracts by repeating or extending the playing time of other pictures covered by the same contracts.

[fol. 3194] 7. Transfer of pictures under contract for exhibition at one circuit theatre to another theatre operated by the same circuit.

8. Cancellation of some of the pictures covered by a contract when other pictures are more successful at the box office than the distributor and circuit theatre have anticipated.

(n) Overage and underage

In many instances each defendant distributor permits such a circuit of theatres to play fewer pictures in one of its theatres than the contract requires, and to charge the deficit thus created against pictures played in another one of its theatres in excess of the commitment of such theatre. This privilege is seldom, if ever, extended to independent exhibitors.

(o) Move-overs

In many instances such a circuit of theatres is permitted by each of the defendant distributors to move a picture from one of its theatres where its exhibition has been completed to another theatre operated by the same circuit for a continued run or exhibition. This practice, which is generally confined to metropolitan areas, reduces the box-office value of a picture when it reaches subsequent-run exhibitors. This privilege is seldom, if ever, extended to independent exhibitors.

(p) Overbuying

In many instances such a circuit of theatres is knowingly permitted by the defendants to contract for the exhibition in certain theatres operated by it of more films than such theatres can profitably exhibit for the purpose of withholding such films from competing [fol. 3195] independent exhibitors who need them in order to operate their theatres. Many pictures so licensed by such circuit theatres are never exhibited by them because of their lack of screentime to play them, and yet they are released to competing independent exhibitors, if at all, only after the elapse of such a length of time after their release that their exhibition value has been substantially diminished. In other cases, the circuit theatres actually exhibit all of the pictures licensed by them by following a policy of making a greater number of weekly program changes than are necessary to meet the entertainment requirements of their patrons.

[fol. 3196] B

Conspiracies To Unreasonably Restrain and Monopolize the Exhibition of Motion Pictures Participated In By the Producer-Exhibitor Defendants

150. All of the producer-exhibitor defendants, each well knowing all of the matters and things hereinbefore alleged, for many years last past, have combined and conspired with each other to unreasonably restrain and monopolize and pursuant to said combinations and conspiracies have in fact unreasonably restrained and monopolized, trade and commerce in the exhibition of motion pictures in the United States, in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, in the following manner:

151. By concertedly conditioning the licensing of films distributed by one producer-exhibitor defendant in theatres operated by another such defendant upon the licensing of film distributed by the latter defendant in the theatres operated by the former defendant.

152. By concertedly excluding independently produced films from affiliated theatres.

153. By concertedly excluding unaffiliated exhibitors from the operation of competing first-run theatres in cities and towns where affiliated theatres are located.

154. By concertedly excluding unaffiliated exhibitors from operating competing theatres on the same run as the subsequent-run affiliated theatres in the cities and towns where such affiliated theatres are located.

155. By concertedly using the first and early-run affiiated theatres to control the film supply, run, clearance and admission prices of operators of competing unaffiliated theatres in the cities and towns in which affiliated theatres are located.

156. By concertedly coercing and intimidating unaffiliated exhibitors located in towns where there are no affiliated theatres to license their films upon arbitrary terms by expressed or implied threats to build or acquire a competing [fol. 3197] theatre and use it to destroy the business of the unaffiliated exhibitor.

157. By concertedly coercing and intimidating exhibitors located in towns where affiliated theatres are located or where an affiliated exhibitor desires to locate into relinquishing control of his theatre or a share of the profits thereof to the affiliated exhibitor by expressed or implied threats to deprive him of access to films necessary to the successful operation of his theatre or to so limit the terms and conditions on which he licenses such films that they may no longer be profitably exhibited by him.

158. By pooling or otherwise sharing with each other the profits of affiliated theatres owned or controlled by two or more producer-exhibitor defendants, located in the same competitive area and frequently operating on the same run, which would operate in competition with each other except for such pooling or profit sharing agreements.

159. By agreeing to divide the available films among affiliated theatres owned or controlled by two or more producer-exhibitor defendants located in the same competitive area, without competitive negotiations, in situations where such theatres would otherwise compete with each other for such films.

160. By entering into joint arrangements with respect to a single theatre, whereby the film buying control or proceeds from operation thereof is divided between two or more producer-exhibitor defendants.

161. By concertedly refraining from building, buying or offering to lease theatres in areas where they might compete with existing affiliated theatres, except under agreements preventing competition such as those noted in paragraphs 158, 159, and 160 above.

162. By concertedly effecting a division of the territory of the entire United States between them for theatre operating purposes.

163. By concertedly acquiring and maintaining a monop- [fol. 3198] oly of the business of exhibiting motion pictures in approximately 80% of the cities of the United States with populations of more than 100,000.*

164. By concertedly acquiring and maintaining a monopoly of the business of exhibiting motion pictures in all of the cities of the United States with populations of more than 1,000,000.*

* All population figures are taken from 1940 census.

165. By concertedly acquiring and maintaining a monopoly of the business of exhibiting motion pictures in each of the following cities of the United States with populations of more than 100,000* for theatres affiliated with the producer-exhibitor defendants respectively named thereafter.

C

Conspiracies to Unreasonably Restrain and Monopolize the Production of Motion Pictures Participated in by the Producer Defendants

166. All of the producer defendants, each well knowing all of the matters and things hereinbefore alleged, for many years last past, have combined and conspired with each other to unreasonably restrain and monopolize and pursuant to said combinations and conspiracies have in fact unreasonably restrained, trade and commeree in the production of motion pictures in the United States, and have attempted to and have succeeded in monopolizing such trade and commerce in violation of Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, in the following manner:

167. By concertedly placing under contract most of the valuable stars, featured players, directors, technicians and others who have gained fame, prestige, renown, artistic, technical or other great value in the production branch of the industry.

168. By concertedly loaning and exchanging production personnel under contract to each major producer, and costly production equipment owned by each major producer, to and with other major producers on uniform, non-competitive terms.

169. By concertedly excluding independent producers from access to production personnel under contract to each major producer, and costly production equipment owned by each major producer, on the same terms on which they are made available to major producers.

D

Combinations of Which Each Producer-Exhibitor Defendant is a Member Which are Illegal Per Se

170. Each of the combinations of parent and subsidiary corporations which respectively form Fox, Loew's, Paramount, RKO and Warner constitutes a separate combination and monopoly in restraint of trade, which in and of [fol. 3201] itself has violated Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act in the following manner:

171. By preventing independent producers from competing with such a combination in the production of films.

172. By preventing independent distributors from competing with such a combination in the distribution of films.

173. By preventing unaffiliated exhibitors from competing with such a combination in the operation of theatres in cities and towns where theatres operated by it are located.

174. By acquiring and maintaining a monopoly of the business of exhibiting motion pictures in areas serving a substantial percentage of the total population of the United States.

175. By coercing and intimidating unaffiliated exhibitors located in towns where such a combination operates no theatres to license its films upon arbitrary terms by expressed or implied threats to build or acquire a competing theatre and use it to destroy the business of such unaffiliated exhibitors.

176. By coercing and intimidating unaffiliated exhibitors located in towns where such a combination operates theatres or where it desires to operate theatres, into relinquishing control of their theatres or a share of the profits thereof, to it, by expressed or implied threats to deprive them of access to its films or to so limit the terms and conditions on which they license such films that they may no longer be profitably exhibited by them.

177. By conditioning the licensing of films distributed by such a combination in theatres operated by another such combination, upon the licensing of films distributed by the latter combination in theatres operated by the former combination.

[fol. 3202]

Illegal Contracts Between Each Distributor Defendant and Circuit Theatres

178. Each defendant distributor, well knowing all the matters and things hereinbefore alleged, for many years last past, has contracted with various theatre circuits throughout the United States, including the affiliated circuits hereinbefore mentioned, to restrain and, pursuant to such contracts, has in fact unreasonably restrained trade and commerce in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures among the several States of the United States, in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, by entering into licensing agreements with said circuits of theatres which contain provisions calculated to impose on independent exhibitors in competition with such circuit theatres, one or more of the discriminatory restrictions referred to in the lettered subparagraphs of paragraph 149, regardless of whether such license contracts were made pursuant to any prior concerted action, combination or conspiracy between two or more defendants.

F

Illegal Coercion By Each Producer-Exhibitor Defendant

179. Each producer-exhibitor defendant, well knowing all the matters and things hereinbefore alleged, for many years last past, has violated Section 2 of the Sherman Act by using the monopolistic buying power of its circuit of theatres to compel each of the defendant distributors and other distributors of films to enter into licensing agreements with its circuit on terms which prevent unaffiliated theatres from in fact competing with its circuit theatres, either with respect to the terms on which said unaffiliated theatres license films or the terms on which they exhibit films to the public, regardless of whether such license contracts were made pursuant to any prior concerted action, combination or conspiracy between two or more defendants.

[fol. 3203] G

Illegal Contracts Made by Each Defendant Distributor with Exhibitors Generally

180. Each distributor defendant, well knowing all the matters and things hereinbefore alleged, for many years last past has made divers contracts with exhibitors generally throughout the United States to unreasonably restrain and, pursuant to such license contracts, has in fact unreasonably restrained trade and commerce in the distribution, production and exhibition of motion pictures in the United States in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act, in the following manner, regardless of whether such license contracts were made pursuant to any concerted action, combination or conspiracy between two or more defendants.

181. By fixing license terms in contracts made before the exhibitor has had a fair opportunity to estimate the value and character of the films licensed and before such films have been completed or trade shown.

182. By fixing the run, clearance and minimum admission price terms in license agreements covering large groups of pictures of widely varying quality released over periods of a year or more.

183. By conditioning the licensing of one film or group of films upon the licensing of another film or group of films.

184. By conditioning the licensing of films in one theatre, or group of theatres, upon the licensing of films in another theatre, or group of theatres, which has no relationship to the first theatre, or group of theatres, other than common ownership or control or a common film buying agent.

185. By making clearance agreements which are calculated to suppress competition between exhibitors rather than to protect the distributor's revenue.

[fol. 3204] 186. By refusing to license a run on any terms, for the purpose of protecting an exhibitor from competition rather than to protect the distributor's revenue.

187. By arbitrarily withholding prints available in an exchange from one exhibitor in order to give another exhibitor a prior playing date not provided for in his licensing agreements.

VIII. Prayer

Wherefore, plaintiff prays:

(1) That the court issue its preliminary injunction restraining the defendants herein, and each of them, from building, buying, leasing, or otherwise acquiring any additional theatres or any further interest, or interests, in any additional theatres either directly or indirectly through the acquisition thereof by subsidiary or associated corporations or otherwise until the final decree herein or until the further order of this court.

(2) That each of the contracts, combinations, and conspiracies in restraint of interstate trade and commerce, together with the attempts to monopolize and the monopolization of the same, hereinbefore described, be declared illegal and violative of the Sherman Act.

(3) That the defendants herein, their subsidiaries, and each of them, and each and all of their respective officers and directors, and each and all of the respective agents, servants and employees, and all persons acting or claiming to act on behalf of the defendants, their subsidiaries, or any of them, be perpetually enjoined and restrained from continuing to carry out, directly or indirectly, expressly or impliedly, the attempts at monopolization, the monopolies and all restraints of said interstate trade and commerce in the production, distribution, and exhibition of motion pic-
[fol. 3205] tures described herein, and from entering into and carrying out, directly or indirectly, expressly or impliedly, any monopolies or restraints of interstate trade and commerce similar to those alleged herein to be illegal.

(4) That a nationwide system of impartial arbitration tribunals or such other means of enforcement as the court may deem proper be established pursuant to the final decree of this court in order to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibitions of illegal practices may be contained therein.

(5) That the integration of the production and exhibition branches of the industry by the producer exhibitor defendants herein, and each of them, be declared to be unlawful as an instrumentality of monopoly and restraint upon interstate trade and commerce, and violative of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

(6) That the defendants Paramount Pictures, Inc., Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, Warner Bros. Pictures Inc., Loew's, Incorporated, and Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, and each of them, under the direction and supervision of the court be ordered and directed to divest themselves of all interest and ownership, both direct and indirect, either in theatres and theatre holdings or in production and distribution facilities and that they, and each of them, and their respective successors be permanently enjoined from acquiring, directly or indirectly, any other interests in the branch of the industry divested or in any persons, firms, or corporations which are engaged or may engage in that branch of the industry; said divestiture to be accomplished and carried out upon such terms and conditions as the court may deem proper.

(7) That the defendants Paramount Pictures, Inc., Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, National Theatre Corporation, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., Warner [fol. 3206] Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, Loew's, Incorporated, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, R. K. O. Proctor Corporation and R. K. O. Midwest Corporation and each of them, under the direction and supervision of the court be ordered and directed to divest themselves of all interest and ownership, both direct and indirect, in any theatres which the court shall find have been used by one or more of them to unreasonably restrain trade and commerce in motion pictures in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act or to monopolize trade and commerce in motion pictures in violation of Section 2 of the Sherman Act.

(8) That the plaintiff have such other and further relief as the court may deem proper.

(9) That the plaintiff recover its costs herein.

United States of America, John T. Cahill, United States Attorney for the Southern District of New York.

ANSWER OF NATIONAL THEATRES CORPORATION TO THE AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT

[fol. 3208] To the Honorable the Judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York:

National Theatres Corporation (sometimes hereinafter referred to as "National"), by its solicitors, Dwight, Harris, Koegel & Caskey, for its Answer to the Amended and Supplemental Complaint (hereinafter referred to as the "Amended Complaint") herein:

1. Answering Paragraph 1 of the Amended Complaint, denies that it has violated, is violating, or is about to violate any section or sections of the Act of July 2, 1890, commonly known as the Sherman Act.

2. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 2 of the Amended Complaint, and avers that neither it nor any of its representatives has acted unlawfully or in violation of the Act of July 2, 1890, either within the Southern District of New York or elsewhere.

3. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations or any [fol. 3209] of them in Paragraphs 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 14, 16(d), 16(f), 17(d), 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 44, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 102, 104, 105, 106, 114, 117, 126, 132, 133, 134, 135, 137, 138, 139, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 166, 167, 168, and 169 of the Amended Complaint.

4. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations or any of them in Paragraph 7(a) of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "Fox"), is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with a place of business at 444 West 56th Street, New York, N. Y., and is engaged in the business of producing and of distributing motion pictures in various parts of the United States.

Answering the allegations of Paragraph 7(b) of the Amended Complaint, denies that National is a holding company for the theatre interests of Fox.

5. Answering the allegations of Paragraph 8 of the Amended Complaint, denies that Fox is an exhibitor of motion pictures and that National is a producer of motion pictures and protests the use of the appellation "producer-exhibitor defendant" to describe either of them.

6. Answering the allegations of Paragraph 15(b) of the Amended Complaint, denies that the term "major producer" is accurately defined in said paragraph and avers that said term is relative and could be applied to any of a number of producers who at the particular time might generally be regarded as the principal or more important producers.

7. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraphs 15(c), 15(e), 16(c), 17(h), 17(o), 17(s), 17(t), 101, [fol. 3210] 103, 109, 110, 112, 113, 115, 116, 119, 120, 122, 124, 125, 127, 128, 129, 130, 140, 141, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, and 187 of the Amended Complaint.

8. Answering the allegations of Paragraph 16(b) of the Amended Complaint, denies the term "major distributor" is accurately defined in said paragraph and avers that said term is relative and could be applied to any of a number of distributors who at the particular time might generally be regarded as the principal or more important distributors.

9. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 16(g) of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that the term "block booking" is sometimes applied to the simultaneous licensing of a number of motion pictures, most of which are to be produced in the future.

10. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 17(b) and 17(c) of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that the term "affiliated theatre" may be used where the policy under which a theatre is operated and the licensing of pictures for exhibition in such theatre are both subject to control actually exercised by a defendant.

11. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 17(e) of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that the theatres operated by it which customarily contract for and exhibit first runs of pictures in the communities where they are located are sometimes called "first run theatres."

12. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraphs 17(f) and 17(g) of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that a group of two or more theatres owned, controlled or managed by the same interests are sometimes referred to as a "circuit" and that a theatre in such group is sometimes referred to as a "circuit theatre."

[fol. 3211] 13. Answering the allegations in Paragraphs 17(i), 17(j), 17(k), 17(l), 17(m), 17(n), 17(p), 17(q) and 17(r), admits that the terms referred to in these paragraphs are sometimes used in the motion picture industry as therein defined.

14. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 38 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that Fox was incorporated under the name of Fox Film Corporation on February 1, 1915, that the debt structure of Fox was voluntarily adjusted with the consent of its creditors, security holders and stockholders in the summer of 1933 and that in 1935 Fox acquired the property, business and assets of Twentieth Century Pictures, Inc., and that in 1935 the name Fox Film Corporation was changed to Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation.

15. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations or any of them in Paragraph 41 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits and avers that Fox pictures are distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and that exchanges for the distribution of Fox pictures are maintained in Denver, Colorado; St. Louis and Kansas City, Missouri; Los Angeles and San Francisco, California; Salt Lake City, Utah; Seattle, Washington; Portland, Oregon; Milwaukee, Wisconsin; and Omaha, Nebraska.

16. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 42 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that Fox acquired approximately one-third of the common stock of West Coast Theatres, Inc., in August, 1925, and that in March, 1928, Fox acquired all the stock of Wesco Corporation.

17. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 43 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that Wesco Corporation adjusted its capital structure in 1934 by volun-
[fol. 3212] tary agreement among its creditors and stockholders, pursuant to which The Chase National Bank of the City of New York acquired 58% of the stock in Wesco and Fox Film Corporation retained 42%; that the name of Wesco Corporation was thereafter changed to National Theatres Corporation; that The Chase National Bank of the City of New York still retains 58% of the stock of National Theatres Corporation; and that direct and indirect subsidiaries of National Theatres Corporation operate theatres in the middle and far western parts of the United States; and except it admits that The Chase National Bank of the City of New York is and for some years has been a stockholder in Fox.

18. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations or any of them in Paragraph 45 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that, as of November 2, 1940, direct or indirect subsidiaries of National operated theatres as indicated by the following tabulation:

City	No. of theatres
Denver, Colo.	5
Detroit, Mich.	1
Kansas City, Mo.	3
Los Angeles Calif.	6
Milwaukee, Wis.	3
Portland, Ore.	3
San Francisco, Calif.	4
Seattle, Wash.	6

State	No. of theatres
Arizona	6
California	212
Colorado	34
Idaho	11
Illinois	20
Iowa	6
Kansas	56
Michigan	5
Missouri	37
Montana	19
Nebraska	8
New Mexico	6
Oregon	9
Utah	2
Washington	25
Wisconsin	48
Wyoming	12

[fol. 3213] 19. Denies the allegations and each of them in paragraph 87 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that direct or indirect subsidiaries of National operate some theatres jointly with other exhibiting companies, and avers that such method of operation is not confined to theatres affiliated with one or more of the defendants to this action.

20. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 100 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that during the period between 1919-1930, the cost of production of motion pictures had mounted steadily, the cost of production was accelerated by the introduction of sound in motion pictures, many of the best features cost as much as $500,000 or more each to produce, and avers that with the increased cost of production licenses to exhibit feature pictures increased accordingly.

21. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 107 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that some contracts to license motion pictures contain the terms under which the features licensed are to be exhibited over a period of one year or more, that one license agreement with a distributor may cover all the pictures to be released during the motion picture season or seasons covered by the license agreement or a lesser number to be selected from the whole, and that some license agreements have been negotiated prior to the commencement of the motion picture season to be covered by the license and before any of the features covered by the license had been released.

22. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations or any of them in Paragraph 108 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that the quality of feature pictures varies, that feature pictures are placed in various price groups in some license agreements, that many of the features placed in the top price brackets in license agreements contain terms based upon a percentage of the box office receipts, that many of the pictures in the lower price brackets are licensed for a flat rental, that the pictures in each price bracket are sometimes untitled when the license agreement is made, and that many features are not definitely allocated to a price bracket until released; and denies that the question of proper allocation of pictures in price [fol. 3214] brackets is a continuous source of dispute between exhibitors and distributors.

23. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 111 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that its license agreements specify the rental to be paid for each picture, the run on which the feature pictures are to be made available, the clearance, if any, which the licensed theatre shall have over competing theatres, the clearance, if any, which competing theatres shall have over the licensed theatre, and sometimes state the minimum admission prices which the exhibitor agrees to charge.

24. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 118 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that a code for the motion picture industry was adopted pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act.

25. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations or any of them in Paragraph 121 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that direct or indirect subsidiaries of National enter into license agreements with distributors each season, that most of such license agreements cover only a single season, and that some of such license agreements may cover a period of two or more years.

26. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 123 of the Amended Complaint, except it avers that license agreements entered into by direct or indirect subsidiaries of National with distributors, covering one year or two or more years, vary with each particular distributor and for the precise terms thereof respectfully refers to the originals.

27. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations in Paragraph 131 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that direct or indirect subsidiaries of National operate first run theatres in the following towns:

Kansas City, Missouri,
Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

[fol. 3215] 28. Further answering, the defendant National Theatres Corporation denies that it or any corporation in which it owns any stock has a monopoly of or has attempted to monopolize the exhibition of motion pictures; denies that National has connived or conspired with any one to monopolize the production, distribution or exhibition of motion pictures, or to restrain trade and commerce in the production, distribution or exhibition of motion pictures, or has in any way violated the provisions of the Act of July 2, 1890.

29. Further answering, the defendant National Theatres Corporation denies each and every allegation, inference or implication in said Amended Complaint of any unlawful act, conduct, combination, conspiracy or monopoly and denies that plaintiff is entitled to the relief prayed for in said Amended Complaint or to any of such relief, or to any relief whatsoever in the premises.

Wherefore, National Theatres Corporation, having fully answered the Amended Complaint herein, demands judgment dismissing the complaint, as amended and supplemented by the Amended Complaint, together with the costs and disbursements of this action, herein most wrongfully incurred.

ANSWER OF TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX FILM CORPORATION TO AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT

[fol. 3217] To the Honorable the Judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York:

Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation (sometimes hereinafter referred to as "Fox"), by its solicitors, Dwight, Harris, Koegel & Caskey, for its Answer to the Amended and Supplemental Complaint (hereinafter referred to as the "Amended Complaint") herein:

1. Answering Paragraph 1 of the Amended Complaint, denies that it has violated, is violating, or is about to violate any section or sections of the Act of July 2, 1890, commonly known as the Sherman Act.

2. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 2 of the Amended Complaint, and avers that neither it nor any of its representatives has acted unlawfully or in violation of the Act of July 2, 1890, within the Southern District of New York or elsewhere.

3. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations [fol. 3218] or any of them in Paragraphs 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, 10, 11, 14, 16(d), 16(f), 17(d), 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 105, 106, 131, 132, and 134 of the Amended Complaint.

4. Answering Paragraph 7(a) of the Amended Complaint, denies that Fox is engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated companies, in various parts of the United States, in foreign countries or elsewhere, except it admits that it owns all of the common stock of Roxy Theatres, Inc., which owns and operates the Roxy Theatre in New York, N. Y., and that it owns 42% of the capital stock of National Theatres Corporation, direct and indirect subsidiaries of which are engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures.

Answering Paragraph 7(b) of the Amended Complaint, denies that National Theatres Corporation is a holding company for the theatre interests of Fox.

5. Answering the allegations in Paragraph 8 of the Amended Complaint, denies that Fox is an exhibitor of motion pictures and that National Theatres Corporation is a producer of motion pictures and protests the use of the appellation "producer-exhibitor defendant" to describe either of them.

6. Answering the allegations in Paragraph 15(b) of the Amended Complaint, denies that the term "major producer" is accurately defined in said paragraph and avers that said term is relative and could be applied to any of a number of producers who at the particular time might generally be regarded as the principal or more important producers.

7. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraphs 15(c), 15(e), 16(c), 17(h), 17(o), 17(s), 17(t), 87, 101, 102, [fol. 3219] 103, 109, 110, 112, 113, 115, 116, 119, 120, 125, 127, 128, 129, 130, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, and 187 of the Amended Complaint.

8. Answering the allegations of Paragraph 16(b) of the Amended Complaint, denies the term "major distributor" is accurately defined in said paragraph and avers that said term is relative and could be applied to any of a number of distributors who at the particular time might generally be regarded as the principal or more important distributors.

9. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 16(g) of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that the term "block booking" is sometimes applied to the simultaneous licensing of a number of motion pictures, most of which are to be produced in the future.

10. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraphs 17(b) and 17(c) of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that the term "affiliated theatre" may be used where the policy under which a theatre is operated and the licensing of pictures for exhibition in such theatre are both subject to control actually exercised by a defendant.

11. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 17(e) of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that the theatres which by contract with Fox have the right to the first run of pictures distributed by it in the communities where such theatres are located are sometimes called "first run theatres."

12. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraphs 17(f) and 17(g) of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that a group of two or more theatres owned, controlled or managed by the same interests are sometimes referred to as a "circuit" and that a theatre in such group is sometimes referred to as a "circuit theatre."

[fol. 3220] 13. Answering the allegations in Paragraph 17(i) of the Amended Complaint, avers that the motion picture season of Fox begins on August 1 of one year and ends on July 31 of the following year.

14. Answering the allegations in Paragraphs 17(j), 17(k), 17(l), 17(m), 17(n), 17(p), 17(q) and 17(r), admits that the terms referred to in these paragraphs are sometimes used in the motion picture industry as therein defined.

15. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 38 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that Fox was incorporated under the name of Fox Film Corporation on February 1, 1915, that the debt structure of Fox was voluntarily adjusted with the consent of its creditors, security holders and stockholders in the summer of 1933, that in 1935 Fox acquired the property, business and assets of Twentieth Century Pictures, Inc., and that in 1935 the name Fox Film Corporation was changed to Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation.

16. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations or any of them in Paragraph 39 of the Amended Complaint, except it avers that the feature pictures produced by Fox during the following seasons were as stated below:

1930-1931—48
1931-1932—46
1932-1933—41
1933-1934—46
1934-1935—40
1935-1936—52
1936-1937—52
1937-1938—49
1938-1939—55

17. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 40 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that Movie-
[fol. 3221] tonews, Inc., is a subsidiary of Fox, and avers that for the season 1930-1931 Movietonews, Inc., released no short subjects and that, for the seven-year period ending 1937-1938, the average number of short subjects produced by Movietonews, Inc., was 23, and that, for the eight year period ending 1937-1938, the average number of newsreels produced by it for release in the United States was 158.

18. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 41 of the Amended Complaint, and avers that its pictures are distributed in the State of Louisiana by Twentieth Century-Fox Distributing Corporation, which maintains an office in New Orleans, Louisiana, in the State of Texas by Twentieth Century-Fox Corporation of Texas, which maintains an office in Dallas, Texas, and throughout the rest of the United States by Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation which maintains branch offices in 29 cities throughout the United States, and that during the 1936-1937 season it distributed 64 feature pictures, including 4 reissues.

19. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 42 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that it acquired approximately one-third of the common stock of West Coast Theatres, Inc. in August, 1925, and that in March, 1928, it acquired all the stock of Wesco Corporation.

20. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 43 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that Wesco Corporation adjusted its capital structure in 1934 by voluntary agreement among its creditors and stockholders, pursuant to which The Chase National Bank of the City of New York acquired 58% of the stock of Wesco and Fox retained 42%; that the name of Wesco Corporation was thereafter changed to National Theatres Corporation; that The Chase National Bank of the City of New York still retains 58% of the stock of National Theatres Corporation; that direct and indirect subsidiaries of National Theatres Corporation operate theatres in the middle and far western parts of the United States; and except it admits [fol. 3222] that The Chase National Bank of the City of New York is and for some years has been a stockholder in Fox.

21. Answering the allegations in Paragraph 44 of the Amended Complaint admits that Fox owns all the common stock of Roxy Theatres, Inc., which operates the Roxy Theatre in New York, N. Y.

City	No. of Theatres
Denver, Colorado,	5
Detroit, Michigan	1
Kansas City, Missouri	3
Los Angeles, California	6
Milwaukee, Wisconsin	3

City	No. of Theatres
Portland, Oregon	3
San Francisco, California	4
Seattle, Washington	6

State	No. of Theatres
Arizona	6
California	212
Colorado	34
Idaho	11
Illinois	20
Iowa	6
Kansas	56
Michigan	5
Missouri	37
Montana	19
Nebraska	8
New Mexico	6
Oregon	9
Utah	2
Washington	25
Wisconsin	48
Wyoming	12

23. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 100 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that during the period between 1919 and 1930 the cost of production had [fol. 3223] mounted steadily, that the cost of production was accelerated by the introduction of sound in motion pictures, and that some of the best feature pictures produced by Fox cost as much as $500,000 or more each to produce.

24. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations or any of them in Paragraph 104 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that during the period from January 1, 1933, to June 30, 1939, it made 258 loans of stars, feature players, directors, writers, camera men and other production talent to producers.

25. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 107 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that many of its license contracts contain the terms under which the features licensed under that contract are to be exhibited over a period of one year or more, that one license agreement with an exhibitor may cover all feature pictures to be released during the motion picture season covered by the license agreement or a lesser number to be selected from the whole, that production programs are subject to change, and that some of its licenses have been negotiated prior to the commencement of the motion picture season to be covered by the license and before any of the features covered by the license had been released.

26. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 108 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that the quality of feature pictures varies, that feature pictures are placed in different price groups in the license agreements, that some of its pictures gross more than $1,000,000 and may play in more than 10,000 theatres in the United States, that some of its pictures may gross $200,000 or less and may play in no more than 5,000 theatres in the United States, that many of the features placed in the top price brackets in the license agreements contain terms based upon a percentage of the box office receipts, that many of the pictures in the lower price brackets are licensed for a flat rental, that the pictures in each price bracket are sometimes untitled when the license agreement is made, and [fol. 3224] that many features are not definitely allocated to a price bracket until released.

27. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 111 in the Amended Complaint, except it admits that its license agreements usually specify the rental to be paid for each picture, the run on which feature pictures are to be made available to the exhibitor, the clearance, if any, which the licensed theatre shall have over competing theatres, the clearance, if any, which competing theatres shall have over the licensed theatre, and sometimes state the minimum admission prices which the exhibitor agrees to charge when exhibiting Fox pictures.

28. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations in Paragraph 114 of the Amended Complaint, except it avers that as long as Fox has been a producer and distributor of motion pictures it has licensed its pictures on a so-called "run" basis.

29. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 117 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that it was a defendant in the case entitled Youngclaus v. Omaha Film Board of Trade, reported in 60 F. (2d) 538, and for the text of the decision and judgment therein respectfully refers to the original.

30. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 118 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that a code for the motion picture industry was adopted pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act.

31. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 121 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that most of its license agreements with exhibitors cover only the pictures to be released during a single season, and that it has entered into license agreements with exhibitors covering more than one season.

[fol. 3225] 32. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 122 of the Amended Complaint, except it avers that all license agreeemnts are advantageous to any theatre, whether for one or more reasons, since thereby the exhibitor is assured of product for that season or seasons.

33. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 123 of the Amended Complaint, except it avers that its license agreements with exhibitors covering one or two or more years vary with each exhibitor and for the precise terms thereof respectfully refers to the originals.

34. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 124 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that, in licensing its films to exhibitors who own more than one theatre, the terms with respect to those theatres may be negotiated at the same time and except it admits and avers that every exhibitor in negotiating for pictures attempts to secure the terms most favorable to him.

35. Denies the allegations and each of them in Paragraph 126 of the Amended Complaint, except it admits that a number of prints of each feature picture is delivered to each exchange, the number varying with the needs of each particular exchange, that the prints are shipped to various theatres served by each individual exchange in accordance with contracts, that prints are returned to the exchange after use, that pictures are sometimes privately screened on or shortly after arrival for the benefit of employees and exhibitors, and that if a picture is rejected by an exhibitor under his contract such picture may offered or licensed to another exhibitor.

36. Answering Paragraph 133 of the Amended Complaint, it denies that the personnel necessary to the production of a motion picture is usually drawn across state lines.

37. Answering Paragraph 135 of the Amended Complaint, it denies that all shipments of positive films to film exchanges are made across state lines.

[fol. 3226] 38. Answering Paragraph 136 of the Amended Complaint, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the other defendants herein and it avers that the exhibition season of Fox begins on August 1 of each year.

39. Answering Paragraph 138 of the Amended Complaint, denies that all shipments of positive films are made across state lines.

40. Answering Paragraph 139 of the Amended Complaint, denies that when films distributed by it are worn out they are shipped or returned to its laboratories for scrapping or that such shipments necessarily cross state lines, or that the final destination is New York City.

41. Further answering the defendant Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation denies that it has a monopoly of or has attempted to monopolize the production of motion pictures; denies that Fox has a monopoly of or has attempted to monopolize the distribution of motion pictures; denies that Fox or any corporation in which it owns any stock has a monopoly of or has attempted to monopolize the exhibition of motion pictures; denies that Fox has connived or conspired with anyone to monopolize the production, distribution or exhibition of motion pictures, or to restrain trade and commerce in the production, distribution or exhibition of motion pictures, or has in any way violated the provisions of the Act of July 2, 1890. Fox further avers that it has produced and distributed motion pictures in free and open competition with the other defendants herein and with numerous other producers and distributors and that Roxy Theatres, Inc. and the subsidiaries and affiliates of National Theatres Corporation have exhibited motion pictures in free and open competition with other exhibitors.

42. Further answering the defendant Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation denies each and every allegation, inference or implication in said Amended Complaint of any unlawful act, conduct, combination, conspiracy or monopoly and denies that plaintiff is entitled to the relief prayed [fol. 3227] for in said Amended Complaint or to any of such relief, or to any relief whatsoever in the premises.

Wherefore, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, having fully answered the Amended Complaint herein, demands judgment dismissing the complaint, as amended and supplemented by the Amended Complaint, together with the costs and disbursements of this action, herein most wrongfully incurred.

ANSWER OF LOEW'S INCORPORATED TO PETITIONER'S AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT—Filed November 14, 1940

Defendant, Loew's, Incorporated, by J. Robert Rubin and Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Gardiner & Reed, its solicitors, answers the amended and supplemental complaint herein, sometimes hereinafter referred to as the complaint, as follows:

1. Admits that the complaint was filed and these proceedings were instituted under Section 4 of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Act, against the defendants named in the complaint, but this defendant denies that it, either individually, or jointly with any other defendant or defendants, has violated, now is violating or intends to violate any provision of said Act, either as alleged in the complaint, or in any other manner.

[fol. 3229] 2. Denies each allegation of Paragraph 2 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to this defendant, and states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of said allegations insofar as the same relate to any other defendant.

3. Answers the respective subdivisions of Paragraph 3 of the complaint as follows:

(a) States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of subdivision (a), except that it admits that Paramount Pictures, Inc., or subsidiaries thereof, are engaged in the business of producing, distributing and exhibiting motion pictures; and

(b) States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of subdivision (b).

4. Denies each allegation of Paragraph 4 of the complaint, except that it admits that Loew's, Incorporated, is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business at No. 1540 Broadway, New York, New York; that it is engaged in the business of producing motion pictures and of distributing motion pictures in various parts of the United States, and that subsidiaries of Loew's, Incorporated, are engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures in various parts of the United States.

[fol. 3230] 5. Answers the respective subdivisions of Paragraph 5 of the complaint as follows:

(a) States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of subdivision (a), except that it admits that Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, or subsidiaries thereof, are engaged in the business of producing, distributing and exhibiting motion pictures;

(b) States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of subdivisions (b) to (e), inclusive.

6. Answers the respective subdivisions of Paragraph 6 of the complaint as follows:

(a) States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of subdivision (a), except that it admits that Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., or subsidiaries thereof, are engaged in the business of producing, distributing and exhibiting motion pictures;

(b) States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of subdivision (b), except that it admits that Vitagraph, Inc., is engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures; and

(c) States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of subdivision (c).

[fol. 3231] 7. Answers the respective subdivisions of Paragraph 7 of the complaint as follows:

(a) States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of subdivision (a), except that it admits that Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, or subsidiaries thereof, are engaged in the business of producing, distributing and exhibiting motion pictures; and

(b) States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of subdivision (b).

8. Admits the allegations of Paragraph 8 of the complaint.

9. Answers the respective subdivisions of Paragraph 9 of the complaint as follows:

(a) States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of subdivision (a), except that it admits that Columbia Pictures Corporation, or subsidiaries thereof, are engaged in the business of producing and distributing motion pictures; and

(b) States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of subdivisions (b) and (c).

10. Answers the respective subdivisions of Paragraph 10 of the complaint as follows:

[fol. 3232] (a) States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of subdivision (a), except that it admits that Universal Corporation, or subsidiaries thereof, are engaged in the business of producing and distributing motion pictures; and

(b) States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of subdivisions (b) to (d), inclusive.

11. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 11 of the complaint, except that it admits that United Artists Corporation is engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures.

12. Admits the allegations of Paragraphs 12, 13 and 14 of the complaint.

13. Answers the respective subdivisions of Paragraph 15 of the complaint as follows:

(a) Denies each allegation of subdivision (a) and alleges that a producer is any individual, partnership, unincorporated association or corporation which produces motion pictures;

(b) Denies each allegation of subdivisions (b) and (c);

(c) Admits the allegations of subdivision (d);

(d) Denies each allegation of subdivision (e); and [fol. 3233] (e) Admits the allegations of subdivisions (f) and (g).

14. Answers the respective subdivisions of Paragraph 16 of the complaint as follows:

(a) Denies each allegation of subdivision (a) and alleges that a distributor is any individual, partnership, unincorporated association or corporation which licenses motion pictures for exhibition and distributes the positive prints of such motion pictures to exhibitors;

(b) Denies each allegation of subdivisions (b) and (c);

(c) Denies each allegation of subdivision (d), except that it admits that the term "State Rights Distributor" is sometimes used in the industry generally to designate a distributor which does not operate a system of national exchanges but licenses the exhibition of motion pictures in a state or territory;

(d) Admits the allegations of subdivision (e) except that it denies that an exchange is maintained for the purpose of soliciting license agreements and alleges that it is maintained for the purpose of soliciting applications for licenses; and

(e) Denies each allegation of subdivisions (f) to (g), inclusive.

15. Answers the respective subdivisions of Paragraph 17 of the complaint as follows:

(a) Denies each allegation of subdivision (a) and alleges that an exhibitor is any individual, partnership, unincor- [fol. 3234] porated association or corporation engaged in the public exhibition of motion pictures in a theatre or theatres for profit;

(b) Denies each allegation of subdivisions (b) and (c);

(c) States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of subdivision (d);

(d) Denies each allegation of subdivision (e), and alleges that a first run theatre is a theatre which, by virtue of a contract between the exhibitor and a distributor, exhibits motion pictures licensed by such distributor to such exhibitor on their first run or showing in the particular area in which the theatre is located;

(e) Denies the allegations of subdivision (f), and alleges that a theatre circuit is a group of theatres affiliated together either by stock ownership, common ownership or common buying or whose licenses are negotiated by a buying combine or common buying agent;

(f) Admits the allegations of subdivisions (g) to (i), inclusive;

(g) Denies the allegations of subdivision (j), except that it admits that the term "release" is used in the motion picture industry to designate either a motion picture or the making of prints of a motion picture available for public exhibition in a theatre or theatres;

(h) Admits the allegations of subdivision (k);

(i) Denies each allegation of subdivision (l) and alleges [fol. 3235] that a trade showing is an exhibition of a feature at a theatre or projection room for the benefit of exhibitors generally;

(j) Admits the allegations of subdivision (m);

(k) Denies each allegation of subdivision (n) and alleges that a road show is an exhibition at a theatre where a majority of the main floor seats for each evening performance are reserved and sold at an admission price of not less than one dollar;

(l) Admits the allegations of subdivision (o), and alleges that the term is also used to mean a city in which the best motion pictures are regularly given their first run exhibition, and gross their largest returns, in the district in which such city is located, or a city in which a number of companies distributing motion pictures maintain exchanges;

(m) Admits the allegations of subdivisions (p) to (r), inclusive;

(n) Denies each allegation of subdivision (s), and alleges that clearance is the period of time fixed by agreement between a distributor and an exhibitor, prior to the expiration of which a feature licensed for prior exhibition in a theatre may not be exhibited in another theatre or theatres; and

(o) Denies each allegation of subdivision (t), and alleges that a zone is a specified geographical area.

16. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraphs 18 to 26, inclusive, and any subdivisions thereof.

[fol. 3236] 17. Admits the allegations of Paragraphs 27 to 31, inclusive, of the complaint.

18. Admits that it operates the number of theatres located in the cities and states referred to in subdivisions (a) and (b) of Paragraph 32 of the complaint, except that it denies that it operates any theatre in Denver, Colorado or in San Francisco, California, that it operates more than three theatres in the City of Washington, which is co-extensive with the District of Columbia, and that it operates in the State of Maryland more than two theatres, both located in the City of Baltimore, Maryland.

19. Admits the allegations of Paragraph 33 of the complaint, except that it denies that the name of the merged company was Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and alleges that the name of the merged company was Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation, and that Metro-Goldwyn-Pictures Corporation was a subsidiary of this defendant which held the capital stock of said Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation, and that it denies the allegation of the fifth sentence of said Paragraph and alleges that from 1924 to December 31, 1937, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation produced pictures for this defendant.

Season	Features Produced by Loew's
1930-31	45
1931-32	39
1932-33	36
1933-34	46
1934-35	41
1935-36	42
1936-37	43
1937-38	38
1938-39	47

21. Admits the allegations of Paragraph 35 of the complaint.

22. Admits the allegations of Paragraph 36 of the complaint, except that it denies that during the 1936-37 season it distributed ten more features than it produced, and, alleges that during the 1936-37 season it produced forty-three features and distributed fifty-two features, including four reissues.

23. Admits the allegations of Paragraph 37 of the complaint.

24. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraphs 38 to 86, inclusive, of the complaint.

[fol. 3238] 25. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 87 of the complaint, except that it admits that it is a party to certain agreements with respect to certain theatres, and that other exhibitors, including subsidiaries of certain other defendants herein, are also parties to such agreements.

26. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraphs 88 and 89 of the complaint.

27. Admits the allegations of Paragraph 90 of the complaint, except that it states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegation that in the early stages of motion picture production films possessed entertainment value for the public merely because of the novelty of watching figures and objects in motion projected on a screen.

28. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraphs 91 to 95, inclusive, of the complaint.

29. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 96 of the complaint, except that it admits that [fol. 3239] after 1912 the film of 1000 feet was displaced by the feature picture of five reels or more and that during such period the motion picture art had been going forward.

30. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 97 of the complaint.

31. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 98 of the complaint, except that it admits that First National Exhibitors Circuit, an association of exhibitors, was organized in or about the year 1917.

32. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 99 of the complaint.

33. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 100 of the complaint, except that it admits that by 1930 this defendant was engaged in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures; that the motion pictures which it produced were distributed by it throughout the United States; that Paramount, Warner, Fox and RKO, either directly or through subsidiaries, each also was engaged severally in the production, distribution [fol. 3240] and exhibition of motion pictures and that each severally distributed throughout the United States the motion pictures so produceed by it; that during the period from 1919 to 1930 feature picture production costs had mounted steadily and that in or about 1927 the introduction of sound films accelerated this increase in the costs of production to such an extent that an outstanding feature sound film in some cases was costing as much as $500,000.00 or more to produce.

34. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 101 of the complaint, except that it admits that since 1930 it has distributed features produced by producers other than the defendant herein pursuant to arrangements made preceding the production of such features; that such arrangements sometimes have included the use of equipment owned by, or production talent under contract to this defendant, and that such arrangements sometimes have included partial financing of the production by this defendant.

35. Admits the allegations of the first clause of Paragraph 102 of the complaint; denies the allegations of the second clause of said Paragraph insofar as the same relate to this defendant, and states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of said allegations insofar as the same relate to any other defendant.

36. States that it is without knowledge or information [fol. 3241] sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 103 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to any other defendant and denies each allegation thereof insofar as it relates to this defendant, except that it admits that this defendant has from time to time made available to other producers, including independent producers as well as other defendants herein, its stars, feature players, directors and other personnel, and its sets, scenery, and other technical equipment necessary for the production of motion pictures.

37. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 104 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to any other defendant in this action; denies each allegation thereof insofar as it relates to this defendant, and alleges that, from about 1933 to about August 30, 1939, it has loaned stars, feature players, directors, writers, cameramen and other production talent, under contract to it, to other producers of motion pictures, some of which are defendants in this action.

38. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 105 of the complaint.

39. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation [fol. 3242] of Paragraph 106 of the complaint, except that it admits that its motion picture films in the early stages of motion picture distribution were well adapted to the method of licensing then employed in the industry; that its motion picture films today are well adapted to the method of licensing now employed by it, and that then as now certain motion picture films were licensed without prior trade showings and in groups for delivery at fairly regular intervals over a period of time.

40. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 107 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to any other defendant, and denies the same insofar as it relates to this defendant, except that it admits that some of its licenses today contain the terms on which all or several of its features are to be exhibited under copyright over a period of time, as and when released; that some of its licenses provide for the exhibition under copyright of a minimum number of features out of the maximum number of features specified in the license, and that some of its licenses are negotiated prior to the commencement of the exhibition season.

41. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 108 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to any other defendant; admits the allegations of the [fol. 3243] first three sentences and denies the allegations of the last two sentences of said Paragraph insofar as the same relate to it, and alleges that its pictures in each bracket are usually untitled and unidentified when licensed but are allocated to a price bracket when they are about to be released.

42. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 109 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to any other defendant and denies each allegation thereof insofar as it relates to this defendant, except that it admits that by free, voluntary and separate negotiations with its prospective customers it endeavors to license to each of them as many features as possible, consistent with its best business judgment.

43. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 110 of the complaint.

44. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 111 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to any other defendant and admits the allegations of said Paragraph insofar as the same relate to this defendant.

45. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 112 of the complaint.

[fol. 3244] 46. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 113 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to any other defendant, and denies each allegation thereof insofar as it relates to this defendant, except that it admits that in licensing the exhibition of its pictures to a subsequent run exhibitor it does not violate the terms of its license contract with any exhibitor who has licensed a run of its pictures prior to that of said subsequent run exhibitor, and that in the licensing of its pictures it does not employ auction block methods.

47. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegations of Paragraph 114 of the complaint.

48. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 115 of the complaint, except that it admits that from time to time since about 1915 to about 1931 many exhibitor and distributor interests conceded that uniform clearances were in many respects desirable and that efforts were made from time to time, at the request of exhibitor interests, to eliminate differences in clearance.

49. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 116 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to any other defendant; denies each allegation thereof [fol. 3245] insofar as it relates to this defendant, except that it admits that with the knowledge and acquiescence of the plaintiff, this defendant participated in conferences to establish the basis for clearance schedules by voluntary agreement of all parties affected.

50. Admits that the United States District Court for the District of Nebraska rendered a decision on July 2nd, 1932, in a case entitled Youngclaus v. Omaha Film Board of Trade et al. (reported in 60 F. (2d) 538) in which Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation was a party defendant, to the effect that the agreement among distributors which is therein set forth restrained trade in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act; states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any other allegation of Paragraph 117 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to any other defendant; denies each other allegation thereof insofar as it relates to this defendant, except that it admits and alleges that since 1932 it has refrained from participating in any negotiations with respect to uniform clearance and zoning except as admitted in its answer to Paragraph 118 of the complaint.

51. Denies the allegations of Paragraph 118 of the complaint except that it admits that in 1933 the National Industrial Recovery Act was passed and that pursuant thereto a Code of Fair Competition for the Motion Picture Industry was duly promulgated; that pursuant to the express provisions of that Act this defendant, with others [fol. 3246] engaged in the motion picture industry, was bound by the decisions of local Clearance and Zoning Boards established pursuant to said Code; that a Clearance and Zoning Schedule was prepared and adopted for the Los Angeles Exchange Territory; that other such schedules were in preparation by local Clearance and Zoning Boards in other sections of the United States but that these, as well as the schedule for the Los Angeles Exchange territory, were terminated with the declaration by the Supreme Court of the illegality of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and denies that since May, 1935, this defendant has made any further effort to establish any uniform clearance and zoning, either by express agreement with other distributors, or otherwise.

52. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraphs 119 and 120 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to any other defendant or any theatre circuit, and denies each allegation thereof insofar as it relates to this defendant, except that it admits that it attempts by individual and separate negotiations to obtain the same clearance from each distributor from which it licenses motion pictures for exhibition in theatres operated by its subsidiaries.

53. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 121 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to any other defendant and denies each allegation [fol. 3247] thereof insofar as it relates to this defendant, except that it admits that it has granted licenses for more than one year and that the film rental from a single such license has exceeded $2,000,000.00, and it alleges that in recent years it has entered into no long term license for the exhibition of its pictures.

54. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 122 insofar as the same relates to any other defendant and denies each allegation thereof insofar as it relates to this defendant, except that it admits that its licenses for a period of more than one season, as well as its licenses for a year or less, are advantageous to its licensees, and admits that some of the licenses entered into by this defendant, either as licensee or as licensor, contain provisions that some of the terms are to be reviewed and renegotiated annually before the beginning of the motion picture seasons covered by said license.

55. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 123 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to any other defendant; denies each allegation thereof insofar as it relates to it, except that it admits and alleges that certain contracts for more than one year, like contracts for one year or less, provide for the deduction of the cost of vaudeville performances before the calculation [fol. 3248] of film rental or for the deduction of the cost of a second feature where double features are used before calculating film rental, that in one or two instances contracts entered into by it have provided for after acquired theatres; that said contracts have expired and that none such are now in existence.

56. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 124 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to any other defendant and denies each allegation thereof insofar as it relates to this defendant, except that it admits that an exhibitor, in negotiating for a license agreement, seeks to secure the most favorable terms for the theatre or theatres for which he is negotiating.

57. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 125 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to any other defendant and denies each allegation thereof insofar as it relates to this defendant.

58. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 126 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to any other defendant, denies each allegation thereof insofar as it relates to this defendant, except that it admits the allegation of the first, fourth and fifth sentences of said Paragraph 126 insofar as the same relate to [fol. 3249] it, and admits that its pictures are frequently screened on or shortly after their arrival at the exchange for the benefit of the trade.

59. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 127 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to any other defendant; admits the allegations thereof insofar as they relate to this defendant and alleges that the quality of motion picture entertainment available is not the only factor affecting admission prices.

60. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 128 of the complaint insofar as it relates to any other defendant; denies each allegation thereof insofar as it relates to this defendant, except that it admits that admission prices tend to vary with the run on which an exhibitor licenses the motion pictures distributed by this defendant.

61. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraphs 129 and 130 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to any other defendant and denies each allegation thereof insofar as it relates to this defendant.

62. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 131 of the complaint insofar as the same re- [fol. 3250] lates to any other defendant and denies each allegation thereof insofar as it relates to this defendant except that it admits that with respect to the 1st run theatres operated by its subsidiaries located in the cities referred to in Paragraph 17 (d) of the complaint, approximately 95% or more of the feature pictures exhibited by such theatres were released by the distributor defendants, a large percentage of the pictures so exhibited being released by this defendant itself.

63. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 132 of the complaint.

64. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 133 of the complaint, except that it admits the allegations contained in the first sentence of said Paragraph 133, and admits that the personnel necessary to the production of a motion picture is usually assembled at studios in California, where most of the pictures are made.

65. Denies each allegation of Paragraph 134 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to this defendant except that it states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of said Paragraph insofar as the same relates to any other defendant, except that it states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegation that approximately two billion feet of negative stock celluloid film are used in the production of motion [fol. 3251] pictures annually, practically all of which is manufactured at plants located in the States of New York and New Jersey.

66. Denies each allegation of Paragraph 135 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to this defendant and states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of said Paragraph insofar as the same relates to any other defendant, except it admits the allegations contained in the first and third sentences of said Paragraph 135 and admits and alleges that in the case of Loew's Incorporated positive prints are made from negatives at its laboratories located in California and that usually between 200 and 400 positive prints are made for each feature picture.

67. Denies each allegation of Paragraph 136 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to this defendant and states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of said Paragraph insofar as the same relates to any other defendant, except that it admits that in the spring or early summer of each year, this defendant announces its anticipated program for the coming exhibition season, such announcement describing the literary properties, actors, actresses, producers and directors available to it for production of motion pictures and such other pertinent material as may be available, and admits that plans are made for the pro-

[fol. 3252] duction and release of the pictures at as nearly regular intervals throughout the exhibition season as may be, such year generally commencing on September 1st of each year.

68. Denies each allegation of Paragraph 137 of the complaint insofar as the same relates to this defendant and states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of said Paragraph insofar as the same relates to any other defendant, except that it admits and alleges that Loew's Incorporated, through its sales representatives who work out of its home office and film exchanges, solicits exhibitors to execute applications for license agreements covering exhibition of pictures of the coming season and in some cases of prior seasons and admits that each feature and short subject is copyrighted under the copyright laws of the United States by Loew's Incorporated, and the solicited applications as signed by the exhibitors are by the terms thereof and in fact, transmitted to the principal office of Loew's Incorporated, in New York City, where such applications are approved or rejected by it.

69. Admits the allegations of Paragraphs 138 and 139 of the complaint.

70. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 140 of the complaint, except that it admits that as to this defendant, the business of producing motion [fol. 3253] pictures involves the assemblage of personnel, property and material at the studios for the production of pictures and the making of negative film and positive prints at the studios; that the business of distributing motion pictures involves the solicitation of applications for licenses under copyright and the making of contracts for the future delivery over a period of time of films produced and to be produced; the transportation of the positive prints from the studios to its film exchanges throughout the United States; the continuous distribution of said films from the exchanges to and from motion picture theatres located in the areas served by the respective exchanges, the interchange of said films between an exchange and other exchanges of the same distributor located in other states of the United States; and the shipment of said films from said exchanges throughout the United States to points within the State of New York or California for scrapping.

71. States that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegation of Paragraph 141 of the complaint.

72. Denies each allegation of Paragraphs 142 to 187 of the complaint, both inclusive.

Wherefore, answering defendant above named demands judgment dismissing the petition, together with costs and [fol. 3254] disbursements of this action.

[Title omitted]

Answer of Paramount Pictures Inc. and Paramount Film Distributing Corporation to the Amended and Supplemental Complaint

Paramount Pictures Inc. (sometimes hereinafter referred to as "Paramount") and Paramount Film Distributing Corporation, by their solicitors, Simpson Thacher & Bartlett, for their answer to the amended and supplemental complaint herein (hereinafter referred to as the "amended complaint"):

1. Deny that they have violated, are violating or intend to violate, jointly or severally or otherwise, any section or sections of the act of July 2, 1890 commonly referred to as the "Sherman Anti-Trust Act", as alleged in paragraph "1" of the amended complaint, or in any other manner.

2. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph "2" of the amended complaint and allege that neither of them, nor any representative or representatives of either of them, has or have acted unlawfully or is or are acting [fol. 3256] unlawfully or in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, either within the Southern District of New York or elsewhere.

3. State that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in paragraphs "4", "5", "6", "7", "8", "9", "10", "11", "12", "13" and "14" of the amended complaint.

4. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraphs "15(b)", "15(c)", "15(e)", "15(f)", "15(g)", "16(b)", "16(c)", "16(d)", "16(e)", "16(f)" and "16(g)" of the amended complaint, and allege that the terms "major producer" and "major distributor" admit the inclusion of producers or distributors of motion pictures in addition to the defendants herein and in addition to those who produce pictures for release by the defendants herein or are controlled by a defendant herein.

5. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraphs "17(b)", "17(c)", "17(d)", "17(e)", "17(f)", "17(g)", "17(h)", "17(i)", "17(j)", "17(l)", "17(n)", "17(o)", "17(p)", "17(q)", "17(r)", "17(s)" and "17(t)" of the amended complaint.

6. Admit that the allegations contained in paragraphs "18" and "19" of the amended complaint are substantially accurate, except that they deny that the definition of "Paramount" and the term "subsidiaries" when referring to Paramount, contained in the footnote on page 11 of the amended complaint, is an accurate definition thereof.

7. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph [fol. 3257] "20" of the amended complaint, except that they admit that Paramount and its predecessors from time to time acquired interests in producing and distributing companies.

8. State that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the accuracy of the allegations contained in paragraph "21" of the amended complaint with respect to the number of features produced by the motion picture industry in the years therein named and admit that the number of features produced by Paramount for the years named is substantially accurate.

9. Admit the allegations contained in paragraphs "23" and "24" of the amended complaint, except that they allege that Paramount pictures are distributed through exchanges located in 31 cities and except that they deny that the acquisitions of theatres by Paramount in 1919 or in any other year were pursuant to any "program of theatre acquisition", as alleged in said paragraph "24".

10. Deny that the term "First-run Metropolitan Theatres" has any fixed or static meaning and hence state that they are without any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the accuracy of the figures with respect to "First-run Metropolitan Theatres" contained in paragraph "25" of the amended complaint, deny that more than a very few of the theatres referred to in said paragraph are operated, or that their operating policies are controlled by Paramount.

11. State that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to each and every allegation contained in paragraphs "27", "28", "29", "30", "31", [fol. 3258] "32", "33", "34", "35", "36", "37", "38", "39", "40", "41", "42", "43", "44", "45", "46", "47", "48", "49", "50", "51", "52", "53", "54", "55", "56", "57", "58", "59", "60", "61", "62", "63", "64", "65", "66", "67", "68", "69", "70", "71", "72", "73", "74", "75", "76", "77", "78", "79", "80", "81", "82", "83", "84", "85" and "86" of the amended complaint.

12. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraphs "87", "88" and "89" of the amended complaint, except that these defendants admit that there are situations in which Paramount is jointly interested financially in one or more theatres with one or more of the other defendants or with others who are not defendants in this action, and these defendants state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the existence of such situations or the number of such situations in which the other defendants, or one or more of them, may be interested financially but in which Paramount is not so interested.

13. Admit that the allegations contained in paragraphs "90" to "99", inclusive, of the amended complaint are substantially accurate, except that they deny that Adolph Zukor or Famous Players Company by 1916, or any other year, exercised a dominating influence over the industry, as alleged in paragraph "97", and except that these defendants deny any inference which may be drawn or intended to be drawn from the allegations contained in said paragraphs "90" to "99", inclusive, that competition in the moving picture industry is not and has not always been free and open, and that there is a limited source of supply of feature pictures, or of first class feature pictures, and they deny [fol. 3259] that any limited source that may exist is the result of any agreement, combination or conspiracy among the defendants or any of them, or of any wrongful or illegal act on the part of these defendants, or either of them, or anyone acting on their behalf.

14. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph "100" of the amended complaint and deny any inference which may be drawn or intended to be drawn therefrom that in 1919, or at any other time, Famous Players-Lasky Company entered upon a "program of theatre expansion" or that its theatre acquisitions or the theatre acquisitions of Paramount were or are illegal in any respect or were intended to violate or did violate the provisions of any law.

15. State that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of each and every allegation contained in paragraph "101" of the amended complaint, except that they deny upon information and belief that they or the other defendants individually or collectively have control of the distribution of feature pictures produced in the United States at a cost of more than $250,000.

16. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraphs "102" and "103" of the amended complaint, except that they admit that equipment and technical and artistic talent necessary to produce profitable feature pictures have steadily grown more costly to producers and except that they admit that Paramount has on occasions hired equipment and technical and artistic talent from other producers [fol. 3260] and has rented such equipment and technical and artistic talent to other producers including producers who are not defendants herein, and allege that such transactions have been upon the basis of individual bargains made at the time of each such hiring or each such renting.

17. State that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in paragraph "104" of the amended complaint and as to the accuracy of the figures set forth in said paragraph.

18. State that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations and the computations and percentages contained in paragraph "105" of the amended complaint.

19. State that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in paragraph "106" of the amended complaint.

20. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph "107" of the amended complaint, except that they admit that many of their license agreements ordinarily contain the terms on which the feature pictures licensed are to be exhibited over a period of one year or more; that their license agreements sometimes cover all of the features released or to be released during a one-year period, or a lesser number selected or to be selected from all released as and when released; that license agreements are sometimes negotiated prior to the commencement of the motion picture season before any of the feature pictures covered thereby [fol. 3261] have been released, and frequently their license agreements are negotiated after the motion picture season has commenced and many of the feature pictures covered thereby have been produced, and that production programs announced in advance of the production season are necessarily subject to change during the period of production.

21. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph "108" of the amended complaint, except that they admit that the quality of feature pictures as box-office attractions necessarily varies widely, even with respect to those released by the same company; that they are sometimes priced in various brackets in the license agreements of these defendants in accordance with their anticipated quality; that features in one price bracket may have license terms based upon a percentage of box-office receipts, sometimes against a guaranteed figure, and that pictures in another bracket may be licensed for a "flat rental;" that feature pictures in various price brackets are sometimes untitled when the license agreement is made and that some features are not definitely allocated to a price bracket until released.

22. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph "109" of the amended complaint.

23. State that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in paragraph "110" of the amended complaint, except that they deny any inference which may be intended to be drawn from said allegations that "block booking" has [fol. 3262] any restrictive effect.

24. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph "111" of the amended complaint, except that these defendants admit that in addition to the license fees to be paid, their license agreements usually specify the run on which the feature pictures are to be exhibited by the exhibitor, that they usually specify the clearance, if any, which the exhibitor shall have over competing theatres and that they sometimes specify the minimum (adult and children, matinee and evening) admission prices which the exhibitor agrees to charge in his theatre or theatres when exhibiting the feature pictures covered by the license agreement.

25. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraphs "112" and "113" of the amended complaint, except that they admit that the entertainment value of feature pictures released in the United States varies widely and that motion picture theatres generally do not change their admission prices from week to week but that each attempts to maintain a uniform admission price over a period of time.

26. State that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in paragraph "114" of the amended complaint, except that they allege that as long as Paramount has been a producer and distributor of feature motion pictures it has licensed them upon a so-called "run" basis, and frequently their license agreements provide for periods of clearance over competing theatres.

27. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph "115" of the amended complaint, except that they [fol. 3263] admit that it is and for many years has been conceded by them and by exhibitors generally that uniform runs and clearances are desirable, and except that they state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the provisions contained in license agreements of other distributors.

28. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph "116" of the amended complaint.

29. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph "117" of the amended complaint, except that they admit that in 1932 the Federal District Court in Nebraska rendered a decision in a case known as Youngclaus v. Omaha Film Board of Trade, et al., 60 F. (2d) 538, to which decision this Court is respectfully referred, and except that they deny that after said decision in 1932, or at any time, they employed any agreements, express or otherwise, with other producers or distributors with respect to "protection" or "zoning."

30. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph "118" of the amended complaint, except that they admit that a code for the motion picture industry was duly adopted pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act which, among other things, dealt with "zoning" and "protection" and that the said code remained in force and effect in the industry until the invalidation of the said National Industrial Recovery Act by the Supreme Court of the United States.

31. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraphs "119" and "120" of the amended complaint.

[fol. 3264] 32. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph "121" of the amended complaint, except that they admit that they enter into license agreements with exhibitors from time to time; that most of their license agreements cover only a single season's production of feature pictures, and that many of their license agreements cover periods of more than one season, and that their license agreements frequently cover more than one theatre.

33. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraphs "122," "123," "124" and "125" of the amended complaint, except that they admit that every exhibitor in negotiating any license agreement attempts to secure the most favorable terms possible from the distributor.

34. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph "126" of the amended complaint, except that they admit that a number of prints of each feature picture, the number varying, among other things, in accordance with the needs of each particualr exchange, are delivered to each exchange prior to the national release date and delivered by the exchange to the various theatres which have licensed the film in accordance with the run established by the license agreements and that the prints are usually returned to the exchange after each use, and that feature pictures are frequently screened for all exhibitors who desire such screening.

35. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraphs "127" and "128" of the amended complaint, except that they admit that exhibitors holding license agreements for the first run of Paramount pictures ordinarily charge higher admission prices in the towns or cities where their [fol. 3265] theatres are located than do exhibitors holding license agreements for subsequent runs of Paramount pictures and admit that the admission prices for subsequent runs of a feature pictures usually are lower than the admission prices for the preceding runs.

36. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraphs "129" and "130" of the amended complaint.

37. State that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth or accuracy of the allegations or computations contained in paragraphs "131" and "132" of the amended complaint.

38. State that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth or accuracy of the allegations contained in paragraphs "133" to "141," inclusive, of the amended complaint, except that they deny the allegations contained in the said paragraph "141" in so far as it is therein alleged, or intended to be alleged, that all phases of the business of producing or distributing and of exhibiting motion pictures are in or directly affect trade and commerce among the several states and allege that many of the activities of each of the said branches of the industry are wholly intrastate.

39. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraphs "142" to "187," inclusive, of the amended complaint.

Wherefore defendants Paramount Pictures, Inc. and Paramount Film Distributing Corporation pray that the [fols. 3266-3267] amended and supplemental complaint herein be dismissed as against them and each of them, with costs.

[fol. 3268] In the District Court of the United States

[Title omitted]

Consolidated Answer of RKO Defendants to Amended and Supplemental Complaint

To the Honorable the Judges of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York:

The defendants, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation,[1] RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., RKO Proctor Corporation and RKO Midwest Corporation (hereinafter sometimes referred to as the answering defendants), by their solicitors, William J. Donovan and William Mallard, answering the Amended and Supplemental Complaint herein, allege as follows:

1. Deny so much of (1)[2] as alleges that the answering defendants have violated or are violating, or intend to violate Sections 1 or 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act in the

---

[1] Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation is hereinafter sometimes referred to as "the parent company"; RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., as "the RKO Company engaged in production and distribution"; RKO Proctor Corporation, RKO Midwest Corporation and Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation as "the RKO Companies engaged in exhibition"; and Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation as "KAO".

[2] Numbers in parentheses refer to corresponding numbered paragraphs of Amended and Supplemental Complaint.

manner alleged in the petition, or in any other manner, severally, or either jointly among themselves or with any other person or persons and, except as so denied state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to each and every allegation therein.

[fol. 3269] 2. Deny each and every allegation of (2).

3. As to (3) and (4), state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

4. As to (5a) admit that Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business at 1270 Sixth Avenue, New York, N. Y., and allege that it owns stock and other securities in corporations which are engaged in the business of producing, distributing or exhibiting motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated corporations, in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries, and, except as so admitted and alleged, deny each and every allegation therein.

Admit the allegations contained in (5b).

As to (5c) admit that Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware and has a place of business at 1270 Sixth Avenue, New York, N. Y., and that Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation owns approximately 99% of its common stock and 33% of its preferred stock, and except as so admitted deny the allegations therein, but allege that "KAO" owns stock and other securities in corporations which are engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures, either directly, or through subsidiary or associated corporations.

As to (5d) and (5e) admit the allegations therein.

5. As to (6), (7), (9), (10) and (11), state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

[fol. 3270] 6. As to (15a),[1] deny the accuracy of the definition therein and allege that the term "producer" as therein defined includes persons, partnerships, associations and corporations which are seldom, if ever, referred to in the industry as producers;

As to (15b) and (15c), deny the accuracy of the definitions thereon;

As to (15d), admit the accuracy of the definition therein;

As to (15e), state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof;

As to (15f) and (15g), admit the accuracy of the definitions therein;

7. As to (16a), admit the accuracy of the definition therein;

As to (16b) and (16c), allege that some companies that are engaged in the distribution of motion pictures are sometimes referred to in the industry as "major distributors," and that other companies so engaged are sometimes referred to as "independent distributors" and, except as so alleged, state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof;

As to (16d), admit that the term "state rights distribution" is sometimes used in the industry, but, except as so admitted, state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof;

As to (16e), admit the accuracy of the description therein, except they deny that branch exchanges operated by RKO [fol. 3271] Radio Pictures, Inc., solicit license agreements, but allege that they solicit applications for license agreements.

As to (16f), admit that the term "franchise" is sometimes used in the industry to describe a license agreement, or series of license agreements entered into as part of the same transaction, for the exhibition by the Licensee of the motion pictures released by the licensor during more than one exhibition season, and, except as so admitted, deny the remaining allegations therein.

As to (16g), deny the accuracy of the definition therein.

8. As to (17a), admit the accuracy of the definition therein;

As to (17b) and (17c), state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

As to (17d), state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

As to (17e), deny the accuracy of the definition therein.

As to (17f), admit that a group of theatres which is owned, controlled or managed by the same person, partnership or corporation is sometimes referred to as "a theatre circuit," and except as so admitted, state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations therein;

As to (17g) and (17i), admit the accuracy of the definitions therein;

As to (17h), deny the accuracy of the definition therein. [fol. 3272] As to (17j), admit that the term "release" when used as a verbal noun, is used in the industry as therein defined;

As to (17k) and (17m), admit that terms national release date and pre-release are used in the industry as therein defined;

As to (17-L), deny the accuracy of the definition therein, but allege that a trade showing is the exhibition of a feature at a theatre or projection room for the benefit of the trade generally;

As to (17n), deny the accuracy of the definition therein.

As to (17-o), RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., admits the accuracy of the definition therein; the other answering defendants state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof;

As to (17p), (17q) and (17r), allege that "first-run" in the first exhibition of a motion picture after national release in a community or area; second-run is the exhibition of a motion picture in such community or area next subsequent to its first-run exhibition, and that subsequent-run is an exhibition of a motion picture in such area or community subsequent to its first-run, but usually after second-run; and, except as so alleged, deny each and every allegation therein;

As to (17s), allege that clearance means the period of time fixed by agreement between an exhibitor and a distributor prior to the expiration of which a feature licensed for prior exhibition in a theatre may not be exhibited in another theatre or theatres, and, except as so alleged, deny the accuracy of the definition therein;

[fol. 3273] As to (17t), state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

9. As to (18) through (55), state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

10. As to (56), admitt hat Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, the corporation therein referred to, was incorporated under the laws of the State of Maryland on October 25, 1928, and that since its incorporation it has been primarily a holding company, i. e., owning stock in subsidiaries that either directly, or through other companies, are engaged in the production, distribution or exhibition of motion pictures. Shortly after its organization it acquired substantially all of the common stock of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation and FBO Productions, Inc. Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation owned stock in other corporations that were engaged in operating theatres for the exhibition of vaudeville and motion pictures. Subsidiaries of FBO Productions, Inc., were engaged in producing and distributing motion pictures. Except as so alleged, they state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations therein.

11. As to (57), admit that Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation was incorporated on January 28, 1928, under the laws of the State of Delaware, and on to wit, February 16, 1928, acquired as of January 1, 1928, all the issued and outstanding stock of B. F. Keith Corporation and approximately 90% of the issued and outstanding common stock of Orpheum Circuit, Inc. B. F. Keith Corporation and Orpheum Circuit, Inc. owned or operated directly, or owned stock in corporations which owned or operated a number of theatres in various cities in the eastern part, and in the mid-[fol. 3274] western and western parts, respectively, of the United States, which prior thereto were engaged primarily in the exhibition of vaudeville, either alone or in conjunction with the exhibition of motion pictures. Except as so alleged, they deny the allegations therein.

12. As to (58), allege that subsequent to its incorporation and in addition to the acquisition of stock in Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation and Orpheum Circuit, Inc., as hereinabove alleged, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation acquired the ownership of stock in other companies which were either directly engaged in the business of showing vaudeville and/or exhibiting motion pictures, or owned stock in corporations engaged therein. Two of such companies were the RKO Proctor Corporation and the RKO Midwest Corporation. The RKO Midwest Corporation or companies subsidiary thereto, owned the fee, held the leasehold or operated theatres in Ohio and Michigan. The RKO Proctor Corporation, or companies subsidiary thereto, owned the fee, held the leasehold or operated theatres in the New York metropolitan district and upstate New York. Except as so alleged, they deny the allegations therein.

13. As to (59), Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and the answering defendants engaged in exhibition admit that they and KAO, or subsidiaries thereof, operate the following number of theatres in the following cities:

City	No. of Theatres
Boston	2
Champaign, Ill.	2
Chicago	1
Cincinnati, Ohio	9
Cleveland, Ohio	3
Columbus, Ohio	2
Dayton, Ohio	3
Denver, Colorado	1

and allege that they and KAO, or subsidiaries thereof, own the fee or the leasehold in or have an interest in the management or operation of, or in the proceeds or profits from the operation of, or have other types of interest, by the ownership of stock and otherwise, in other theatres not referred to above which none of them operate, or control the operation thereof; and state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the classification between "metropolitan first-run theatres" and "other theatres." Except as admitted and alleged, they deny the allegations therein.

RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

14. As to (60), admit that the name of FBO Productions, Inc., was ultimately changed to RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., and that RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., maintains studios for [fol. 3276] the production of motion pictures at Hollywood and Culver City, California, and, except as so admitted, state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations therein.

15. As to (61), admit that the corporations that are subsidiaries of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation that are or were engaged in production produced feature motion pictures in the numbers therein alleged which were released during the motion picture exhibition seasons therein set forth except that they produced 41 during the 1938-39 season, and not 49 as alleged, and, except as admitted, state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations therein.

16. As to (62), admit that Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation purchased in January 1931 specified assets of Pathe Exchange, Inc., or subsidiaries thereof, including its newsreel business and certain facilities for the production of motion pictures, and that the assets so purchased were held by various subsidiaries of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation. Except as so admitted, they deny the allegations therein.

17. As to (63), allege that RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., produced an average of 36 short subjects per year. The Van Beuren Corporation, which is now a wholly-owned subsidiary of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation but is in process of dissolution, produced, or had an interest in the production of, an average of 48 short subjects per year [fol. 3277] for the eight-year period ending 1937-38. During the same period Pathe News, Inc., which is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, produced an average of 10 short subjects and 104 newsreels per year. Except as so alleged or admitted, they deny the allegations therein.

18. As to (64), allege that RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., presently maintains exchanges located in 32 cities for the distribution of motion pictures commonly known as "RKO product". During the 1936-37 season, it distributed 47 feature pictures. Usually, in each motion picture season, it distributes a number of pictures which are made by other producers. Except as so alleged, it denies each and every allegation therein.

19. As to (65), admit the allegations therein.

20. As to (66), Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation admits that it has gross assets of approximately $70,000,000, and, except as so admitted, denies each and every allegation therein. The other answering defendants state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

21. As to (67) through (86), state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

22. As to (87), the RKO defendants engaged in exhibition allege that in several cities where they or their subsidiaries own, operate or control theatres, the operation [fol. 3278] of some of these theatres is carried on in conjunction with the operation of theatres in which other defendants herein and other exhibitors have an interest, pursuant to various operating arrangements between them. Such other defendants are subsidiaries of Loew's, Inc., Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and Paramount Pictures, Inc. The nature of such operating relationships varies with the terms of the agreement under which the operation is carried on, and they vary so that they cannot be generically summarized as alleged in the complaint. Except as so alleged, they deny each and every allegation thereof.

The other answering defendants state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

23. As to (88) and (89), state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

24. As to (90) through (99), state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

25. As to (100) they admit that Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation had acquired between its incorporation in 1928 and 1930, the ownership of stock in companies that were engaged or subsidiaries of which were engaged in production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures, and that the distribution system of RKO Distributing Corporation was nation-wide and that some of the pictures produced by RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., in 1930, cost as much as $500,000 or more to produce. Except as so admitted, they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

[fol. 3279] 26. As to (101) Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., deny that they or any predecessor, either alone or in conjunction with any other person, now or ever had any control over the distribution of features costing in excess of $25,000, except in so far as they control their own distribution facilities. They admit that RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., and RKO Distributing Corporation, its predecessor in distribution, has at times distributed feature pictures produced by companies or individuals other than RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. Some of the contracts under which some of such pictures were produced contained provisions for the use by the producer of equipment owned by and production talent under contract to RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., and for the financing of the cost of production in part by RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., or the borrowing of capital by the producer from other sources. Except as so admitted and denied, deny each and every allegation thereof.

The other answering defendants state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations stated therein.

27. As to (102), RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., admits that equipment and technical and artistic talent necessary to produce profitable pictures has become more costly and that competition for the use of such talent has increased the cost thereof, and except as so admitted deny each and every allegation therein.

The other answering defendants state they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

28. As to (103), Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., deny each and every allegation thereof. The other answering defendants state that they [fol. 3280] are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

29. As to (104), RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., admits that between January 1, 1933, and August 31, 1939, it loaned to other producers 91 stars, featured players, directors, writers, cameramen and other production talent who were under contract to it and received $250 per week or more in salary. Except as so admitted, it denies the allegations in so far as they state to them and state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof, in so far as they relate to other defendants.

The other answering defendants state they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

30. As to (105), state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

31. As to (106), state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof, except that RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., denies the last sentence thereof in so far as it purports to describe the manner in which it licenses its pictures.

32. As to (107), RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., admits that many of the license contracts it negotiates with exhibitors contain the terms relative to a group of features to be released during a releasing season, and admits that its production program is subject to change without notice.

Except as so admitted, denies each and every allegation in so far as they relate to it, and it states it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof, in so far as they relate to other defendants.

[fol. 3281] The other answering defendants state they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

33. As to (108), RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., admits that the quality of the various feature pictures it distributes, varies widely in box-office attraction, and that in many of its license agreements, prices for pictures are grouped in various brackets in accordance with anticipated quality and in consequence of the bargaining between buyer and seller. It admits that the features in the top price bracket sometimes have rental terms based upon a percentage of the box-office receipts, and sometimes against a guaranteed figure, and those in the lowest price bracket are ordinarily licensed for a flat rental. It admits that the pictures in each bracket are sometimes untitled and unidentified and that, as a result, in such cases a picture is not allocated to a price bracket until it is about to be or after it is released. It admits that the amount of gross revenue and number of bookings received by the features it distributes in the same season vary widely.

Except as so admitted, denies each and every allegation in so far as they relate to it and states it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof in so far as they relate to the other defendants.

The other answering defendants state they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

34. As to (109), RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., denies that RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., releases each year a certain number of feature motion pictures which most of the exhibitors do not wish to exhibit at all. It alleges that each license agreement for its pictures is the result of free negotiation with the licensed exhibitor, and that in such negotiations RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. attempts to induce the exhibitor to purchase or license as many features as [fol. 3282] it has or will probably have available for that exhibitor, consistent with its sound business judgment.

It denies that RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., attempts to or does or has compelled any exhibitor to commit himself to buy or play any features which he does not want or cannot profitably exhibit, either as a condition of licensing other features which he does want, and can profitably exhibit, or any other condition. Except as so admitted, alleged and denied, deny each and every allegation therein.

The other answering defendants state they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations therein.

35. As to (110), state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations therein.

36. As to (111), admit the allegations therein.

37. As to (112), state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations therein.

38. As to (113), deny each and every allegation therein, except that RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., admits it does not make license agreements with one exhibitor that are inconsistent with rights granted by contract to another exhibitor.

39. As to (114) and (115), state that they were without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations therein, except that they deny the allegations in (115) in so far as they relate to the period between 1927 and 1931.

40. As to (116), deny each and every allegation therein [fol. 3283] in so far as they relate to them, and state that they are without knowledge or information in so far as they relate to other defendants, except that Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., admit that, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the plaintiff, RKO Distributing Corporation participated in conferences to establish the basis for clearance schedules by voluntary agreement of all parties affected.

41. As to (117), they admit that the United States District Court for the District of Nebraska rendered a decision on July 2nd, 1932, in a case entitled Youngclaus v. Omaha Film Board of Trade, et. al., in which RKO Distributing Corporation was a party defendant, (which decision is reported in 60 F. (2d) 538), that an agreement among distributors which is therein set forth restrained trade in violation of the Sherman Act, and except as so admitted, deny each and every allegation therein, and allege that they have at all times refrained from entering into any agreement, express or otherwise, as therein alleged.

42. As to (118), RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., admits that a Code for the motion picture industry was duly adopted pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act, and except as so admitted, denies each and every allegation therein, in so far as they relate to it, and alleges that it has made no effort, by express agreement with other distributors, or otherwise, to establish uniform clearance schedules or zones.

The other answering defendants state that they were without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

43. As to (119) and (120), deny each and every allegation therein in so far as they relate to them respectively.

44. As to (121), deny each and every allegation therein, except they admit that most of the license agreements [fol. 3284] entered into by them, either as licensor or licensee, cover only a single season's output of pictures of the licensor, but that at times they have entered into license agreements for a period of more than a single season, commonly known as franchises. RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., have entered into such license agreements not only with "affiliated" and "unaffiliated" circuit exhibitors, but also "independent" exhibitors. They state that they are without knowledge or information as to the allegations relative to the periods of franchises, or the maximum amount of film rental, or number of theatres or localities involved in "a single franchise."

45. As to (122), admit that a franchise, or a license of the exhibition of motion pictures for more than a single season, like any license agreement for motion pictures, is advantageous to the licensee in that it assures the licensee a supply of motion pictures therein licensed, provided the licensor is able to perform; and allege that they, as licensor or licensee, grant or are granted rights under a franchise, the franchisor is unable to grant to other exhibitors during the term thereof rights inconsistent therewith. Except as so admitted, deny each and every allegation therein in so far as they relate to them and state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief in so far as they relate to other defendants.

46. As to (123), deny each and every allegation in so far as they relate to them, and state they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof, in so far as they relate to the other defendants.

47. As to (124), admit that an exhibitor, in negotiating a license agreement, attempts to secure the most favorable terms for all the theatres for which he is negotiating, and admit that they either, as licensor or licensee as the case [fol. 3285] may be, at times negotiate at the same time in respect to all the theatres that compose a circuit. They deny that as a result of the matters therein alleged, an independent exhibitor, operating a single theatre or a large number of theatres in competition with a circuit, is unable to compete for the privilege of licensing the films distributed by RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., (or pictures distributed by other distributors for which an answering defendant engaged in exhibition is negotiating), and deny that such independent exhibitor is frequently or ever excluded from consideration as a prior-run outlet in the manner or as a result of the matters therein alleged; and, except as so admitted and denied, deny the allegations therein.

48. As to (125), deny each and every allegation therein.

49. As to (126), admit that prior to national release date a number of prints of a feature are delivered to each branch exchange of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., in accordance with the number of accounts in that exchange and the prospective popularity of the picture. Upon or shortly after the arrival of the prints at the exchange, the feature is sometimes privately screened, or exhibited for the benefit of the salesmen and the trade. Thereafter, if the exhibitor who has, by license agreement, the right to exhibit the feature pictures distributed by RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., in that area on first-run, books said feature, it is exhibited first in that exhibitor's theatre. Upon its return to the exchange office, after completion of first-run exhibition, it is exhibited by other exhibitors in that area in accordance with their respective playing positions as provided for by their license agreements with the distributor. If the first-run exhibitor elects not to book or play said feature, RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. either attempts to liecense it to another [fol. 3286] exhibitor to be exhibited on first-run or makes it available to be booked by the subsequent-run exhibitors who have contracted for its use, in the order established by their respective license agreements. They admit that at times the pictures they reject as first-run licensees, or, as to RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., the pictures which its first-run licensees reject, are inferior as box-office attractions to those selected. Except as so admitted, they deny each and every allegation therein.

50. As to (127), deny each and every allegation therein except that RKO Raoid Pictures admits that licensees having the right to exhibit its pictures first-run usually charge higher admission prices than its subsequent run exhibitors in that area. They state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief in so far as the allegations relate to other defendants.

51. As to (128), RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., admits that the admission prices charged by exhibitors on both first and subsequent run are a factor it considers in determining the run and clearance on which it will license an exhibitor and that its first-run exhibitors usually charge the highest admission prices in their area and that the run of subsequent-run exhibitors tends to vary with the relative admission price charged, and except as so admitted, deny each and every allegation therein.

RKO Proctor Corporation and RKO Midwest Corporation admit that, in respect to first-run license agreements they negotiate with distributors who are defendants herein, the admission prices they propose to charge are a factor in securing first-run exhibition, and that, in the areas where they operate theatres, the run of subsequent-run exhibitors tends to vary with the relative admission prices charged, and, except as so admitted, deny each and every allegation therein.

Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation states it is without [fol. 3287] knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

52. As to (129) and (130), deny each and every allegation therein.

53. As to (131) and (132), state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

54. As to (133), Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., admit the allegations therein in so far as they purport to describe the production of feature length pictures by RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., except that they state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations that personnel employed in such production is in many instances drawn across state lines from all parts of the nation, and that costumes and raw materials entering into the making of pictures in many instances are manufactured outside the State of California and shipped across state lines to the studios. The other answering defendants state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations therein.

55. As to (134), state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations therein.

56. As to (135), Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., admit and allege that, as to pictures produced by RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., after the scenes going to make up a motion picture have been photographed, the negatives of such pictures are developed by an independent contractor in California. The negative is then cut, fixed, edited, and then usually shipped by it to [fol. 3288] New York or New Jersey, where positive prints are made by another independent contractor. They admit that the number of positive prints so made varies between fifty (50) and upwards of two hundred and fifty (250), and are made to fulfill the contractual requirements of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., for the picture in question. Said positive prints are the motion picture films which are projected through the motion picture projectors onto the screens of motion picture theatres, and admit that in most cases said positive prints are shipped across state lines to the branch exchanges maintained by RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. Except as so admitted, they deny the allegations therein. The other answering defendants state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

57. As to (136), Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., admit the allegations therein in so far as they relate to RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., the other answering defendants state that they lack knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

58. As to (137), Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., admit the allegations therein, in so far as they relate to them, except that they allege that their salesmen solicit exhibits to enter into license agreements both before and after the production program for the ensuing season is arranged and fixed. The other answering defendants state that they lack knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

59. As to (138), Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., admit the allegations therein. The other answering defendants state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

[fol. 3289] 60. As to (139), Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., admit the allegations therein in so far as they relate to RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., except they allege that positive prints are seldom delivered from one exhibitor to another without being returned to the branch exchange for examination and repair and temporary storage. The other answering defendants state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to their truth.

61. As to (140), Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. deny each and every allegation therein, except they admit that the production of motion pictures by RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. involves, in part, the assemblage of personnel, property and material at its studios and on location; that the distribution of motion pictures by RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., involves, in part, the solicitation and making of contracts for the delivery of motion pictures produced and to be produced, the transportation of negative film from California to laboratories in New York and New Jersey where positive prints of said motion pictures are prepared and thence shipped to the film exchanges of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. throughout the United States, the delivery of said prints from said exchanges to and from the motion picture theatres located in the areas served by the respective exchanges, the occasional interchange of said prints between various exchanges of RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., some of which may be located in other states of the United States, and finally the shipment of said prints from said exchanges to New York for scrapping.

The answering defendants that are engaged in exhibition state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof, except that they deny that the operation of a theatre, the exhibition of motion pictures, and the making of arrangements incident [fol. 3290] thereto is interstate commerce or is a part of interstate commerce, or a part of a constant, continuous stream of trade and commerce between the states.

62. As to (141), deny each and every allegation therein.

63. As to (142) through (150), Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. deny each and every allegation therein.

The other answering defendants state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

64. As to (150) through (165), deny each and every allegation therein.

65. As to (166) through (169), Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, and RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. deny each and every allegation therein. The other answering defendants state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

66. As to (170) through (177), deny each and every allegation therein.

67. As to (178), deny each and every allegation therein.

68. As to (170), deny each and every allegation therein.

69. As to (180) through (187), deny each and every allegation therein.

70. Deny each and every allegation in the amended and supplemental complaint that relates to them, which has not been hereinabove admitted, denied, or otherwise answered; and state that they are without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of each and every allegation in said complaint, in so far as they or any of them [fols. 3291-3293] relate to other defendants and have not been hereinabove admitted, denied, or otherwise answered.

Wherefore, having made complete answer to the Amended and Supplemental Complaint herein, the answering defendants respectfully pray that an order be entered dismissing said complaint, with prejudice, and that the answering defendants be awarded costs and disbursements and such other relief as the Court may deem just and proper.

Answer of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation to Amended and Supplemental Complaint

The defendant Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation by its solicitors, Goldwater & Flynn, Esqs., answering the amended and supplemental complaint herein, alleges as follows:

1. Denies each and every allegation of the following paragraphs of the complaint insofar as they relate, or purport to relate, to the answering defendant, and denies that it has any knowledge or information thereof sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations insofar as they relate to the other defendants: 2, 116, 119, 129, 130, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186 and 187.

2. Denies that it has any knowledge or information thereof sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of each and every allegation in the following paragraphs of the complaint: 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 58, 60, 61, 62, 63, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, [fol. 3295] 97, 98, 99, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 117, 118, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 131, 132, 139, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 166, 167, 168, and 169.

3. Denies so much of paragraph 1 of the complaint as alleges, or purports to allege, that the answering defendant has violated, is violating, or intends to violate, Section 1 or Section 2 of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act in the manner alleged in said complaint, or in any other manner, either individually or with any other person, or persons, and denies that it has any knowledge or information thereof sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of each and every other allegation therein.

4. Denies so much of paragraph 5 (c) of the complaint as alleges that Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation is engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures and alleges that Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation owns stock and other securities in corporations which are engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated corporations.

5. Admits that the terms defined in paragraphs 15, 16 and 17 of the complaint may possibly have the meanings therein set forth but denies that said definitions are in all respects accurate or that they are commonly accepted by the motion picture industry.

6. Admits so much of paragraph 56 of the complaint as alleges that Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation was incorporated under the Laws of the State of Maryland on October 25, 1928, and that since its incorporation, it has been primarily a holding company, and that shortly after its organization it acquired substantially all of the common [fol. 3296] stock of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation and FBO Productions, Inc., and alleges that at the time of the acquisition by Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation of the common stock of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation was engaged in the business of holding stock and other securities in corporations engaged in operating theatres for the exhibition of vaudeville and motion pictures, either directly or through subsidiary or associated corporations and further alleges that Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation now holds approximately 99.85% of the common stock of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, and approximately 33.8% of the preferred stock of said corporation, and that the Certificate of Incorporation of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation provides that whenever six quarterly dividends on the preferred stock shall be unpaid, in whole or in part, the entire voting power for the election of a majority of the Board of Directors shall be exclusively vested in the preferred stock until all such arrears have been paid; that six quarterly dividends on the preferred stock of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation have been in arrears since on or about April 1, 1933; that whether or not Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation has the right to elect a majority of the Board of Directors of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation depends upon whether it is entitled to cumula- the question has never been submitted to the Courts; that certain large holders of preferred stock of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation have challenged such right and that the question has never ben submitted to the Courts; that the Board of Directors of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation, since June 19, 1933, has been selected by mutual agreement between the principal stockholding groups; that since 1933 Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation has not controlled the Board of Directors of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation or the activities of that Corporation. Except [fol. 3297] as hereinabove admitted and alleged, the answering defendant denies that it has knowledge or information thereof sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in said paragraph 56 of the complaint.

7. Admits so much of paragraph 57 of the complaint as alleges that Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation was incorporated on January 28, 1938 under the Laws of the State of Delaware and on, to-wit, February 16, 1928, acquired as of January 1, 1928 all of the issued and outstanding stock of B. F. Keith Corporation, and approximately 90% of the issued and outstanding common stock of Orpheum Circuit, Inc. and that B. F. Keith Corporation owned or operated, directly, or owned stock in corporations which owned or operated, a number of theatres in various cities in the eastern part of the United States which, prior thereto, were engaged primarily in the exhibition of vaudeville, either alone or in conjunction with the exhibition of motion pictures, and that Orpheum Circuit, Inc. owned or operated directly, or owned stock in corporations which either owned or operated theatres located in the midwestern and western parts of the United States, and except as so admitted and alleged, denies the allegation of paragraph 57 of the complaint.

8. Denies so much of paragraph 59 of the complaint as alleges, or purports to allege, that those theatres owned, operated or controlled by subsidiaries of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation which are included in tables (a) and (b) of said paragraph, are now operated by RKO, and denies that it has any knowledge or information thereof sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the other allegations of said paragraph 59.

9. Admits so much of paragraph 64 of the complaint as alleges that RKO product is distributed by RKO Radio Pictures, Inc. and denies that it has any knowledge or infor- [fol. 3298] mation thereof sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the other allegations thereof.

10. Admits so much of paragraph 87 of the complaint as alleges that in the cities where the subsidiaries of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation own, operate or control theatres, the operation of some of these theatres is carried on in conjunction with the operation of theatres in which the other defendants herein, and other exhibitors, have an interest, pursuant to various operating arrangements between them and, except as so admitted, denies each and every allegation thereof.

11. Admits so much of paragraph 100 of the complaint as alleges that Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation had acquired, between its incorporation in 1928 and 1930, the ownership of stock in companies that were engaged in production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures, and except as so admitted, denies that it has any knowledge or information thereof sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations thereof.

12. Denies so much of paragraphs 140 and 141 of the complaint as allege, or purport to allege, that the exhibition branch of the motion picture industry is either in, or directly affects trade or commerce among the several states.

Further Answering the Complaint, and As a First, Separate Defense Thereto, Defendant Alleges:

13. That this Court has no jurisdiction over the matters and things alleged in the complaint.

[fols. 3299-3300] Further Answering the Complaint, and As a Second, Separate Defense Thereto, Defendant Alleges:

14. That the petition fails to state a claim as to the answering defendant on which any relief can be granted.

Wherefore, having made complete answer to the complaint, the answering defendant prays that this complaint be dismissed as to it, and that it be awarded its costs and disbursements and such other and further relief as to the Court may seem just and proper in the premises.

Dated, New York, N. Y., November 14th, 1940.

Answer of Defendants Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., et al. to Amend and Supplemental Complaint

Defendants Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., Vitagraph, Inc., and Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation, by R. W. Berkins, their solicitor, for their answer to the amended and supplemental complaint, hereinafter referred to as "complaint," respectfully allege:

1. Answering paragraph 1 of the complaint, defendants deny that they or any of them have jointly or severally violated section 1 or 2 or any of the sections of the Act of Congress commonly known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

2. Deny each and every allegation in paragraph "2." of the complaint.

3. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph 3 (a) and (b), 4 and 5 (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e) of the complaint.

4. Deny each and every allegation in paragraphs 6 (a) and 6 (b) of the complaint except admit that defendant Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, having its principal place of business at 321 West 44th Street, New [fol. 3302] York, New York; that said defendant is engaged in the business of producing motion pictures, and it and some of its subsidiary and associated corporations are engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures in various parts of the United States; that Vitagraph, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York with a place of business at 321 West 44th Street, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures in the United States.

5. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraphs 7 (a) and (b), 9 (a), (b) and (c), 10 (a), (b), (c) and (d), and 11 of the complaint.

6. Admit that the terms "major producer" as defined in paragraph "15 (b)" of the complaint and "major distributor" as defined in paragraph "16 (b)" of the complaint are sometimes loosely used by some persons, but deny that said definitions are applicable exclusively to the defendants herein.

7. Deny each and every allegation in paragraphs 15 (c) and (e) of the complaint.

8. Deny each and every allegation in paragraph "16 (c)" of the complaint.

9. Deny each and every allegation in paragraph "16 (d)" of the complaint, except admit that some state rights distributors do not operate a system of national exchanges but acquire the right to distribute motion pictures in a particular state or territory.

10. Admit the allegations in paragraph "16 (e)" of the complaint, except deny that license agreements are solicited at any Vitagraph exchange, but admit that applications for [fol. 3303] license agreements are solicited at Vitagraph exchanges.

11. Admit that the term "franchise" as defined in paragraph "16 (f)" of the complaint is sometimes loosely used by some persons.

12. Deny each and every allegation in paragraph "16 (g)" of the complaint.

13. Deny each and every allegation in paragraph 17 (b) and (c) of the complaint.

14. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "17 (d)" of the complaint.

15. Deny each and every allegation in paragraph "17 (e)" of the complaint.

16. Deny each and every allegation in paragraphs 17 (f), (g) and (h) of the complaint.

17. Admit that the term "motion picture season" as defined in paragraph "17 (i)" of the complaint is sometimes loosely used by some persons.

18. Deny each and every allegation in paragraph "17 (l)" of the complaint, except admit that a "trade showing" is the exhibition of a motion picture at a theatre or projection room for the benefit of exhibitors generally.

19. Deny each and every allegation in paragraph "17 (n)" of the complaint.

20. Admit the allegations of paragraph "17 (p)" of the complaint except deny that such first run exhibition is necessarily after national release.

21. Deny each and every allegation in paragraph "17 (s)" of the complaint.

22. Deny each and every allegation in paragraph "17 (t)" of the complaint, except admit that a "zone" is a specified geographical area.

[fol. 3304] 23. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraphs 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25 (a) and (b), 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32 (a) and (b) and 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45 (a) and (b) and 46 of the complaint.

24. Deny each and every allegation in paragraph "47" of the complaint, except admit that Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., was incorporated in 1923, for the purposes enumerated in its certificate of incorporation, which include among others, producing, distributing and exhibiting motion pictures, and admit the second sentence of said paragraph.

25. Deny each and every allegation in paragraph "49" of the complaint, except admit that Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., is one of the principal producing companies in the motion picture industry and maintains production facilities at Burbank, Calif., and it or its subsidiary or associated corporations maintain production facilities at Brooklyn, N. Y.; that the number of feature motion pictures produced by it or any subsidiary or associated corporations for the nine year period ending with the 1938-39 season, is indicated by the following tabulation:

Season	Feature Motion Pictures
1930-31	70
1931-32	56

1935-36	58
1936-37	58
1937-38	52
1938-39	53

[fol. 3305] 26. Deny each and every allegation in paragraph 54 (a) and (b) of the complaint except admit that Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. or its subsidiary and associated corporations operate the following number of theatres in the following states:

California	12
Connecticut	31
Delaware	6
Washington, D. C.	19
Illinois	16
Indiana	2
Maryland	9
Massachusetts	16
New Jersey	63
New York	27
Ohio	30
Oklahoma	3
Oregon	2
Pennsylvania	162
Tennessee	1
Virginia	8
Washington	3
West Virginia	11
Wisconsin	12

27. Deny each and every allegation in paragraph "55" of the complaint.

28. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraphs 56, 57, 58, 59 (a) and (b), 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85 and 86 of the complaint.

29. Deny that they have any knowledge or information [fol. 3306] sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraphs 87, 88, 89 of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraphs in so far as it relates to these defendants, except admit that in addition to the theatres listed in paragraph "26" of this answer, certain subsidiary and associated corporations of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. have interests in the operation of certain theatres owned or operated by others including some of the producer-exhibitor defendants, pursuant to the terms of certain agreements.

30. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraphs 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98 and 99 of the complaint.

31. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraphs 100 and 101 of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraphs in so far as it relates to these defendants, except admit that in 1930, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. was engaged in the business of producing motion pictures; that Vitagraph, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of said Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. was engaged in the business of distributing pictures, and Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. and some of its subsidiary and associated corporation- were engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures; that in 1930, some of the motion pictures produced by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. or by its associated and affiliated corporations cost as much as $500,000.00 or more; that Vitagraph, Inc. has distributed motion pictures not produced by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. or its [fol. 3307] subsidiary or affiliated corporation, pursuant to arrangements which at times might include the use of equipment owned by, or talent under contract to such companies, and which might at times include the financing of those productions directly or indirectly by such companies.

32. Deny each and every allegation in paragraphs 102, and 103 of the complaint, except admit that equipment and technical and artistic talent and the use thereof, necessary to these defendants to produce profitable motion pictures have become more costly, because of the competition therefor.

33. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations paragraph "104" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraph in so far as it relates to these defendants, except admit that during the period January 1, 1934 to September 2, 1939 Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. loaned to other producers, in 235 instances, stars, feature players, directors, writers, cameramen and other production personnel.

34. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "105" of the complaint.

35. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations in paragraph "106" of the complaint, in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraph in so far as it relates to these defendants.

36. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "107" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every [fol. 3308] allegation in said paragraph in so far as it relates to these defendants except admit that some of the license contracts of Vitagraph, Inc. contain the terms on which a group of motion pictures are to be exhibited over a period of at least one year; that some of the contracts of Vitagraph, Inc. cover all or a lesser number of motion pictures released during the one year period or a lesser number to be selected from all released as and when released; that some licenses are negotiated prior to the commencement of each motion picture season before any of the motion pictures covered have been released; that the production programs announced by Vitagraph, Inc. at the beginning of each motion picture season are subject to change without notice to any exhibitor.

37. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "108" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraph in so far as it relates to these defendants except admit that the quality of the motion pictures produced by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. varies as box office attractions; and that such motion pictures are priced in various brackets in the license agreement in accordance sometimes with anticipated and sometimes with known quality; that some of its motion pictures may gross more than One Million ($1,000,000.) Dollars in film rental and play in more than ten thousand (10,000) theatres, while other of its motion pictures may gross less than Two Hundred Thousand ($200,000.) Dollars in film rental and play in less than Five Thousand (5,000) theatres; that the motion pictures priced in the highest brackets in license [fol. 3309] agreements sometimes have rental terms based upon a percentage of the box office receipts and sometimes rental terms based upon a percentage of the box office receipts against a guaranteed figure and the motion pictures priced in the lowest priced brackets are sometimes licensed for a flat amount; that the motion pictures included in each price bracket are sometimes untitled and unidentified; that sometimes such motion pictures are allocated to a price bracket after their release; that sometimes differences of opinion arise between exhibitors and Vitagraph with respect to such allocation.

38. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "109" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraph in so far as it relates to these defendants.

39. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "110" of the complaint.

40. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "111" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraph in so far as it relates to these defendants, except admit that some of the license contracts between Vitagraph, Inc. and exhibitors contain provisions with respect to the run on which the motion pictures are available to the exhibitor, the clearance over competing theatres, and the minimum admission prices to be charged when exhibiting such motion pictures.

41. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations [fol. 3310] in paragraph "112" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in so far as it relates to these defendants, except admit that the entertainment value of the motion pictures released in the United States from week to week varies widely; and that many of the theatres operated by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. or its subsidiary or associated corporations play all of the motion pictures it exhibits on the same run with the same clearance and at the same admission price.

42. Deny that they have any knowledge of information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any allegations in paragraph "113" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraph in so far as it relates to these defendants, except admit that the provisions in any license agreement of Vitagraph, Inc. with regard to run and clearance prevent Vitagraph, Inc. from thereafter granting to other exhibitors rights in conflict therewith.

43. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraphs "114" and "115" of the complaint.

44. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "116" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraph in so far as it relates to these defendants, except admit that, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the plaintiff, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. participated in some conferences to establish the basis for clearance schedules by voluntary agreement of all parties affected.

[fol. 3311] 45. Answering paragraph "117" of the complaint, deny that they have entered into any agreements, express or otherwise, with respect to uniform protection and zoning.

46. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "118" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraph in so far as it relates to these defendants, except admit that a code for the motion picture industry was adopted pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act, and deny that these defendants have made any effort to establish uniform clearance and zoning by any agreements.

tions in paragraphs "119" and "120" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraphs in so far as it relates to these defendants.

48. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraphs "121" and "122" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraphs in so far as it relates to these defendants, except admit that some long term franchises are advantageous to the exhibitors with whom they are made in that they grant such exhibitors an assurance of product for the term of such franchise, and that wherever a distributor grants rights under a long term franchise it is thereafter and during said term unable to grant to other exhibitors rights in conflict therewith.

[fol. 3312] 49. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "123" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraph in so far as it relates to these defendants, except admit that some franchises do contain some of the provisions described in said paragraph of the complaint.

50. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraphs "124" and "125" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraphs in so far as it relates to these defendants, except admit that an exhibitor in negotiating for a license agreement seeks to obtain the most favorable terms for the theatre or theatres for which he is negotiating.

51. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "126" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraph in so far as it relates to these defendants, except admit that a number of prints of each motion picture are delivered to each exchange of Vitagraph, Inc. prior to its national release date and are made available by that exchange to the various theatres for which such motion picture has been licensed in accordance with the terms of the license, and are usually returned to that exchange after exhibitions, and that the number of prints of each motion picture delivered to each Vitagraph, Inc. exchange depends upon various factors including the number of theatres served by such exchange.

[fol. 3313] 52. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "127" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraph in so far as it relates to these defendants, except admit that many theatres, operated by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. or its subsidiary or associated corporations, which exhibit motion pictures first run on the area in which such theatres are located charge the highest admission prices in such areas, and the programs of such theatres generally consist of motion pictures of the highest quality which those corporations are able to obtain for said theatres.

53. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "128" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraph in so far as it relates to these defendants, except admit that the admission price charged by an exhibitor is one of the factors considered by Vitagraph, Inc. in negotiating run and clearance.

54. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraphs "129" and "130" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraph in so far as it relates to these defendants.

55. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "131" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allega-[fol. 3314] tion in said paragraph in so far as it relates to these defendants, except admit that of the feature motion pictures played in certain first run theatres operated by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. or its subsidiary or associated corporations in certain of the larger cities approximately

95% were released by distributors who are defendants herein and that said percentage varies with each such theatre.

56. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "132" of the complaint.

57. Answering paragraph "133" of the complaint, these defendants admit that the acts alleged in the first sentence of the paragraph constitute some of the factors entering into the production of motion pictures; deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in the remainder of said paragraph in so far as they relate to the other defendants; and deny said allegations in so far as they relate to these defendants, except admit that most of the personnel involved in the production of motion pictures is usually assembled at the studios in California, and some of the costumes and raw materials entering into the making of motion pictures may be manufactured outside of the State of California and shipped to California.

58. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "134" of the complaint.

59. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "135" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraph in so far as it relates to these [fol. 3315] defendants, except admit that after the scenes going to make up a motion picture have been photographed, they are developed, cut, fixed, edited and arranged at the studios in California; that the positive prints of motion pictures produced by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. are made in the States of California and New York; that usually 165 to 330 positive prints of each feature length motion picture are made for distribution in the United States; that the said positive prints are those which are projected through motion picture projectors to the screens of motion picture theatres, and that some positive prints are shipped across state lines to film exchanges maintained by Vitagraph, Inc. in certain cities in the United States.

60. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "136" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants, and deny each and every allegation in said paragraph in so far as it relates to these defendants, except admit that several months before the commencement of the motion picture season Vitagraph, Inc. announces its program of motion pictures for the coming season; that said program generally describes the motion pictures to be distributed, so far as known, giving, in many instances, their titles, the names of the stars and other featured players, the directors, the story material and such other pertinent material as may be available, subject to exigencies of production; that plans are made for the production of such motion pictures as may not have already been [fol. 3316] completed, and the release of the motion pictures at approximately regular intervals throughout the motion picture season, which begins approximately September 1st of each year.

61. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "137" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraph in so far as it relates to these defendants, except admit that generally, Vitagraph, Inc. proceeds, through its salesmen, who work out of its film exchanges, to solicit applications from exhibitors for a license to exhibit the motion pictures announced in its program; that each such motion picture is copyrighted under the copyright laws of the United States by the producer thereof, and that the solicited applications, when signed by exhibitors, are, by the term thereof, transmitted to the principal office of Vitagraph, Inc. in New York where such applications are either approved or rejected by Vitagraph, Inc.

63. Admit the allegations in paragraph "139" of the complaint except allege that the transportation of film from a prior run theatre to a subsequent run theatre is not a usual occurrence at a Vitagraph, Inc. exchange.

[fol. 3317] 64. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraph "140" of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraph in so far as it relates to these defendants, except admit that the production of motion pictures involves, in part, the assemblage of personnel, property and material at the studios of Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; that the distribution of motion pictures by Vitagraph, Inc. involves, in part, the solicitation and making of contracts for the delivery of motion pictures produced and to be produced, the transportation or positive prints of said motion pictures to the film exchanges of Vitagraph, Inc. in the United States, the distribution of said films from said exchanges to and from the motion picture theatres located in the areas served by the respective exchanges, the occasional interchange of said films between various exchanges of Vitagraph, Inc. some of which may be located in other states of the United States, and finally, the shipment of said films from said exchanges to a point within the state of New York for scrapping.

65. Deny each and every allegation in paragraphs 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149 (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i), (j), (k), (l), (m), (n), (o), and (p), 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, and 169 of the complaint.

66. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraphs 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176 and 177 of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other de[fols. 3318-3319] fendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraphs in so far as it relates to these defendants.

67. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of any of the allegations in paragraphs 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186 and 187 of the complaint in so far as they relate to the other defendants; deny each and every allegation in said paragraphs in so far as it relates to these defendants.

Wherefore, these defendants pray that the complaint herein be dismissed as against them and each of them, and for such other and further relief as to this Court may seem just and proper in the premises.

Dated: November 14, 1940

R. W. Perkins, Solicitor for Defendants, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., Vitagraph, Inc. and Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation.

[fol. 3320] IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

[Title omitted]

COLUMBIA'S ANSWER TO AMENDED AND SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT

The defendants, Columbia Pictures Corporation, Screen Gems, Inc., and Columbia Pictures of Louisiana Incorporated, all hereinafter referred to collectively as "Columbia," answering the amended and supplemental complaint by Schwartz & Frohlich, their attorneys, deny that they have created a monopoly or attempted to create a monopoly, or have restrained or attempted to restrain trade or commerce, or have in any way violated the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

1. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraphs "1," "2," "14," "15(a)" to "(g)" inclusive, "124," "125," "126," "127," "128," "150," "151," "152," "153," "154," "155," "156," "157," "158," "159," "160," "161," "162," "163," "164," "165," "166," "167," "168," "169," "170," "171," "172," "173," "174," "175," "176," "177," "178," "179," "180," "181," "182," "183," "184," "185," "186," and "187."

[fol. 3321] 2. Deny that they have any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in paragraphs "3," "4," "5," (a) (b) (c) (d) (e), "6," (a) (b) (c) "7" (a) (b) "10," (a) (b) (c) (d) "11," "18," "19," "20," "21," "22," "23," "24," "25," "26," "27," "28," "29," "30," "31," "32,"

"33," "34," "35," "36," "37," "38," "39," "40," "41," "42," "43," "44," "45," "46," "47," "48," "49," "50," "51," "52," "53," "54," "55," "56," "57," "58," "59," "60," "61," "62," "63," "64," "65," "66," "73," "74," "75," "76," "77," "78," "79," "80," "81," "82," "83," "84," "85," "86," "87," "88," "89," "90," "91," "92," "93," "94," "95," "96," "97," "98," "99," "100," "105," "106," "129," "130," "131" and "132."

3. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraphs "101," "102," "103," "104," "116," "117," "118," "119," "120," "121," "122," "123," "133," "134," "135," "136," "137," "138," "139," "140," "141," in so far as it may be deemed to relate to the answering defendants, and as to the remaining allegations in said paragraphs deny knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth thereof.

4. Defendants deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph "15" and allege that the proper and correct definition of "major producer" is a producer who is engaged in the business of exhibiting motion pictures, in addition to the production thereof; that the true and correct definition of "independent producer" is a producer who is not engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures in addition to the production thereof; that "features" are motion [fol. 3322] picture photoplays of 5,000 feet (usually five reels) or more in length, other than westerns, serials and special subjects as hereinafter defined; feature pictures are divided however, into those which are known as Class "A" features and those features which do not approach the dignity of Class "A" features; a Class "A" feature is one which is suitable for feature billing in the so-called metropolitan de luxe motion picture theatres of the United States; these Class "A" features usually involve a much more substantial investment than do other features by reason of the use of stories commanding a high purchase price and of directors and artists commanding very large salaries; there are rare exceptions where pictures not involving a substantial investment approach the dignity of Class "A" features because of their unexpected and unusual appeal to the public.

A "Special" picture is a motion picture, other than a photoplay, of an educational, descriptive or geographical nature.

There are other pictures in excess of 5,000 feet which are known as "serial" pictures; such pictures are exhibited in instalments, being continued from week to week in a particular theatre in which such serial is being exhibited.

A short subject is a motion picture, which is usually less than 5,000 feet or five reels.

A "star" is a motion picture actor or actress who is outstanding and whose name alone is the main attraction to any picture in which he or she appears. On the other hand, there are a great many "feature" players who are popular but who are not heavily advertised and whose names are ordinarily subordinate to the title of the picture, the director or the star thereof.

[fol. 3323] A western picture is a feature motion picture, and is so designated whether it is more or less than 5,000 feet in length.

A "Western" picture is one which lays great stress upon cowboys, riding of horses, marksmanship and furious fights between heroes and villians, woven into a romantic story, and depicted in a melodramatic manner.

5. Admit the allegations contained in paragraph "67" and further allege that Columbia is one of the independent producers operating in California and maintaining studio facilities in Hollywood.

6. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraphs "69," "70," and "71," in so far as the same relates to the answering defendants, and deny knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the remaining allegations of said paragraphs; and further answering such paragraphs allege that Columbia produced and distributed the following number of pictures in the following seasons:

1939-40	5	26	10	0	0

[fol. 3324] In addition to the above, Columbia distributed the following number of pictures in the following seasons, which were produced by other independent producers:

The number of feature motion pictures produced by all motion-picture companies has increased in recent years. The fact is that all of the producers in the United States from 1927 down to the date of this suit have increased their production of feature pictures, indicating an increase of independent production rather than a decrease thereof.

Upon information and belief the following number of Class "A" features, other features, western, and special subject films were released by all companies including independent and major producers during the following years:

[fol. 3325]

	Independents	Majors	Total
1927	323	355	678
1928	484	297	781
1929	329	313	642
1930	252	281	533
1931	321	257	578
1932	456	245	701

	Independents	Majors	Total
1933	406	253	659
1934	506	254	760
1935	537	251	788
1936	452	265	717
1937	508	294	802
1938	522	247	769
1939	492	269	761
Total	5588	3581	9169

These figures have a greater significance when it is considered that there was a revolutionary change in the technique of producing and exhibiting motion pictures in 1928. Prior to that year pictures were made without sound effect. They cost less to produce because no money was required for sound reproducing machinery, technicians, and music royalties; and an entirely new type of actor and actress was required. With the introduction of talking pictures many stars of the silent screen were unable to adapt themselves to the new methods.

After 1928 it became necessary to invade the field of legitimate drama, not only for stories but for artists who were skilled in the art of diction and expression. As a result of this situation all of the picture companies were compelled to bid for such artists, and the salaries of the latter were greatly enhanced in comparison to preceding years.

Another burden added to the cost of producing pictures after 1928 was sound and dialogue effect. The companies [fol. 3326] possessing patents upon the machinery and equipment for recording and reproducing sound and dialogue compelled the payment of substantial royalties for the use of their patented machinery and equipment. In the aggregate these royalties have run into many millions of dollars a year. Moreover, it became necessary after 1928 to employ men skilled in the method of recording and reproducing sound and dialogue. This added another burden to production.

There was still another burden, namely, new machinery and equipment, which made it mandatory to completely overhaul and change all motion picture studios. It was also necessary to employ a great many musicians. Substantial expense was incurred in making recordings and retakes of sound effects, music and dialogue, all of which had been unnecessary prior to 1928.

In the field of foreign distribution of motion pictures, it was necessary to have dialogue in foreign languages and superimposed titles. In addition, the laws of many countries require that the sound effects and dialogue be recorded or "dubbed" in the respective foreign countries in which the pictures are being distributed. In addition to that practice, many of the foreign countries required American companies distributing their films therein to purchase films made abroad by subjects or citizens of such foreign countries, referred to as "quotas" and "kontingents." Originally it was possible to comply with these quota or kontingent requirements by purchasing a cheap film made in a foreign country, but more recently there have been enacted in such foreign countries so-called "quality quotas" which require an American distributor of motion pictures to purchase a motion picture produced abroad at a cost of a very substantial sum. In most cases it is impossible to distrib- [fol. 3327] ute motion pictures at a profit unless an adequate foreign market is assured. That market has been seriously curtailed because of war in Europe. The major part of the investment in a motion picture is in the production thereof. Once this production cost is incurred, it is necessary to secure as wide a distribution as possible. All this requires a very substantial investment at the outset and an organization familiar with conditions existing throughout the world, and able to distribute pictures effectively in such countries with an eye to these various problems and conditions.

Columbia has substantially increased its production schedule on "A" features, other features and westerns since 1928 as compared with prior years. For the four years of its existence prior to 1928, Columbia produced an average of 22 Class "A" features, other features and westerns at an average annual cost of $729,370. Since 1928, and through the 1939-40 season it has produced an average of 44 * pictures annually at an average annual cost of $5,981,100. The

---

* This includes "A" features, other features, westerns, special subjects and serials.

following figures for the last twelve years show the increased expenditure for production by Columbia:

	Amount Spent in Production
1928-29	$ 1,632,300
1929-30	2,523,400
1930-31	4,182,800
1931-32	3,614,100
1932-33	4,304,400
1933-34	5,198,200
1934-35	6,163,300
1935-36	7,053,800
1936-37	6,728,000
1937-38	11,499,200
1938-39	9,505,300
1939-40	9,368,600

[fol. 3328] In order to carry out this increase, Columbia was compelled to invest a larger amount of capital. It spends a great deal more money in producing pictures at the present time than it spent years ago. Notwithstanding the tremendous amounts of capital necessary to finance the production and distribution of motion pictures, there has been an increase in independent production not only by Columbia, but by other independent producers.

Many pictures of independent producers have had wide distribution throughout the United States, including metropolitan areas.

Moreover, the number of pictures produced each year is no index of the increased activities of producers in recent years. As a rule the feature pictures within recent years are anywhere from five to ten reels in length, whereas prior to 1928 features were, as a rule, five reels in length, with a few exceptions. In the production of a feature picture a great many scenes are taken and a great deal of footage is consumed which never sees the light of day. This added cost is brought about by the desire of producers to perfect a more artistic result. It is not uncommon for a producer to make 100,000 feet of film, which is subsequently edited and cut down to ten reels and oftentimes less.

7. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraph "16" and allege that the true definition of a "major distributor" is a distributor who is engaged in the business of producing and exhibiting motion pictures, in addition to the distribution thereof.

The true definition of an "independent distributor" is one who is not engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures. [fol 3329] The true definition of "block booking" is the licensing under a single contract of all or a percentage or part of the pictures to be released by the producer or distributor during a given season.

A. Answering the allegations contained in paragraph "17", defendants deny the allegations therein contained, and allege that the definitions contained in that paragraph are of no practical value and are not currently used in the motion picture industry; that the true distinction between theatres depends not upon their affiliation or lack of affiliation with a producer of motion pictures, but rather upon whether the management of or booking for such theatre is done on the basis of one single theatre or on the basis of managing or booking for several theatres. In the former case, the theatre and the owner thereof is referred to as an "independent"; in the latter case the theatre or the owner threof is referred to as a "circuit".

9. Deny any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to paragraph "107," so far as it relates to the other defendants, and denies same in so far as it may be deemed to relate to the answering defendants except that the answering defendants admit that from time to time separate contracts are made with exhibitors for the exhibition of a varying number of photoplays released by Columbia and that such license agreements are negotiated at varying times during a so-called "motion picture season."

10. Deny each and every allegation of paragraph "108," except that defendants admit that the quality of feature pictures, as box-office attractions, varies widely.

[fol. 3330] 11. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraphs "109," "110," "111," "112," "113," "114," "115," except that defendant admits that Columbia makes exhibition license agreements with various exhibitors for the exhibition of feature pictures distributed by Columbia.

12. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraphs "140," "141" insofar as same allege that production and exhibition of motion pictures is in or is a part of interstate trade or commerce.

13. Deny each and every allegation contained in paragraphs "142," "143," "144," "145," "146," "147," "148," and "149," and allege that these defendants do not dominate and control, directly or indirectly, any branch of the motion picture business, and have not and do not combine, conspire or participate with any other persons, firms or corporations in any attempt to secure the control thereof, directly or indirectly. Columbia is an independent producer and distributor of motion pictures, and has been such since its organization in 1924. At its inception its capital stock consisted of 2,500 shares of common stock of the par value of $100 each.

From the outset, Columbia found it very difficult to secure proper distribution for its pictures. Much as it desired to limit its operations solely to the field of production, it was compelled by reason of the chaotic state of the distribution field, to establish its own exchanges in many cities throughout the United States. It was producing pictures on a modest scale but was finding it difficult to market its product. It was completely at the mercy of local film exchanges who either refused contracts for the distribution of its pictures [fol. 3331] or who offered Columbia such harsh and inequitable terms, that the corporation could not make a fair profit upon its invested capital. These contracts between the corporation and film exchanges throughout the United States were, as a rule, made on a percentage basis, the distributor charging a certain percentage of the gross receipts from exhibitors as a distribution charge. In a great many cases these local film exchanges furnished improper and inadequate statements of the gross receipts from exhibitors. The task of checking up on these receipts was burdensome and in many cases, impossible; in some cases, the distributors went out of business or became insolvent before any adequate check-up could be made. This method of distribution was haphazard, inefficient and costly. Among the factors which brought about the acquisition of Columbia's own distributing agencies were:

(a) dissatisfaction with the method of distribution;

(b) the uncertainty entertained by Columbia that it was getting its proper shares of the monies resulting from the distribution of the picture;

(c) the inability to market all pictures produced;

(d) situations developed where one year's product would be turned over to certain state-right distributors while the next year's product would be turned over to another, and so on, which made it very difficult to ascertain or anticipate what results could be secured from the distribution in order to secure adequate financing for future pictures; and [fol. 3332] (e) the establishment by Columbia of its own distributing agencies throughout the country would not only secure to Columbia a nation-wide distribution of the pictures but also, no part of the proceeds would have to be paid to state-right distributors.

Although Columbia was not in a position at the time to finance its own exchanges, the need for distributing its own pictures was so great that the corporation was compelled to arrange for finances in order to enable it to establish and operate its own exchanges for distribution.

In March of 1929, Columbia entered into an agreement with bankers in the City of New York, for a financing plan. Said bankers undertook to underwrite for the company, 25,000 shares of no par value preferred stock. The charter of the company was amended to provide for an authorized capital stock of 300,000 shares of common and 25,000 shares of preferred. The corporation sold to the bankers the 25,000 shares of preferred stock for $750,000, and the bankers agreed to sell said stock at public offering, which they did.

With the moneys so received from the bankers, Columbia organized and established its own film exchanges for distribution in various cities throughout the United States. For the first time it was enabled to secure adequate and fair returns from the distribution of its pictures. The distribution of motion pictures is wholly unlike the sale of other merchandise to independent jobbers. In the first place, motion pictures are never sold outright. They are merely licensed for limited periods and for certain purposes. Secondly, where distribution is made to an independent agency, such distribution is on a percentage basis and not on the [fol. 3333] basis of an outright sale. The necessities of the motion picture business, as it is and must be conducted at the present time, require that a producer of motion pictures to be successful, must invest in facilities for the distribution of its own pictures.

Columbia having found that distribution of its pictures by itself was the only practical means of marketing its pictures, decided to extend the field of distribution to European countries. For that purpose it required further capital. Accordingly, in April, 1930, Columbia sold additional shares of stock to bankers for $1,600,000, and such bankers, in turn, sold such stock to the public. There are now over 1,000 investors of Columbia scattered throughout the country. The proceeds of this sale were utilized by Columbia in opening up foreign exchanges for distribution and for other corporate purposes. At no time, since 1929, has Columbia distributed its pictures through any of the other defendants herein, nor has Columbia distributed pictures produced by any of the other defendants through Columbia exchanges. It has, however, distributed, since 1929, a substantial number of pictures produced by other independent producing companies. Such pictures have consisted from time to time, of Class "A" features, other features, shorts, comedies, westerns, serials and special subjects.

In negotiating for and entering into contracts for the distribution of the pictures of independent producers, Columbia has encountered vigorous competition from other distributors of motion pictures. Independent producers are constantly changing from one company to another in contracting for the distribution of their pictures.

Examples of such changes from one distributor to another are exceedingly numerous. A few will suffice to show the practice.

[fol. 3334] Walt Disney, the creator of famous cartoon characters, such as "Mickey Mouse," "Minnie Mouse," "Donald Duck," and more recently "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," "Pinnochio" and "Fantasia," originally distributed his pictures through one Pat Powers. Thereafter he made a contract for distribution through Columbia, and subsequently with United Artists Corporation and presently with R.K.O. Radio Pictures, Inc. Many distributing companies are now competing for the distribution of Walt Disney's future pictures.

David Loew, a famous independent producer, originally distributed his pictures through R.K.O. Radio Pictures, Inc.; then distributed through Columbia; he is now distributing through United Artists.

Walter Wanger, a producer of note, produced pictures for Paramount Pictures, Inc., for a period of approximately ten years; then for Columbia; later for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation; then back to Paramount Pictures, Inc. His pictures are presently being distributed by United Artists Corporation.

Emanuel Cohn, whose producing unit is known as the Major Producing Corporation, originally produced pictures for Paramount Pictures, Inc.; then for Columbia; then returned to Paramount Pictures, Inc., and is now negotiating with several companies for the future distribution of his pictures.

B. P. Schulberg, who for many years was in charge of production at Paramount Pictures, Inc., had his pictures distributed by Columbia after he severed his connection with Paramount Pictures, Inc.; more recently his pictures have been distributed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation.

Hal Roach, producer of a unique type of picture, originally had his pictures distributed by Pathe Exchange, Inc.; at present he distributes some of his pictures through Metro-[fol. 3335] Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation, and some of his pictures through United Artists Corporation.

Sol Lesser, whose producing unit is known as Principal Productions, Inc., originally distributed through First National Pictures, Inc., and through various states rights organizations; he now divides the distribution of his pictures between 20th-Century-Fox Film Corporation and R.K.O. Radio Pictures, Inc., and has also distributed several pictures through Columbia.

David Selznick, originally produced pictures for R.K.O. Radio Pictures, Inc.; then switched to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation, and finally distributed through United Artists Corporation. He distributed his picture "Gone With The Wind," through Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation.

Many independent producers contract with Columbia and other producers on a one-picture basis, and such producers decide solely for themselves the company for which they will produce their pictures or through which they will have their pictures distributed. All the companies are in competition for the pictures of such independent producers.

At no time has Columbia extended to any of the other defendants the facilities of its distribution exchanges in any shape, manner or form, directly or indirectly. The business of production and distribution engaged in by Columbia has been separate and distinct from the business of the other defendants herein; and at no time, has Columbia permitted or suffered any other defendant to have any part in its production or distribution business, nor has it at any time or in any way directly or indirectly, had any part in the production or distribution business of the other defendants herein or any of them.

[fol. 3336] National distribution of motion pictures and distribution of motion pictures throughout the world, in order to bring a fair and adequate return to a producer of pictures, requires a substantial investment of capital and an efficient organization. While historically, the motion picture business was split up into three groups, production, distribution and exhibition, as a practical and feasible matter, production and distribution today go hand in hand, each a corollary to the other. There are a substantial number of independent distributors in the United States, but none of these distributors, with the exception of defendant United Artists Corporation, has an efficient organization or a sufficient number of local exchanges throughout the United States and European countries, to afford a world-wide distribution of a motion picture. The invested capital required in the production of motion pictures, especially since the advent of talking pictures in 1928, runs into very substantial amounts, ranging from $100,000 to $2,000,000 for each picture.

The average cost of Class "A" features released by Columbia each season from 1932-33 to 1938-39 is as follows:

1932-3	1933-4	1934-5	1935-6	1936-7
$202,900	$347,200	$456,800	$587,000	$517,200
	1937-8	1938-9	1939-40
	$733,400	$737,300	$883,500

The average cost of other features released by Columbia during the same period is as follows:

1932-3	1933-4	1934-5	1935-6	1936-7
$101,100	$ 94,700	$113,700	$126,000	$100,800
	1937-8	1938-9	1939-40
	$112,000	$102,100	$129,800

[fol. 3337] If Columbia were compelled to desist from distributing its own pictures, it would find that pictures in which it had invested millions of dollars annually, would be incompetently and inefficiently handled, improperly exploited and the financial returns wholly inadequate. It is impossible to secure the necessary financial backing for any producer of motion pictures which does not have an efficient distributing organization. The thousand and more investors in Columbia have made their respective investments in Columbia's securities in reliance upon its ability to distribute its own pictures. All of the motion pictures of Columbia are copyrighted.

The field of production and distribution of motion pictures has gradually merged as a matter of necessity. This has been due to the great advance in business and to the great amount of money invested in the production of pictures which make it requisite that producers have their own facilities for protecting their respective investments. Distribution today is actually a part of production and cannot be divorced from production. It is only when the producer has a very small investment in his motion picture and has little to lose, or when the distributor contributes to the cost of his production, that the producer is willing to entrust its distribution to others.

[fol. 3361] This borrowing and loaning is necessary to enable an independent producer, such as Columbia, to survive. It is necessary to have a certain collaboration between the star, the director, the story and the cameraman. The production of motion pictures is not an ordinary commercial business. Fundamentally the stringent requirements of an art must be met by producers in order to create works that please and entertain the public of the world. Producers must blend the component elements—the story, the artist, the director, the technician—and produce a work to which each element has made its important contribution, and which in the final result carries a universal appeal.

There always has been and still is the greatest competition between motion picture producers for stories, stars, directors and technicians.

In recent years, the motion picture companies have had to compete not only among themselves, but also with radio broadcasting stations, in securing talent. The salaries paid by the radio broadcasting industry have been so attractive to the artists, that the motion picture companies have had to increase the salaries paid by them. During 1937, the radio industry spent approximately $45,000,000 for artists. In fact, the motion picture companies, including Columbia, have been compelled to make their pictures more attractive because of the competition of radio. In many cases, the motion picture companies, including Columbia, have been compelled to negotiate with artists bureaus operated by owners of radio broadcasting stations in securing the services of artists in the production of motion pictures. In such negotiations, Columbia has always acted independently of any other motion picture producers. Columbia has always tried to obtain the best talent for its pictures within [fol. 3362] the limits of its means. The cost of story material has greatly increased over the years, and within recent years it is not uncommon for a producer to pay from $50,000 to $200,000 for a successful Broadway play for picture purposes. Columbia paid $200,000 for the picture rights to "You Can't Take It With You," which was recently released. Other companies have paid similar sums for literary properties.

In acquiring these properties each company is in keen competition with all the other companies, and the motion picture rights to such stories are acquired by the highest bidder. The market is open to anyone who chooses to pay the price demanded, and the motion picture producers bid against each other for successful plays.

Successful novels command high prices for motion picture reproduction. Having acquired a successful work, such as a play or novel, the producers' problem does not end there. He is required to cast his picture with artists who can suitably portray the characters of the work. That is one of the most difficult problems in production. Columbia has but a limited number of artists on its payroll under contract to it. All other producing companies, including the defendant producers, likewise have a limited number of artists on their payroll. No producing company that ever existed could afford to carry on its payroll the vast number of artists from whose ranks could be drawn the particular stars to appear in the works which these producing companies acquire from time to time.

Columbia on the occasions that it has borrowed artists from other producing companies has been compelled to do so because it did not have in its employ the artists who were suitable for the particular production in mind.

[fol. 3363] In 1933, Columbia produced "It Happened One Night." The story was definitely suited to the talents of Clark Gable and Claudette Colbert, neither of whom was under contract with Columbia, which, however, had no artists in its employ suitable for the parts. It was compelled to go to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Company, the employer of Clark Gable, and arrange with that company for his services. Claudette Colbert was then under contract with Paramount, but that contract was about to expire. Columbia finally succeeded in obtaining her services by direct contract with her for a single picture. These two artists made a brilliant success in roles for which they were naturally suited.

For "Mr. Deeds Goes To Town," which was produced in 1936 by Columbia, this defendant borrowed from Paramount Pictures Corporation Gary Cooper, because it had no artist in its own employ who could even remotely fit the leading role of the picture.

The cases above cited are merely illustrative of the many situations that constantly exist.

The same applies with respect to directors. Certain story material can be handled by one director and not by another. Some directors are expert in comedies, some in romances, others in more serious pictures. Columbia cannot afford to have in its employ a sufficient number of outstanding directors with enough versatility to direct every kind of story required by the corporation. Consequently, from time to time Columbia has been compelled to borrow capable directors from other companies in order to insure success.

Another element that very frequently motivates Columbia's engagement of a particular director is the fact that such director is best fitted to direct a particular star. A great many stars prefer to work for their own director who [fol. 3364] is capable of bringing out to the best advantage their talents and abilities, and when such stars are borrowed by Columbia Pictures Corporation it has frequently had to borrow the director to go with the star in order to have harmonious and economical production.

The same holds true with cameramen. These highly trained technicians occupy an important position in the industry, and many directors and stars will only work with a particular cameraman, because the latter has the requisite skill to produce the best lighting effects and to accentuate the best features of the star.

In no case has Columbia ever borrowed a star, director or technician from another producer unless it actually needed the services of such star, director or technician and had none in its own employ who could at the moment substitute for him. Columbia has always found it very difficult to borrow a star, director or technician; on occasions Columbia's requests were refused outright and on occasions it was compelled to pay a very substantial bonus to acquire the services of the individual. When it borrowed Katharine Hepburn from RKO Corporation for the picture "Holiday" it was compelled to pay a consideration of $50,000 over and above the amount that it was required to pay the artist under the contract between them. Columbia is not and never has been a party to any pool for the purpose of exchanging its directors, artists or technicians in the industry.

Columbia has never loaned any of its artists, directors or technicians to any other producer, except where there was an urgent demand on the part of such producer for the particular artist, director or technician.

[fol. 3365] In borrowing or loaning such artist, director or technician it is immaterial to Columbia whether the borrower or lender is a major producer or not. Columbia has never made any distinction between producers in this respect.

The number of artists borrowed by Columbia from the major producers is insignificant compared with the number of such artists which such producers have under contract. Upon information and belief, the major producers had under contract at the date of the commencement of this suit, the following number of actors and actresses (this does not include directors, producers, cameramen or other technicians):

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Corporation	95
Warner Bros.	60
Paramount	59
Twentieth-Century Fox	93
R.K.O. Radio	39
Total	346

During previous years, the major producers had under contract a similar number of actors.

At the commencement of this suit Columbia had under contract only six stars and eight feature players.

During 1937, Columbia borrowed from these companies in the aggregate only six players, and borrowed ten during 1938, eight in 1939, and four in 1940. In previous years, Columbia borrowed a larger number of actors from the major producers, but the number of instances in which Columbia has been able to borrow such actors from the major producers has declined in recent years.

There are many occasions when Columbia has attempted to borrow players from other producers but has been un- [fol. 3366] able to do so for the following reasons: In some instances, the player or the producer did not like the role for which the player was desired. In other instances, the player or the producer did not like other features of the proposed production, for example, the director, the script, the leading man or woman. In some cases, the proposed assignment conflicted with a similar part which the producer having the player under contract planned for such player in one of its own productions, in many cases, the player was not available at the time or for the period desired. Oftentimes the player was of such importance that a loan-out would not be considered except if in exchange it could borrow a player of equal importance or box-office value.

For the Grace Moore picture "I'll take Romance," Columbia tried to borrow James Stewart, Robert Taylor or Franchot Tone from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, but none of them was available. An effort was made to borrow Fred MacMurray from Paramount, but he was likewise unavailable.

For the Grace Moore picture, "When You're In Love," Columbia tried to borrow Fred MacMurray, James Stewart or Franchot Tone for the leading male part, but again was unable to do so. It finally succeeded in borrowing Cary Grant from Paramount but only upon committing itself to lend to Paramount one of its stars, Jean Arthur.

For its picture "More Than A Secretary," Columbia tried to borrow a leading man from virtually every one of the producers, and with great difficulty finally succeeded in getting George Brent from Warner Bros., upon giving them a commitment to loan Jean Arthur to them.

For its picture, "Holiday," Columbia unsuccessfully tried to borrow Barbara Stanwyck from the R.K.O. Radio and 20th Century-Fox.

[fol. 3367] In order to borrow Joel McCrea from Samuel Goldwyn, Inc., Columbia was compelled to agree to lend to Goldwyn three of its contract players.

For its pictures "It's All Yours" and "There's Always A Woman," Columbia attempted to borrow Loretta Young of 20th Century-Fox. In one case, she was not available; in the other, she refused the assignment because she did not like the leading man or director.

Columbia tried to borrow Alice Faye from 20th Century-Fox for a proposed picture entitled "Grand Gesture." She was not available, and Columbia has been unable to engage or borrow a suitable star for this picture, and it has been obliged to defer the production of this picture.

For its picture "It's All Yours," Columbia endeavored to borrow Don Ameche or Tyrone Power from 20th Century-Fox without success. For the same picture it attempted to borrow Franchot Tone or Robert Young from Metro-Mayer and also Ray Milland from Paramount, all without success.

On a number of occasions Columbia has tried to borrow Frances Dee from Paramount, but she has never been available.

Columbia has tried unsuccessfully to borrow the following artists for the following pictures:

For "Frankie":

George Raft—from Paramount
Robert Young—from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer
Franchot Tone—from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

For "There's That Woman Again":

Maureen O'Sullivan—from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer
Margaret Sullavan—from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer
Joan Blondell—from Warner Bros.

[fol. 3368] For "Start Cheering":

Allan Jones or Robert Young—from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer
Dick Powell—from Warner Bros.
Jack Haley or Tony Martin—from 20th Century-Fox

For "Golden Boy":

Tyrone Power—from 20th Century-Fox
John Garfield—from Warner Bros.

For "Blondie":

Nan Grey—from Universal

For "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington":

Lionel Barrymore—from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer
Frank Morgan—from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer
Lewis Stone—from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer
Gary Cooper—from Samuel Goldwyn, Inc.

On many occasions, Columbia attempted to borrow Robert Montgomery from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, but without success.

The attempted borrowing of directors and writers by Columbia has been attended with the same difficulties.

In the following additional instances Columbia attempted to borrow artists from other producers, and was for one reason or another unsuccessful:

For "The Lady Objects":

Maureen O'Sullivan—from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer
Margaret Lindsay—from Warner Brothers

Gail Patrick—from Paramount
Frances Farmer—from Paramount

[fol. 3369] For "Girls' School":

Helen Parrish—from Universal
Marjorie Weaver—from 20th Century-Fox
Arleen Whelan—from 20th Century-Fox
Gail Patrick—from Paramount
Andrea Leeds—from Samuel Goldwyn

For "You Can't Take It With You":

Gregory Ratoff—from 20th Century-Fox
Akim Tamiroff—from Paramount
Olivia de Haviland—from Warner Brothers
Frances Dee—from Paramount

For "I Am The Law":

John Barrymore—from Paramount

For "There's Always A Woman":

Lloyd Nolan—from Paramount

For "Holiday":

Robert Benchley—from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer
Virginia Bruce—from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

For "It's All Yours":

Robert Montgomery—from Metro-Goldyn-Mayer

For "Broadway Bill":

Guy Kibbee—from Warner Brothers

For "Her First Beau":

Judy Garland—from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—refused
Betty Field—from Paramount—unavailable

[fol. 3370] For "They Dare Not Love":

Robert Young—from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—unavailable

For "The Lady In Question":

Hedy LaMarr—from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—refused
Frank Morgan—from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—unavailable
Wallace Beery—from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—refused
Paulette Goddard, from Paramount—unavailable

For "Bedtime Story":

Rosalind Russell—from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—artist refused to play part Fred MacMurray—from Paramount—refused

For "Singapore":

Dorothy Lamour—from Paramount—unavailable

For "First Woman Doctor":

Betty Davis—from Warner Brothers—refused

For "A Doctor's Husband":

Madeleine Carrol—from Paramount—refused

For "Under Age":

Brenda Joyce—from 20th Century-Fox—unavailable for this picture.
Ronald Regan—from 20th Century-Fox—unavailable for this picture

[fol. 3371] For "The Big Boss":

Dean Jagger—from 20th Century-Fox—unavailable for this picture.

For "Betty Co-Ed":

Regis Toomey—from Warner Brothers—unavailable

While Columbia has been willing to cooperate with other producers in loaning to them its players, directors and writers, it has on several occasions been unable to grant the request of such other producers.

Universal desired to borrow Jean Arthur from Columbia for "Letter of Introduction." She was unavailable at the time, as there was some legal difficulty with her which prevented Columbia from using her services or lending her to any one else.

20th Century-Fox desired to borrow Ralph Bellamy for a picture from Columbia, but upon reading the script Bellamy declined to play the part.

Metro-Goldwyn wanted to borrow Ralph Bellamy for "They Gave Him A Gun." Columbia did not like the part and declined to make the loan-out.

Selznick-International desired to borrow Dolly Haas for "The Last Gangster," but since they insisted upon obtaining options for additional pictures with Miss Haas, Columbia refused to loan the artist, and the parties were unable to consummate a deal.

Paramount desired to borrow Rita Hayworth for "Hold Back The Dawn" and R.K.O. desired to borrow Glenn Ford. Columbia declined to make these loan-outs.

[fol. 3372] Columbia has only a limited number of stars, featured players, stock players, directors, technicians and others who have gained fame, prestige, renown, artistic, technical or other great value in the industry and particularly in the production branch thereof.

The following is a complete list of the stars, feature players, stock players, and other employees under contract with Columbia for the production of its pictures at the time of the commencement of this action.

All these individuals had been placed under contract by Columbia independently of any other motion picture companies and in actual competition with such other companies for their services.

Many of the employees of Columbia have been under contract to it for many years, and there has been no radical increase in the number of contract employes within recent years. Such increases as have been made, have been entirely commensurate with the growth of the business of Columbia. In engaging its personnel, Columbia has acted independently of and not in concert with any of the other defendants, directly or indirectly.

The stars, featured players and other artists and employees of Columbia were not all employed under exclusive contracts. Many of them insisted upon and retained the right to make pictures for other producers of their own choosing during the same period of time that they were under contract to make pictures for Columbia. Among [fol. 3375] such artists and employees have been Irene Dunne, Cary Grant and Edward G. Robinson.

The tendency on the part of artists, technicians and other employees to refuse to agree to devote their time exclusively to Columbia during the periods of their respective contracts, has made it necessary for Columbia to engage a greater number of such employees than it had in the past.

The following artists had the privilege of making pictures for other companies while under contract to Columbia. These artists were employed by the independent producers listed during the term of their contract with Columbia.

Artist	Year	Producer
Mary Astor	1936-37	Selznick International
Andy Clyde	1937	Harry Sherman Productions, Universal
George Bancroft	1936	B. P. Schulberg Productions

[fol. 3376] Columbia has always acted as an independent producer in engaging its personnel and in so doing has acted in competition with the producers, including the other defendants herein, as well as other independent producers who are not defendants herein. For example, since 1933 the following players, directors, writers and technicians have been employed both by Columbia and independent producers, not parties to this suit:

[fol. 3384] No two directors or players have the same value. There is a distinction between stars, featured players, and stock players. Moreover, during the years since 1933, 245 players were each engaged by Columbia for only one picture. The answering defendants are without knowledge as to the arrangements between the other defendant producers and their respective contract players.

The following is a list of players engaged by Columbia for only one picture:

The practice of loaning an occasional star, director or technician to another producer, has encouraged producers to place such employees under contract thereby giving employment to many hundreds of talented people, and encouraging the growth of the industry. If producers would be unable to farm out or loan their employees to other producers when they were unable to find appropriate vehicles for their particular talents, such producers would be reluctant to, and in many cases, would not place the artists, directors and technicians under long term contracts. As a result of refusal of producers to engage artists under contracts, it would be necessary for the artists to spend a considerable amount of time in going from one casting office to another, rather than concentrating upon the performance of their services. Such a practice would discourage talent, would create tremendous economic waste and unemployment and would seriously hamper the development of the motion picture industry in America.

[fol. 3395] Columbia has never participated, directly or indirectly in the profits of any other defendant producer by reason of the exhibition of the latter's pictures, or the exhibition of the pictures of Columbia, or through any other method or means.

In a number of instances where Columbia has borrowed a star from a defendant producer and has made a picture with the participation of such star, many of the theatres affiliated with said defendant producer have not booked or rented the picture made with such star.

In cases where Columbia loaned one of its stars to any other producer, it has been impossible, and it has never been the practice for Columbia Pictures Corporation to share, directly or indirectly, in the receipts from exhibition, and it never shared in such receipts. Obviously, Columbia could not share in such receipts by reason of the ownership in said theatres because it owns no such theatres, and it has never made a contract with a producer to whom it loaned such stars, the terms of which provided that Columbia was to get any part of the receipts for the exhibition of pictures made with the participation of such stars.

In borrowing and loaning artists and other talent, Columbia has never discriminated between the producer defendants herein and other producers, and has borrowed from and loaned to producers solely on the basis of its needs and available talent.

Columbia has licensed and distributed its pictures in competition with the product of other independent producers. In other cases, it has distributed the product of other independent producers together with its own product, without any discrimination. Many independent producers have in the past five years produced some of the best pictures in the industry. For example, the following pictures have received tremendous public acclaim:

[fol. 3402] The exchange of stars is largely due to the changing demand of the stars themselves as well as to the keen competition which now exists for their services. Since the stars are able, in large part, to dictate the terms upon which they are willing to be employed, and desire to be free to make pictures for producers other than those who have them under contract, it is frequently impossible to place a star under contract except on the basis of permitting such star to make pictures for other producers. The stars assert that the continued exploitation of pictures in which they appear, by a single producer with the limited story material that such producer possesses, results in the stars being miscast, thereby losing their appeal with the public. In order to protect themselves against the possibility of such poor casting and to keep their appeal perennial, the stars demand great freedom with respect to the parts which they shall portray, asserting that farming out gives them an opportunity to be cast in good parts. The miscasting of a star results in the star's dissatisfaction and disability to perform at his best, and likewise destroys the investment of the producer in the picture. This often runs into hundreds of thousands of dollars, and neither the producer nor the artist can afford to suffer the loss of prestige, standing and investment in such a case.

Thus, the changing position of the star and the increased emphasis on artistic attainment, together with a scarcity of artists, literary material and the limited financial means of each of the producers, are responsible for the development of the practice of loaning out stars. That practice has nothing whatsoever to do, so far as the answering defendants are concerned, with any alleged control of the production and exhibition by the five producer-exhibitor defendants.

[fol. 3403] Columbia at no time has imposed any harsh onerous or unfair trade practices upon exhibitors in the United States or any part thereof, and it has distributed its pictures to exhibitors in the United States in open competition with the pictures of other producers including the other defendant producers.

In many cities where there are two first-run theatres, both of which are willing to secure licenses for Columbia's product, Columbia splits its product between them regardless of whether or not such theatres are affiliated with the producer-exhibitor defendants. The following instances during the season 1937-38 are illustrative of such practice:

15. Further answering said paragraphs and also paragraphs 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186 and 187, Columbia alleges that in marketing its films it licenses its pictures to those exhibitors who will give the best exploitation to its pictures under the most favorable circumstances, netting [fol. 3408] Columbia the greatest possible return. It is immaterial whether the exhibitor is affiliated with any producer or not. As a matter of fact, Columbia often finds itself virtually at the mercy of some groups of exhibitors wholly unaffiliated with the producer-defendants herein, and Columbia deals with such exhibitors on an unequal bargaining basis which is wholly in their favor.

Many so-called independent exhibitors throughout the country combine for the purpose of dictating terms to producers, including Columbia.

These exhibitor combinations have grown in number and strength in the past ten years. For example, in New York City, there are a number of such exhibitor combinations, each controlling more than a score of theatres. Upon information and belief the practice of some of these exhibitor combinations is to approach an owner of a theatre in their territory and assure him that by their huge buying power, they can compel Columbia and other producers to license pictures to them at a very low rental, and such exhibitor combinations frequently contract with the owner to accept as compensation a percentage of the reduction of his yearly film rental. In dealing with such exhibitor combinations Columbia finds itself unable to bargain effectively so as to obtain a reasonable rental on its pictures. If Columbia refuses to deal with such exhibitor combinations upon their terms, it is threatened by them with a boycott. As a consequence of this practice, Columbia has been compelled to license its pictures to these exhibitor combinations upon terms very harsh and inequitable to it, and such exhibitor combinations have obtained Columbia's product for far less than a fair rental value.

In many cities of the United States today, the important exhibitors are banded together in exhibitor combinations [fol. 3409] which bargain for their pictures with the advantage of collective bargaining and collective purchasing power, and with the other advantage of threat of boycott to any producer who refuses to meet their terms. The market for the exhibition of pictures is limited, and if Columbia is unwilling to meet the terms proposed by the exhibitor combinations in that particular locality, it finds itself unable to arrange for any distribution of its pictures in said territory to other exhibitors upon a fair rental value.

In many instances in the past few years, Columbia has actually been boycotted in certain territories by these local exhibitor combinations.

These operators of circuits of theatres, who are not made defendants in this action, wield tremendous power in the field of exhibition in their respective territories; upon information and belief, some of the affiliated circuits are powerful enough to dictate to their own affiliate producers the terms upon which such chains will book their pictures.

It is impossible for Columbia to investigate the local competitive situation of each of its exhibitor licensees.

In determining whether a particular theatre shall be given a franchise for a first-run or a subsequent run, it is necessary to take into consideration the consistent policy of the theatre, bearing in mind its size, its location, its admission charge, the size of its audience, the amount which the exhibitor is willing to pay for the licensing of the pictures, the auspices under which the picture will be first received in a particular community and many other factors, none of which has any possible relation to the question of whether or not the particular exhibitor is affiliated with any of the producer-exhibitor defendants, or whether the theatre is part of a circuit.

Columbia denies that the so-called small independent exhibitor operating a little theatre in an unpretentious [fol. 3410] neighborhood and charging a very low admission price, suffers any injury by reason of failure to obtain a first or second run, because the patronage of such theatre is perfectly satisfied to view its pictures on a third or subsequent run.

In more than 5400 cities and towns in the United States, in each of which there are less than eight theatres, all theatres in each of such towns are owned by one individual or corporation. This defendant is not able to sell in a competitive market in any of such localities. The exhibitor in such cases is virtually able to dictate his own terms to this defendant.

The fact is that the exhibition end of the motion picture industry has been most profitable and successful in the past fifteen years. Motion picture exhibitors throughout the country, large and small members of the exhibitor combinations and non-members of combinations, have made tremendous sums of money on their investment. During the past ten years of depression, very few exhibitors were forced out of business but on the contrary their business has increased and their properties have enhanced in value. While the producers of pictures take all the risk and hazard (in recent years, several producers have been forced into bankruptcy), the exhibitors take little or no risk.

Columbia has at no time knowingly permitted any exhibitor to overbuy. It sells its products to exhibitors without regard to the number of pictures that the exhibitor may have bought from others, and it has no actual knowledge of what pictures are being purchased by exhibitors from other companies, nor has it the ability nor the legal power to compel exhibitors to divulge such information to it. As a matter of fact, if Columbia should demand such information from exhibitors, they would refuse to exhibit the pic- [fol. 3411] tures distributed by Columbia rather than give it the necessary information as to their dealings with others. A demand for such information would be regarded by any exhibitor as an unwarranted interference with his business, and this would be true, whether the exhibitor were affiliated or unaffiliated. It is impossible to obtain such information.

Exhibitors license their firms from distributors of motion pictures produced by more than two hundred companies throughout the world. The motion pictures produced in foreign countries enter into competition with pictures produced in the United States. Many foreign pictures have been very successful, and have had extensive runs in the motion picture theatres of the United States in competition with the pictures of Columbia and other American producers. Such pictures include:

"Henry the Eighth"
"Maedchen in Uniform"
"Ghost Goes West"
"Mayerling"
"Rembrandt"
"Carnival in Flanders"
"Moonlight Sonata"
"Elephant Boy"
"We're Going to be Rich"

The motion pictures produced by independent producers here and abroad and exhibited throughout the United States aggregate a vastly greater number than those produced by the major producers.

The competition in the United States from pictures produced abroad is steadily increasing in spite of the war. For the first six months of 1938, French studios produced fifty-five motion picture films with sixty-four additional pictures in production, or about to be produced. The influx into France of capable talent from Germany and Austria due to political upheavals in those countries improved the quality of French production. Whereas the sales resistance to pictures of Germany manufacture is so powerful as to make those pictures almost a negligible factor, there is no similar resistance to pictures made in France.

Recently, leading figures in the motion picture field have formed companies for the distribution of pictures pro- [fol. 3413] duced abroad. The recent announcements of one of such companies indicates that it will distribute no less than twenty-five feature foreign films to a very substantial number of theatres, particularly in the east. A third company has recently taken over the exclusive distribution of Mexican pictures in the United States. This shows the trend of competition incurred from foreign pictures.

Columbia distributes not only all the pictures produced by itself, but a great number of pictures produced by other producers. Such pictures distributed by Columbia in recent years, the product of other producers, are the following:

The exhibitor is not the ultimate consumer. It is not his demands which the producer bears in mind in producing a motion picture but rather the demands of the public, [fol. 3416] which pays admissions to the theatre, which the producer aims to satisfy. The public is the ultimate consumer. The producers aim to meet the taste and fancy of the public at large, and they are not interested in the desires of the exhibitors, except to the extent that such desires reflect the taste and fancy of the public itself. The producers' public is infinitely greater than the handful of exhibitors. The public whose demands the producer must supply extends throughout the world. No picture has ever been successful that did not have a universal appeal. The exhibitor is not familiar with the taste and fancy of the public, except in his small community. An illustration of that fact may be given. A few years ago a leading exhibitor issued an advertisement in the trade press violently attacking a number of prominent motion picture stars and asserting that they had outlived their usefulness and were "poison at the boxoffice." The fact is that after this blast was issued, a number of these stars appeared in motion pictures which attained tremendous success and popularity. The best examples of such pictures and stars are the Columbia picture, "Holiday," with Katherine Hepburn, and the Walter Wanger production "Algiers," with Charles Boyer. These pictures, incidentally, were all produced by independent producers, and their success was instantaneous. The attack upon these stars was abortive, and did not represent the taste of the ultimate consumer, who, in the last analysis, pays his admission money at the box-office and pays only when he likes the picture. This public includes 85,000,000 people who attend motion picture performances in the United States weekly. They are the ultimate market in the United States.

[fol. 3417] Further answering the allegations intending to refer to so-called "Block Booking" contained in paragraph "147" the answering defendants allege that Columbia has never entered into any practice of conditioning the licensing of one film or group of films upon the licensing of another film or group of films, and that with respect to each and every contract under which Columbia has licensed its pictures on a basis of block booking, such contracts have been wholly voluntary on the part of both Columbia and the exhibitor, whether such exhibitor was a so-called independent exhibitor or an affiliated exhibitor. Where franchises have been issued on a basis of block booking, the affiliated theatres have not been permitted to license the picture of Columbia on a selective basis any more than have the independent exhibitors and exhibitor combinations. It has been the practice to license pictures by block booking for a great many years, long prior to the entry of Columbia in the motion picture field; and the practice has continued to this day. From the time that motion picture companies announced their production schedule at the beginning of the season, it was necessary, in order to insure a proper carrying out of that schedule, that the companies have an outlet for their pictures. Such an outlet could not be depended upon, unless the exhibitors were willing to contract for the entire product. It was likewise important to the exhibitor that he be in a position to insist upon receiving all of the pictures of the producer.

The practice was not foisted upon the exhibitors by the producers, but was rather the result of mutual agreement for the benefit of both. Columbia prepares a schedule each Spring of the number of pictures which it proposes to make for the following season. While this schedule is subject to change in some respects, Columbia adheres to it [fol. 3418] substantially. The production of the pictures called for by this advance schedule requires the investment of many millions of dollars in the employment of stars, purchase of story material, employment of directors and technicians, creation of studio facilities and equipment, costumes, scenery, and a great many other factors. Commitments for these expenditures must be made far in advance of the production of the pictures, and Columbia is compelled to enter into a great many contracts to satisfy these commitments. It must know at the commencement of the season the extent of the outlet which it will have for its pictures during that season. Unless it is permitted to book pictures in block, it will be unable to carry out this program of production.

As a matter of fact, no exhibitor is compelled to take every picture produced by Columbia. In licensing its pictures for exhibition, Columbia does so independently of any other producer of motion pictures, and at no time compels an exhibitor to take so many pictures that he is prevented from securing other pictures through other distributors. The fact is that no exhibitor contracts for the pictures of Columbia exclusively, nor is he compelled to do so. In many cases, where there are two first-run theatres in a particular community, and both theatres are willing to enter into license agreements with Columbia, it permits them to divide the season's product between them on an equal basis or "split". This practice exists whether the exhibitors be affiliated or independent or independent circuits.

Further answering the allegations, designated as "Forcing of Short Subjects and News Reels, etc.," the answering defendants allege, that Columbia has never forced any exhibitor, whether independent, independent circuit or affiliated, to take short subjects and news reels, etc. Columbia does [fol. 3419] not produce or distribute news reels. To the extent that it licenses its short subjects and the other product referred to together with the balance of its season's product, that practice is indulged in with respect to affiliated theatres to the same extent as in the case of so-called independents or exhibitor combinations. If Columbia were unable to license its short subjects, etc. at the commencement of the season at the same time that it licenses its features, it would have to give up the business of producing the remainder of its program. This would drastically curtail its business, and would restrict rather than encourage competition in the field of production of motion pictures.

Further answering the allegations, designated as "designation of play dates", the answering defendants allege, that there is keen competion among the producers of motion pictures for the exhibition of their feature pictures on those days when the greater part of the public attends a motion picture theatre. Where an exhibitor shows the picture for only half a week, and where the picture is licensed on a basis of a percentage of the receipts of the exhibitor, it is naturally to the advantage of the producer to have its pictures exhibited at the times when the public attends the theatre. When a producer invests a very substantial sum in the production of a motion picture, it would be impossible to recoup its investment if the exhibitor were able to exhibit that picture on the basis of giving the producer a percentage of the receipts on those days when the attendance at the theatre was very low. Much as defendant Columbia would like to have its pictures exhibited on a percentage basis on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays it has had little success in inducing exhibitors to accept such arrangements. [fol. 3420] In the great majority of cases, exhibitors, both independent, independent combinations and affiliated, have refused to exhibit the pictures of Columbia on a percentage basis on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays and Columbia has been deprived of the revenue to which it believes itself entitled from exhibition on those days on a percentage basis. No exhibitor in the United States operates his theatre for the benefit of or in the interest of Columbia nor does Columbia make any unreasonable charge or secure unreasonable compensation for the exhibition of its pictures.

Further answering the allegations, designated as "Clearance", the answering defendants allege that Columbia does not give its licensees for prior-run exhibitions unreasonable protection or clearance over subsequent-runs in the same territory. Prior-run exhibitors are entitled to have a certain amount of protection and clearance. Competition is so keen in the distribution of motion pictures, that if Columbia should refuse to give the necessary clearance to prior-run exhibitors, whether they be independent, independent combinations or affiliated exhibitors, they would refuse to take the product of Columbia, and Columbia could no longer carry on its business successfully.

The practice of granting protection to prior-run exhibitors is not one that Columbia insists upon, but rather is one that the exhibitor insists upon, and which Columbia believes he is entitled to. In fact, there can be no dispute about the right of a prior-run exhibitor against a subsequent-run, if he is to obtain enough revenue from the exhibition of his pictures to warrant the increased amount that he pays for the privilege of his prior run. Prior-run pictures are exhibited in houses where the exhibitor pays a greater rental than does the exhibitor in a subsequent-run house. They are usually in more desirable locations. The [fol. 3421] furnishings and acoustics are of a superior quality, and the auspices under which the picture in a prior-run house is presented are such as to require the exhibitor to make a large investment, and to charge a higher admission prices and he can accomplish this only by having a sufficient period of protection against a subsequent-run house. Otherwise, the patrons would go only to the subsequent-run house where the price of admission is lower.

Further answering the allegations, designated as "Overbuying", the answering defendants allege, that there is no way that Columbia can put a stop to this practice, if the practice exists. If this practice be unlawful, the culprits are the exhibitors, and not the answering defendants.

Further answering the allegations, designated as "Film Rentals", the answering defendants allege, that there is no discrimination by Columbia in the film rentals charged to exhibitors, whether said exhibitors are or are not part of circuit combinations. In some instances exhibitors, whether they be circuit, affiliated with distributors or otherwise, or individually operated theatres, compel Columbia to license its pictures to them for less than their value.

The method of paying film rental by a percentage of the gross box-office receipts of the exhibitor is not unfair to the exhibitor. It would be the ideal method of determining an adequate and fair rental of pictures. This method has been in use in the field of the legitimate theatre since its earliest advent. The percentage of the gross which Columbia secures from the exhibitor has never been unfair, arbitrary, unreasonable or unconscionable. To the knowledge of these answering defendants, no exhibitor was ever forced to shut down his theatre because of rental fees, [fol. 3422] percentage or otherwise, that he paid to Columbia. Columbia has never acted in combination with other producers or distributors of motion pictures in the licensing of motion picture films to exhibitors.

Further answering the allegations, designated as "Advertising Allowances", the answering defendants allege, that wherever arrangements are made with exhibitors for the sharing of advertising costs, there is no discrimination between affiliated, independent and independent combinations of exhibitors. All are treated alike. The practice of sharing advertising costs is beneficial to both the exhibitor and the producer. With regard to some pictures there have been advertising campaigns. These campaigns have been limited to the following pictures during the seasons beginning with 1935-36:

"Mr. Deeds Goes to Town"
"Music Goes Round"

"King Steps Out"
"When You're in Love"
"Theodora Goes Wild"
"Pennies From Heaven"
"It's All Yours"
"Lost Horizon"
"Awful Truth"
"I'll Take Romance"
"There's Always a Woman"
"Holiday"
"Girls' School"
"You Can't Take It with You"
"Let Us Live"
"Only Angels Have Wings"
"Golden Boy"
"He Stayed for Breakfast"
"His Girl Friday"
"Too Many Husbands"
[fol. 3423] "Doctor Takes a Wife"
"21 Days Together"
"Howards of Virginia"
"Mr. Smith Goes to Washington"
"This Thing Called Love"
"Arizona"
"Adam Had Four Sons"

In practically all instances theatres, whether affiliated or not, paid exactly 50%—no more and no less over and above the regular newspaper advertising budget of such theatre.

Advertising campaigns of this nature were conducted only with respect to percentage bookings in practically every instance.

Further answering the allegations, designated as "Optional contracts", the answering defendants allege, that Columbia does not make any such contracts as are described therein, and in all cases, there is no discrimination between affiliated, independent and independent combinations of exhibitors.

Further answering the allegations, designated as "Contract modifications", the answering defendants allege, that where insistence upon the letter of the contract would work hardship on exhibitors, Columbia has given such exhibitors some of the benefits described in said subdivision notwithstanding the terms of the contract. These modifications are made in favor of affiliated, independent and independent combinations of exhibitors. There is no discrimination between them, except that on occasion, the independent exhibitor who is financially unable to meet his contractual obligations is given certain indulgence, and in some cases, independent combinations are given such benefits by reason of threats, coercive practice and intimidation of Columbia [fol. 3424] by them. If Columbia should refuse to grant such modifications to the independent combinations, they are threatened with boycotts of their product in the particular territory controlled by such independent combination.

Further answering the allegations, designated as "Overage and Underage", the answering defendants allege, that in those instances where Columbia has permitted overage and underage, it has done so as the only means of selling a license to exhibit its pictures. Without that clause, those licensees, who control the theatres involved, would refuse to accept the license from Columbia and Columbia would thereby be deprived of all revenue from the exhibition of its pictures in the particular territory involved.

Further answering the allegations, designated as "Move-overs", the answering defendants allege, that they do not indulge in this practice in favor of affiliated exhibitors, and do not in any wise discriminate against independent exhibitors in this respect.

For a First Separate and Distinct Defense, the Answering Defendants Allege:

16. That Columbia has a number of contracts with affiliated, independent and independent combinations of exhibitors, which the petitioner seeks to nullify, cancel or modify. All these contracts between Columbia and such exhibitors were made in the City of New York prior to the commencement of this action, and the parties to such contracts are all subject to the jurisdiction of this court. The exhibitors domiciled in this district having contracts with Columbia, which the petitioner seeks to nullify and cancel, are the following:

[fol. 3425] Catskill Theatres Corp.
M. F. Tubbs
Mitchell Conery
A. McNamara
Philip Eisenberg
Robert C. Kay

Coney Island Motion Picture Corp.
Chester Didsbury
Kimball Amuse. Corp.
Highland Theatrical Corp.
Manor Theatre Corp.
Loren Theatre, Inc.
Bennie Berman, Joseph Rosen, co-partners
Arthur Enterprises, Inc.
Gemma Amusement Corp.
Tryon Amusement Corp.
Bell Amusement Corp.
The Marcus Loew Booking Agency, a corporation
Radio City Music Hall Corporation.

17. Columbia has a number of contracts with artists which the petitioner seeks to nullify, cancel or modify. All these contracts between Columbia and such artists were made in the United States prior to the commencement of this action, and the parties to such contracts are all subject to the jurisdiction of this Court and are domiciled within the United States. Such artists with whom Columbia has contracts include Irene Dunne and Cary Grant.

18. The aforesaid individuals, firms and corporations, whose contracts are sought to be affected by the petition herein, were and are necessary and indispensable parties to this suit, and no proper determination of this suit can be had without the presence of said parties herein.

[fol. 3426] For a second separate and distinct defense, the answering defendants allege:

19. That heretofore and on or about May 7, 1937, this petitioner instituted an action against the defendant, Columbia Pictures Corporation and others, in the United States District Court, Northern District of Texas, in which petitioner alleged that defendant, Columbia Pictures Corporation, had conspired with others to restrain trade and commerce in motion picture films and to monopolize or attempt to monopolize the exhibition of motion picture films in the States of Texas and New Mexico, in violation of an Act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies" and of the acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto; Columbia Pictures Corporation filed an answer in that action in said court; thereafter such proceedings were had in said action that a final decree was entered in said court on October 13, 1937, in which it was adjudged and decreed that defendant, Columbia Pictures Corporation among others, had engaged in a combination, conspiracy and agreement with some of the defendants in said action to restrain trade and commerce in motion pictures in violation of the aforementioned statute; on appeal from said decree to the United States Supreme Court, said final decree was affirmed. (Interstate v. United States, 304 U. S. 55.)

20. Upon information and belief, the issues embraced in said action and therein litigated, included and embraced the acts alleged in the petition herein to be in violation of law; in said action the court therein had jurisdiction to hear and determine, and there could have been there litigated, heard and determined therein all of the acts complained of in the [fol. 3427] petition herein alleged to have been committed by defendant, Columbia Pictures Corporation and the other Columbia defendants.

21. The defendant Columbia Pictures Corporation was enjoined and restrained from doing the acts mentioned and described in said Decree, a copy of which is hereto annexed and made a part of this answer as Exhibit 1.

22. By reason of the premises, the acts and matters complained of in the petition herein are res adjudicata as against all of the Columbia defendants.

For a third separate and distinct defense, the answering defendants allege:

23. That heretofore and on or about the 28th day of April, 1939, this petitioner instituted an action against the defendant Columbia Pictures Corporation and others in the United States District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma, entitled United States of Am[illegible] v. Griffith Amusement Company et al., in which petitioner alleged that defendant Columbia Pictures Corporation had conspired with others to restrain trade and commerce in motion picture films and to monopolize and to attempt to monopolize the exhibition of motion pictures in violation of an Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled, "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies"; Columbia Pictures Corporation has filed an answer in that action in said Court and said action is still pending and undisposed of.

24. That heretofore and on or about the 7th day of August, 1939, this petitioner instituted an action against the defendant Columbia Pictures Corporation and others in the [fol. 3428] United States District Court for the Western District of New York, entitled, United States of America v. Schine Chain Theatres, Inc., et al., in which petitioner alleged that defendant Columbia Pictures Corporation had conspired with others to restrain trade and commerce in motion picture films and to monopolize and to attempt to monopolize the exhibition of motion pictures in violation of an Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies"; Columbia Pictures Corporation has filed an answer in that action in said Court and said action is still pending and undisposed of.

25. That heretofore and on or about the 11th day of August, 1939, this petitioner instituted an action against the defendant Columbia Pictures Corporation and others in the United States District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee, Nashville Division, entitled, United States of America v. The Crescent Amusement Company, et al., in which petitioner alleged that defendant Columbia Pictures Corporation had conspired with others to restrain trade and commerce in motion picture films and to monopolize and to attempt to monopolize the exhibition of motion pictures in violation of an Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies"; Columbia Pictures Corporation has filed an answer in that action in said Court and said action is still pending and undisposed of.

26. Upon information and belief, the issues embraced in each of the actions referred to and described in paragraphs 23, 24 and 25, respectively, and in each of said actions being litigated, include and embrace the acts alleged in the peti-[fol. 3429] tion herein to be in violation of law; in each of said actions the Court therein has jurisdiction to hear and determine and there can be there litigated, heard and determined all of the acts complained of in the petition herein alleged to have been committed by defendant Columbia Pictures Corporation and the other Columbia defendants.

27. The defendants herein plead each of said actions referred to and described hereinabove in bar of this action.

Wherefore, these answering defendants pray that the petition be dismissed, together with the costs and disbursements of the action.

INTERSTATE CIRCUIT, INC., TEXAS CONSOLIDATED THEATRES, INC., Karl Hoblitzelle, R. J. O'Donnell, Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., Vitagraph, Inc., RKO-Radio Pictures, Inc., Columbia Pictures Corporation, United Artists Corporation, Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation of Texas, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, and Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation of Texas, Defendants

FINAL DECREE—Filed October 13, 1937

This cause having come on to be heard at a special term of the district court of the United States for the Dallas Division of the Northern District of Texas, upon the pleadings, the agreed statement of facts and the evidence, both [fol. 3431] oral and documentary, introduced by the respective parties in open court, and having been argued by counsel, and the Court having filed its opinion herein on the 25th day of September, 1937,

It is hereby ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows:

(1) That the defendants, Paramount Picture Distributing Company, Inc., R. K. O.-Radio Pictures, Inc., Columbia Pictures Corporation, United Artists Corporation, Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., and Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation of Texas, by including at the instance and behest of the defendants, Interstate Circuit, Inc., Karl Hoblitzelle and R. J. O'Donnell, in license agreements for motion picture films released and distributed by them beginning with the exhibition season of 1934-35 and for each season subsequent thereto, with subsequent run exhibitors in the cities of Dallas, Fort Worth, Houston and San Antonio, provisions requiring that such motion picture films so released and distributed by them that had been shown in the same city first run for a night adult lower floor admission price of 40¢ or more should not be exhibited by said subsequent run exhibitors for less than a night adult lower floor admission price of 25¢ and should not be exhibited as a part of a double feature program, have engaged in a combination, conspiracy and agreement with said defendants, Interstate Circuit, Inc., Karl Hoblitzelle and R. J. O'Donnell, to restrain trade and commerce in said motion picture films, in violation of an Act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies."

[fol. 3432] (2) That the defendant, Vitagraph, Inc., by including at the instance and behest of the defendants, Interstate Circuit, Inc., Karl Hoblitzelle and R. J. O'Donnell in its license agreements with the subsequent run exhibitors in the cities of Dallas, Fort Worth, Houston and San Antonio beginning with the exhibition season of 1934-1935 and for each exhibition season subsequent thereto, said restriction as to minimum night adult lower floor admission price, has engaged in a combination, conspiracy and agreement with said defendants, Interstate Circuit, Inc., Karl Hoblitzelle and R. J. O'Donnell to restrain trade and commerce in said motion picture films, in violation of an Act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, entitled, "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies."

(3) That the defendant, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation, by including at the instance and behest of the defendants, Interstate Circuit, Inc., Karl Hoblitzelle and R. J. O'Donnell, in its license agreements with subsequent run exhibitors in the cities of Dallas, Fort Worth and San Antonio, beginning with the exhibition season 1934-1935 and for each exhibition season subsequent thereto, said restriction as to minimum night adult lower floor admission price, has engaged in a combination, conspiracy and agreement with said defendants, Interstate Circuit, Inc., Karl Hoblitzelle and R. J. O'Donnell to restrain trade and commerce in said motion picture films in violation of an Act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, entitled, "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies."

(4) That the aforesaid provisions as to minimum night adult lower floor admission price and double featuring so [fol. 3433] included by the defendants, Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., Vitagraph, Inc., R. K. O.-Radio Pictures, Inc., Columbia Pictures Corporation, United Artists Corporation, Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation and Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation of Texas, at the instance and behest of the defendants, Interstate Circuit, Inc., Karl Hoblitzelle and R. J. O'Donnell upon subsequent run-exhibitors of motion picture films released and distributed by the distributor defendants in the cities above named are illegal and void.

(5) That each and every one of the corporate defendants and their respective officers, agents, representatives and employees, and each of the individual defendants be, and they are hereby, perpetually enjoined and restrained from continuing in said combination, conspiracy and agreement.

(6) That the defendants, Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., R. K. O.-Radio Pictures, Inc., Columbia Pictures Corporation, United Artists Corporation, Universal Film Exchange, Inc., and Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation of Texas, and their respective officers, agents, representatives and employees be, and they are hereby, perpetually enjoined and restrained from enforcing or attempting to enforce the provisions in their respective license agreements with subsequent run exhibitors of motion picture films released and distributed by them in the cities above named, requiring such subsequent run exhibitors to charge a minimum night adult lower floor admission price of not less than 25¢ for motion pictures that had previously been exhibited in the same city for a night adult lower floor admission price of 40¢ or more, and pro- [fol. 3434] hibiting said subsequent run exhibitors from showing said motion picture films as a part of a double feature program.

(7) That the defendants, Vitagraph, Inc., and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation, their officers, agents, representatives and employees be and they are hereby perpetually enjoined and restrained from enforcing or attempting to enforce said provisions in their said license agreements with subsequent run exhibitors of motion picture films released and distributed by them in the cities above named, requiring such subsequent run exhibitors to charge a minimum night adult lower floor admission price of not less than 25¢ for motion pictures that had previously been exhibited in the same city for a night adult lower floor admission price of 40¢ or more.

(8) That the defendants, Paramount Pictures Distributing Company, Inc., Vitagraph, Inc., R. K. O.-Radio Pictures, Inc., Columbia Pictures Corporation, United Artists Corporation, Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation, Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation of Texas be, and they are hereby, enjoined and restrained from including in any future license agreements with subsequent run exhibitors in any city in the states of Texas or New Mexico, or elsewhere, where the defendants, Interstate Circuit, Inc., Texas Consolidated Theatres, Inc., this latter company not having made any such agreement since 1934-35, Karl Hoblitzelle and R. J. O'Donnell operate motion picture theatres, any restrictions as to the admission price to be charged by said subsequent run exhibitors for such motion picture films or as to double-featuring as a result of any combination, conspiracy or agreement among [fol. 3435] the said distributor defendants, and any of them, or between the said distributor defendants, and any of them, and the said exhibitor defendants, and any of them.

(9) That the defendant, Interstate Circuit, Inc., its officers, agents, representatives and employees, and the individual defendants be, and they are hereby, perpetually restrained and enjoined from enforcing or attempting to enforce any provisions in their said license agreements with each or any of the distributor defendants requiring said distributor defendants, or any of them, to impose upon subsequent run exhibitors of motion picture films released and distributed by said distributor defendants the restrictions as to night adult lower floor admission price or against double featuring hereinbefore referred to.

(10) This decree does not affect the legal right of any distributor, without understanding, or, agreement with any other distributor or exhibitor, to contract with an exhibitor for the exclusive exhibition of his copyrighted motion pictures, or, for time of exhibition.

(11) That the petitioner recover of the defendants its costs herein.

Dallas, Texas, this 13th day of October, 1937.

Answer of United Artists Corporation to Amended and Supplemental Complaint

Defendant United Artists Corporation answering the amended and supplemental complaint of the plaintiff by its attorneys, O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery, respectfully alleges:

1. Defendant denies each and every allegation of paragraphs 1 and 2 of plaintiff's amended and supplemental complaint.

2. Defendant denies any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations of paragraphs 3 (a) (b); 4; 5 (a) (b) (c) (d) (e); 6 (a) (b) (c); 7 (a) (b); 9 (a) (b) (c); 10 (a) (b) (c) (d) of plaintiff's amended and supplemental complaint.

3. Defendant denies any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations of paragraphs 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, [fol. 3437] 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79 and 80 of plaintiff's amended and supplemental complaint.

4. Defendant denies any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations of paragraph 63 of plaintiff's amended and supplemental complaint, except that defendant admits that it released the number of feature pictures mentioned and described in said paragraph as features released by United Artists.

5. Defendant denies any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations of paragraphs 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105 and 106 of plaintiff's amended and supplemental complaint.

6. Defendant denies any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations of paragraph 107 of plaintiff's amended and supplemental complaint, except that the defendant admits that it from time to time makes a separate contract with exhibitors for the exhibition of photoplays produced by each of the respective producers using the facilities of the defendant for distribution.

7. Defendant denies each and every allegation of paragraph 108 of plaintiff's amended and supplemental complaint, except that defendant admits that the quality of feature pictures, as box-office attractions, varies widely.

8. Defendant denies each and every allegation of paragraphs 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114 and 115 of plaintiff's amended and supplemental complaint, except that defendant admits that it makes exhibition license agreements with various exhibitors for the exhibition of feature pictures distributed by the defendant, and for the contents of said agreements respectfully asks leave to refer to the origi- [fols. 3438-3440] nals thereof.

9. Defendant denies any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations of paragraphs 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122 and 123 of plaintiff's amended and supplemental complaint.

10. Defendant denies each and every allegation of paragraphs 124, 125, 126, 127 and 128 of plaintiff's amended and supplemental complaint.

11. Defendant denies any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations of paragraphs 129, 130, 131 and 132 of plaintiff's amended and supplemental complaint.

12. Defendant denies each and every allegation of paragraphs 140 and 141 of plaintiff's amended and supplemental complaint in so far as it alleges that the production of motion pictures is in or a part of interstate trade or commerce.

13. Defendant denies each and every allegation of paragraphs 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149 (a) (b) (c) (d) (e) (f) (g) (h) (i) (j) (k) (l) (m) (n) (o) (p), 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186 and 187 of plaintiff's amended and supplemental complaint.

Wherefore, defendant demands judgment dismissing the plaintiff's amended and supplemental complaint together with the costs and disbursements of this action.

Answer of Universal Corporation et al. to Amended and Supplemental Complaint

Defendants, Universal Corporation, Universal Pictures Company, Inc., Universal Film Exchanges, Inc. and Big U Film Exchange, Inc., by their attorney, Charles D. Prutzman, answering plaintiff's Amended and Supplemental Complaint, respectfully allege:

1. Defendants deny each and every allegation of paragraphs 1 and 2 of plaintiff's Amended and Supplemental Complaint.

2. Defendants deny any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations of paragraphs 3 (a) (b), 4, 5 (a) (b) (c) (d) (e), 6 (a) (b) (c), 7 (a) (b), 9 (a) (b) (c), 11, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, and 72 of plaintiff's Amended and Supplemental Complaint.

[fol. 3442] And further deny that Universal Film Exchanges, Inc. is a wholly owned subsidiary of Universal Corporation and that Big U Film Exchange, Inc. is a wholly owned subsidiary of Universal Corporation, as alleged in Subdivisions (c) and (d) of Paragraph 10, but admit that Universal Film Exchanges, Inc. is a wholly owned subsidiary of Universal Pictures Company, Inc. and that Big U Film Exchange, Inc. is a subsidiary of Universal Pictures Company, Inc. and Universal Corporation, which together own all of its capital stock.

3. Defendants deny any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations of Paragraphs 76 and 78 of plaintiff's Amended and Supplemental Complaint, except defendants admit that there were produced and released the number of photoplays listed in said paragraphs as features produced by Universal during the respective seasons referred to in said paragraphs, and except that it denies that Universal Chain Theatres Corporation operated theatres in Canada or the District of Columbia, but it admits that it had an interest in the Griffith Amusement Company which operates theatres in Oklahoma and Texas and in the Schine Chain which operated theatres in New York and Ohio.

4. Defendants deny any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations of Paragraphs 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106 and 107 of plaintiff's Amended and Supplemental Complaint.

5. Defendants deny any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations of Paragraph 108 of plaintiff's Amended and Supplemental Complaint, [fol. 3443] except that defendants admit that the quality of feature pictures varies widely as Box Office attractions.

6. Defendants deny any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations of Paragraphs 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, and 132 of plaintiff's Amended and Supplemental Complaint, except that defendants aver that exhibition license agreements are made with various exhibitors for the exhibition of Universal pictures in theatres in the United States of America, and the defendants respectfully ask leave to refer to the originals of said agreements for the contents thereof.

7. Defendants deny each and every allegation of Paragraphs 133 to 141, inclusive, of plaintiff's Amended and Supplemental Complaint in so far as said paragraphs attempt to allege that the business of producing motion pictures is in or a part of Interstate Trade and Commerce.

8. Defendants deny each and every allegation of Paragraphs 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149 (a) (b) (c) (d) (e) (f) (g) (h) (i) (j) (k) (l) (m) (n) (o) (p), 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186 and 187 of plaintiff's Amended and Supplemental Complaint.

Wherefore defendants demand judgment dismissing plaintiff's Amended and Supplemental Complaint, together with the costs and disbursements of this action.

[fol. 3444] IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Civil Action No. 87-273

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plaintiff

v.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES, INC., ET AL., Defendants

Consent Decree—Rules of Arbitration and Appeals

[fol. 3445] DECREE—Filed November 20, 1940

The United States of America having filed its Petition herein on July 20, 1938, and its Amended and Supplemental Complaint on November 14, 1940; the defendants: Paramount, Pictures Inc.; Paramount Film Distributing Corporation; Loew's, Incorporated; Radio-Keith-Orpheum Cor-[fol. 3446] poration; RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation; RKO Proctor Corporation; RKO Midwest Corporation; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Vitagraph, Inc.; Warner Bros. Circuit Management Corporation; Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation; and National Theatres Corporation [1] having appeared and severally filed their answers to such Petition and to such Amended and Supplemental Complaint and having asserted the truth of their answers and their innocence of any violation of law; and no testimony having been taken, but each of the consenting defendants having consented to the entry of this decree without any findings of fact, upon condition that neither such consent, nor this decree itself, nor the entry of this decree, nor any statement, provision or requirement contained in this decree, shall be or shall be construed as being (1) an admission or adjudication that the allegations of the Petition or of the Amended and Supplemental Complaint, or any of them, are or is true, or that such defendants, or any one or more of them, have or has violated or are or is violating any statute or law, or (2) evidence that such allegations, or any of them, are or is true, or that such defendants, or any one or more of them, have or has violated any statute or law, or (3) an admission or adjudication that the doing of any of the acts or things hereinafter enjoined or the failure to do any of the acts or things hereinafter directed to be done would constitute a violation of any statute or law, and upon the further conditions hereinafter set forth; and the United States of America, by its counsel, having consented to the entry of this decree and to each and every provision thereof upon such conditions, and having moved the Court for the entry of this decree;

[1] The above-named defendants are referred to hereinafter as the consenting defendants.

[fol. 3447]

THEREFORE, IT IS ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED as follows:

I

The Court has jurisdiction of the parties hereto; and for the purposes of this decree and of proceedings for the enforcement thereof, and for no other purpose, the Court has jurisdiction of the subject matter hereof and the complaint states a cause of action against the defendants under the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890 entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies".

The Petitioner not having offered any proof of its allegations that defendants have violated the antitrust laws, and defendants having denied each and every such allegation, this Court has not determined or adjudicated and by this decree does not determine or adjudicate, and this is not a decree to the effect that any of said defendants has violated or is now violating any of such laws, or any other statute; and this decree relates solely to future conduct herein below specified and is not based upon any finding, determination, or adjudication that any right or statute has yet been or is now being violated.

II

Each consenting defendant, its successors, officers, directors, agents and employees, and all persons and corporations [fol. 3448] acting under, through, or for it, hereby is and are enjoined from doing the acts prohibited by this decree, and is and are directed to do the acts thereby required.

III

No consenting defendant engaged in the distribution of motion pictures (hereinafter referred to as a distributor defendant) shall license or offer for license [1] a feature motion picture [2] (hereinafter sometimes referred to as a feature) for public exhibition within the United States of America at which an admission fee is to be charged, until the feature has been trade shown [3] within the exchange district [4] in which the public exhibition is to be held. Every trade showing shall be preceded by a notice, published in a [fol. 3449] trade publication [5] having general circulation among exhibitors [6] in such exchange district, which shall state the title of the picture and the date and the time when and the place or places where it will be trade shown.

IV

(a) No distributor defendant shall offer for license or shall license more than five features in a single group. In offering its features for license to an exhibitor a distributor may change the combinations of features in groups as it may from time to time determine, and may license or offer for license as many groups of features as it may from time

---

[1] License means (as a verb) to make an agreement, or (as a noun) an agreement, by which a distributor grants the right to exhibit a motion picture in any theatre engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures for profit.

[2] A feature motion picture is a motion picture approximately 5,000 feet, or more, in length.

[3] A trade showing is an exhibition of a feature at a theatre or projection room for the benefit of exhibitors generally.

[4] Each distributor defendant shall file with the Department of Justice a map of each of its exchange districts, showing the territorial limits thereof. Changes in the territorial limits of an exchange district shall be made only after two weeks' notice to the Department of Justice. References in this Section and in Sections V, IX and XVIII hereof to exchange districts are to exchange districts of each distributor defendant, as constituted from time to time.

[5] Trade publication means a daily or weekly newspaper or magazine which is devoted primarily to news concerning the motion pictpre industry.

[6] Exhibitor means any individual, partnership, unincorporated association or corporation engaged in the public exhibition of motion pictures in a theatre or theatres for profit.

to time determine, provided that the license or offer for license of one group of features shall not be conditioned upon the licensing of another feature or group of features.

(b) No distributor defendant shall require an exhibitor to license short subjects, newsreels, trailers, or serials (hereinafter collectively referred to as shorts) as a condition of licensing features. No distributor defendant shall require an exhibitor to license reissues, westerns,[1] or foreigns[2] (hereinafter collectively referred to as foreigns) as a condition of licensing other features.

[fol. 3450] Where a license has been entered into, controversies arising upon a complaint by an exhibitor that the licensing to him of one group of features was conditioned by the distributor upon the licensing of another feature or group of features or the licensing of shorts or foreigns shall be subject to arbitration. An exhibitor shall have no right to assert any such claim unless he shall have mailed to the distributor at its Home Office a notice in writing of such claim and of the grounds thereof, not later than two days after receipt by the exhibitor of the distributor's written approval of the exhibitor's signed application or applications for such features, shorts or foreigns. The power[3] of the arbitrator in deciding any such controversy shall be limited to making (1) a finding as to whether or not the licensing of such features was so conditioned; and, if the finding be in the affirmative, (2) an award cancelling the license for (or to the extent that it may relate to) such other feature or group of features, or such shorts or foreigns.

Where no license has been entered into, controversies arising upon a complaint by an exhibitor that a distributor defendant has offered for license to him more than five

---

[1] Westerns are those western pictures which are not of the usual character and type of, and are inexpensively produced as compared with, the distributor's general line of features.

[2] Foreigns are features produced outside of the United States except such as are produced in the English language by the distributor or a subsidiary or affiliate thereof.

[3] When, in any arbitration under this decree, the finding of the arbitrator shall be that the complainant has not sustained his complaint, the arbitrator shall enter an award dismissing the complaint.

features in a single group or that the offer of a license to him of one group of features was conditioned upon the licensing of another feature or group of features, or the licensing of shorts or foreigns, shall be subject to arbitration. An exhibitor shall have no right to assert any claim that an offer so to license such features was so made or [fol. 3451] conditioned unless he shall have mailed to the distributor at its Home Office a notice in writing of such claim and of the grounds therefor not later than five days after the exhibitor claims the alleged offer was made. The power [4] of the arbitrator in deciding any such controversy shall be limited to making (1) a finding as to whether or not the offer to license such features was so made or conditioned; and, if the finding be in the affirmative, (2) an award imposing upon the distributor making such offer a penalty in an amount not to exceed five hundred dollars ($500.00). Such penalty shall be payable into the arbitration fund referred to in subdivision 8 of Section XXII hereof.

No license for features to be exhibited in theatres located in one exchange district [1] shall include theatres located in another exchange district, nor shall the licensing of features for exhibition in theatres located in one exchange district be conditioned upon the licensing of a feature or group of features for exhibition in theatres located in another exchange district.

Controversies arising upon a complaint by an exhibitor thereby affected that the licensing by a distributor defendant of features for exhibition in theatres located in one exchange district was conditioned upon the licensing of a feature or group of features for exhibition in theatres located in another exchange district shall be subject to arbi- [fol. 3452] tration. The power [2] of the arbitrator in deciding any such controversy shall be limited to making (1) a finding as to whether or not the licensing of features for exhibition in theatres located in one exchange district was so conditioned upon the licensing of a feature or group of [4] See footnote 3 to this Section.

[1] See footnote 4 to Section III.

features for exhibition in theatres located in another exchange district; and, if the finding be in the affirmative, (2) an award imposing upon the distributor defendant so licensing features a penalty in an amount not to exceed five hundred dollars ($500.00), payable into the arbitration fund referred to in subdivision 8 of Section XXII hereof.

VI

No distributor defendant shall refuse to license its pictures for exhibition in an exhibitor's theatre on some run (to be designated by the distributor) upon terms and conditions fixed by the distributor which are not calculated to defeat the purpose of this Section, if the exhibitor can satisfy reasonable minimum standards of theatre operation and is reputable and responsible, unless the granting of a run on any terms to such exhibitor for said theatre will have the effect of reducing the distributor's total film revenue in the competitive area in which such exhibitor's theatre is located. Controversies arising upon a complaint by an exhibitor that, contrary to the provisions of this Section, a distributor defendant has refused so to license its pictures shall be subject to arbitration. The power[1] of the arbitrator in deciding any such controversy shall be limited to [fol. 3453] making (1) a finding as to whether or not, contrary to the provisions of this Section, the distributor has refused to license its pictures to the complainant for exhibition in said theatre; and, if the finding be in the affirmative, (2) an award directing the distributor to offer its pictures for license to the complainant for exhibition in said theatre on a run to be designated by the distributor and upon terms and conditions fixed by the distributor which are not calculated to defeat the purpose of this Section. The burden of showing that granting a run on any terms to the complainant will have the effect of reducing the distributor's total film revenue in the competitive area in which the complainant's theatre is located shall be upon the distributor.

[1] See footnote 3 to Section IV.

Any distributor defendant affected by such an award may institute a further arbitration proceeding to be relieved therefrom on the ground that since the making of the award the granting of a run in compliance therewith has had the effect of reducing the distributor's total film revenue in the competitive area in which the complainant's theatre is located, and, in the event that the arbitrator finds that the granting of a run in compliance with the award has had the effect of reducing the distributor's total film revenue in said area, he shall vacate the award.[1]

VII

Controversies arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that a feature licensed to him by a distributor defendant for exhibition in a particular theatre is generally offensive in the locality served by such theatre on moral, religious [fol. 3454] or racial grounds shall be subject to arbitration. An exhibitor shall have no right to assert any such claim unless written notice of his election to cancel such feature, together with a statement of his reasons therefor, shall have been mailed to the distributor defendant at its Home Office not later than ten days after the receipt by the exhibitor of the distributor's written approval of the exhibitor's signed application for such feature. In such event the license in so far as it relates to the exhibition of such feature in the theatre specified in the notice shall be deemed cancelled unless within five days after receipt of such notice, the distributor shall have mailed to the exhibitor a notice in writing of its denial of such claim and of its intention to arbitrate the controversy. The power[1] of the arbitrator in deciding any such controversy shall be limited to making (1) a finding as to whether or not the feature is generally offensive in the locality served by the exhibitor's theatre on moral, religious or racial grounds; and, if the finding be in the affirmative, (2) an award cancelling the license in so far as it relates to the exhibition of such feature in said theatre.

VIII

Controversies arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that the clearance[1] applicable to his theatre is unreasonable

[1] See footnote 3 to Section IV.

[1] (Section VII) See footnote 3 to Section IV.

[1] (Section VIII) Clearance means the period of time, fixed by agerement between a distributor and an exhibitor, prior to the expiration of which a feature licensed for prior exhibition in a theatre may not be exhibited in another theatre or theatres.

[fol. 3455] shall be subject to arbitration under the following provisions:

It is recognized that clearance, reasonable as to time and area, is essential in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures.

In determining whether any clearance complained of is unreasonable, the arbitrator shall take into consideration the following factors and accord to them the importance and weight to which each is entitled, regardless of the order in which they are listed:

(1) The historical development of clearance in the particular area where the theatres involved are located;

(2) The admission prices of the theatres involved;

(3) The character and location of the theatres involved, including size, type of entertainment, appointments, transit facilities, etc.;

(4) The policy of operation of the theatres involved, such as the showing of double features, gift nights, give-aways, premiums, cut rate tickets, lotteries, etc.;

(5) The rental terms and license fees paid by the theatres involved and the revenues derived by the distributor defendant from such theatres;

(6) The extent to which the theatres involved compete with each other for patronage; and

(7) All other business considerations, except that the arbitrator shall disregard the fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a distributor or with a circuit of theatres.

The power [2] of the arbitrator in deciding any such controversy shall be limited to making (1) a finding as to [fol. 3456] whether or not the clearance complained of is unreasonable; and, if the finding be in the affirmative, (2) an award fixing the maximum clearance between the theatres involved which may be granted in licenses thereafter entered into by the distributor defendant which is a party to the arbitration. Subject to the provisions of Section XVII hereof, the award may fix such maximum clearance under any then existing franchise or any license entered into pursuant to such franchise between such distributor defendant and any other party bound by this decree.

Any distributor defendant or any exhibitor affected by such an award may institute a further arbitration proceeding for a modification thereof upon the ground that since the making of the award the conditions with respect to the theatres involved therein have so changed as to warrant modification, and, in the event that the arbitrator finds that there has been such change,[2] he shall make a redetermination of the maximum clearance.

Nothing contained in this Section shall be deemed to restrict, and no award made in any arbitration under this Section shall restrict, the exhibitor's right to license for any theatre any run which he is able to negotiate with any distributor, nor the distributor's right to license for any theatre any run which it desires to grant.

Nothing contained in this Section and no award hereafter entered in any arbitration in accordance with its provisions shall apply to licensing the exhibition of any special [fol. 3457] feature,[3] provided such special feature is licensed under an exhibition contract applicable only thereto, or to the right of a distributor defendant to include in such contract and to make a part thereof such special terms and conditions, including such special clearance provision or provisions, as such distributor shall fix, establish and enforce for and in connection with the exhibition of such special feature.

IX

In booking prints for exhibition by exhibitors competing on the same run in the same exchange district,[1] a distributor defendant shall not withhold delivery of prints available in its exchange from one exhibitor in order to give a competing exhibitor a prior playing date not provided for in his license. It is recognized that distributors must be permitted discretion in the ordinary course of booking and distributing films in an exchange district when too few prints are available in the exchange for the playing dates

---

[2] See footnote 3 to Section IV.

[3] For the purposes of this Section, a special feature means a feature which for a period of time is exhibited at generally advanced first-run admission prices.

[1] See footnote 4 to Section III.

desired by two or more theatres. In such cases this Section shall have no application.

Violations of this Section shall be subject to arbitration and, if the arbitrator finds [2] that the distributor complained against has pursued a policy of withholding available prints from the complaining exhibitor in violation of this Section, [fol. 3458] he shall enter an award directing the distributor to discontinue such policy.

X

A. Controversies arising upon a complaint by an independent exhibitor [1] that a distributor defendant has arbitrarily refused to license its features for exhibition on the run requested by said exhibitor in one of said exhibitor's theatres which was in existence or which replaced [2] a theatre in existence at the date of this decree shall be subject to arbitration.

B. In any such arbitration no award shall be made against a distributor defendant unless the arbitrator shall first find the following facts:

(1) The complainant is an independent exhibitor and the theatre operated by him and specified in his complaint was in existence at the date of the decree or replaced such a theatre; and

(2) Such refusal of the distributor to license its features for exhibition in the complainant's theatre on the run re-

---

[2] See footnote 3 to Section IV.

[1] An independent exhibitor, as used in this Section, is one wholly independent of any circuit of more than five theatres and not affiliated either by stock ownership, common ownership, common buying or otherwise with a circuit of more than five theatres and whose licenses are not negotiated by a buying combine or common buying agent negotiating for more than five theatres.

[2] A theatre shall not be deemed to have replaced such an existing theatre unless erected in the same neighborhood as one which was destroyed or permanently abandoned as a theatre, for the purpose of succeeding to its patronage, and with a seating capacity not more than 25 percent greater than that of the theatre replaced.

quested by the complainant continued during a period of not less than three successive months; and

[fol. 3459] (3) The distributor during such period has licensed the features requested by the complainant on the run requested by him to a theatre (sometimes hereinafter referred to as a circuit theatre) which was in competition with the theatre specified in the complaint and which was a component of a circuit of not less than 15 theatres or which was affiliated either by stock ownership, common ownership, common buying or otherwise with a circuit of not less than 15 theatres or the licenses for which were negotiated by a buying combine or common buying agent negotiating for not less than 15 theatres; and

(4) The complainant's theatre has not available to it features sufficient in nature and quantity to enable it to operate on the run requested by the complainant; and

(5) (a) Subsequent to July 20, 1935 and prior to July 20, 1940 the complainant operated the theatre specified in his complaint on the same run as or on an earlier run than that enjoyed by the circuit theatre specified in the complaint; or

(b) Subsequent to July 20, 1940 and during the two consecutive motion picture seasons[3] immediately preceding the filing of the complaint, the complainant operated the theatre specified in his complaint on the same run as or on an earlier run than that enjoyed by the circuit theatre specified in the complaint and during such period exhibited on such run substantially all the features released during such period by the distributor complained against; or

[fol. 3460] (c) Subsequent to July 20, 1935 and prior to July 20, 1940 the complainant demanded in writing[4] features for the theatre specified in his complaint from the distributor complained against on the same run as or on an earlier run than that enjoyed by the circuit theatre specified in the complaint; or the complainant had filed with a Local Clearance and Zoning Board or a Local Grievance Board under

[3] A motion picture season means the period from September 1 of one year to August 31 of the next year.

[4] Demands in writing shall be deemed to include complaints in writing to the Department of Justice.

the Code of Fair Competition for the Motion Picture Industry approved pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act such a complaint which was not finally disposed of by administrative decision under said Code prior to May 27, 1935; or

(d) The complainant operated the theatre specified in his complaint for at least one year prior to the entry of this decree, and subsequent to July 20, 1935 and prior to July 20, 1940 a prior operator of said theatre had demanded in writing [5] features from the distributor complained against on the same run as or on an earlier run than that enjoyed by the circuit theatre specified in the complaint; or the complainant had filed with a Local Clearance and Zoning Board or a Local Grievance Board under the Code of Fair Competition for the Motion Picture Industry approved pursuant to the National Industrial Recovery Act such a complaint which was not finally disposed of by administrative decision under said Code prior to May 27, 1935; and

(6) Such refusal to license the exhibition of said features in the complainant's theatre specified in his complaint was in fact because the theatre licensed to exhibit them on [fol. 3461] the run requested by the complainant was a circuit theatre.

C. In determining whether the exhibitor's complaint is established by the evidence, the arbitrator shall take into consideration, among other things, the following factors and accord to them the importance and weight to which each is entitled, regardless of the order in which they are listed: the terms, if any, offered in respect of each of the two competing theatres; the seating capacity of each of said theatres, the capacity of each for producing revenue for the distributors; the character, appearance and condition of each, including its furnishings, equipment and conveniences; the location of each of said theatres; the character and extent of the area and population each serves; the competitive conditions in the area in which they are located; their comparative suitability[6] for exhibition of the distributor's features on the run requested; the character and ability of the exhibitor operating each and his reputation generally in the industry and in the community for showmanship, honesty and fair dealing; the policy under which each of the theatres has been operated and the policy under which the complainant proposes to operate his said theatre if he obtains the run requested; the financial responsibility of the exhibitor operating each of said theatres; and the dis-[fol. 3462] tributor's prior relations with each of the two theatres involved and with their owners and operators and any equities arising therefrom.

D. If in any such arbitration the arbitrator finds[7] for the complainant, he may enter an award against the distributor which shall not affect the license to exhibit any feature then under license to the circuit theatre but which shall prohibit such distributor from thereafter licensing its features for exhibition either in the circuit theatre specified in the complaint on the run requested by the complainant, or in the complainant's theatre specified in the complaint, on such run, otherwise then by a separate contract or agreement which shall not be a part of any contract or agreement for the licensing of features for exhibition in any other theatre or conditioned upon the licensing of features for exhibition in any other theatre.

E. After a final award in favor of a complaining exhibitor has been made under this section, such exhibitor may institute a further arbitration proceeding (to be held before the arbitrator who entered the original award if available) upon the ground that such award has not been complied with in good faith by the distributor against which it was entered. If in any such proceeding the arbitrator shall find[7] that the distributor has not complied in good faith with the original award, the arbitrator may award damages to the exhibitor for loss resulting from the distributor's [6] "- considering this factor in situations where the exhibitor customarily exhibits features in two or more theatres on the same run in the same situation as a unit by contracting for groups of features on an "or" basis (i. e., for exhibition at one of two or more specified theatres) all of such theatres may be considered collectively as a unit.

---

[7] See footnote 3 to Section IV.

failure to comply with the original award but any such award of damages shall be purely compensatory.

[fol. 3463] Any further arbitration proceeding for an award of damages for violation of the original award must be commenced within sixty days after such violation has occurred, by filing a statement specifying the facts constituting each alleged violation for which damages are sought and the exhibitor's alleged damages resulting from each such alleged violation. No award of damages shall be made in any such proceeding for any violation of the original award not occurring within said sixty day period, but prior violations may, in any such proceeding, be considered by the arbitrator as evidence bearing upon the question of the distributor's good faith.

XI

(1) For a period of three years after the entry of the decree herein each of the consenting defendants will notify [1] the Department of Justice immediately of any legally binding commitment for the acquisition by it of any additional theatre or theatres.

(2) During such period each such defendant will also report [1] to the Department of Justice on or before the tenth day of each month the changes in its theatre position, if any, that have occurred during the preceding month, as [fol. 3464] follows, together with a statement of the reasons for such changes:

(a) Theatres contracted to be built, or under construction;

(b) Theatres lost or disposed of;

(c) Theatres acquired;

(d) Interests in theatres acquired, with a statement of the nature and extent of such interests.

[1] The notification and report shall include such commitments and changes as may have been made by corporations not parties to this decree which are controlled by such defendant. They shall also include such commitments or changes as may have been made by corporations in which such defendant owns a financial interest but which it does not control, if such defendant has received knowledge of such commitments or changes. Each defendant will request such corporations to notify it immediately of any such commitment or change.

(3) If upon receipt of such information the Department of Justice requests any such defendant to furnish further information with respect to any of the above transactions in which it is involved, such defendant will make a reasonable effort to supply such information promptly.

(4) No information furnished under subdivision (1), (2) or (3) hereof shall be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice, except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party, or as otherwise required by law.

(5) For a period of three years following the entry of this decree, no consenting defendant shall enter upon a general program of expanding its theatre holdings. Nothing herein shall prevent any such defendant from acquiring theatres or interests therein to protect its investment or its competitive position or for ordinary purpose of its business. Proceedings based on a violation of this subdivision (5) shall be only by application to the Court for injunctive relief against the consenting defendant complained against, which [fol. 3465] shall be limited to restraining the acquisition, or ordering the divestiture, of the theatres or interests therein, if any, about to be acquired, or acquired, in violation of this Section.

XII

(a) If, prior to June 1, 1942, a decree shall not have been entered against the defendants United Artists Corporation, Universal Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation, requiring each of them to trade show its features before licensing the same for exhibition, Section III of this decree, after said date, shall be inoperative and of no binding force and effect upon the consenting defendants, or any of them, except with respect to licenses entered into prior to September 1, 1942, for the exhibition of features released prior to such date and subsequent to August 31, 1941.

(b) If, prior to June 1, 1942, a decree shall not have been entered against the defendants United Artists Corporation, Universal Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation, limiting the number of features which may be licensed in a single group, subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree, after said date, shall be inoperative and of no binding force and effect upon the consenting defendants, or any of them, except with respect to licenses entered into prior to September 1, 1942, for the exhibition of features released prior to such date and subsequent to August 31, 1941.

(c) If, prior to June 1, 1942, a decree shall have been entered against the defendants United Artists Corporation, Universal Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation containing provisions requiring each of them to trade show [fol. 3466] its features before licensing the same for exhibition, any consenting defendant may at any time thereafter file herein a written notice of its election to be relieved from further compliance with Section III of this decree and to comply with said provisions of such decree against said defendants United Artists Corporation, Universal Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation, and thereupon an order or supplemental decree shall be entered herein on the application of the defendant or defendants so electing which shall subject said defendant or defendants to such provisions of such other decree and entitle it or them to the benefits of any terms thereof providing for the suspension, modification or vacation of said provisions, and relieve it or them from further compliance with the provisions of Section III of this decree.

(d) If, prior to June 1, 1942, a decree shall have been entered against the defendants United Artists Corporation, Universal Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation containing provisions limiting the number of features which may be licensed in a single group, any consenting defendant may at any time thereafter file herein a written notice of its election to be relieved from further compliance with subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree and to comply with said provisions of such decree against said defendants United Artists Corporation, Universal Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation, and thereupon an order or supplemental decree shall be entered herein on the application of the defendant or defendants so electing which shall subject such defendant or defendants to said provisions of such other decree and entitle it or them to the [fol. 3467] benefits of any terms thereof providing for the suspension, modification or vacation of said provisions, and relieve it or them from further compliance with the provisions of subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree.

(e) If, prior to June 1, 1942, (1) a decree containing the provisions referred to in subdivision (c) hereof, or (2) a decree containing the provisions referred to in subdivision (d) hereof, or (3) a decree containing the provisions referred to in both of said subdivisions, shall have been entered against the defendants United Artists Corporation, Universal Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation, but an appeal therefrom has been taken or any of said provisions have not become operative and of full force and effect, then the operation of the provisions dealing with the same subject matter contained in Section III or subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree shall be suspended and shall be of no binding force and effect upon any consenting defendant except with respect to licenses entered into prior to September 1, 1942, for the exhibition of features released prior to said date and subsequent to August 31, 1941, unless and until such decree shall become final and such provisions shall be in full force and effect against the defendants United Artists Corporation, Universal Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation. After such decree shall have become final, any consenting defendant may at any time exercise its right of election provided for in subdivisions (c) and (d) of this Section.

(f) If, at any time, an Act of Congress or a rule or regulation made pursuant to an Act of Congress shall require the trade showing of features before licensing the same [fol. 3468] for exhibition, each of the consenting defendants shall be relieved from further compliance with Section III of this decree, and if, at any time, an Act of Congress or a rule or regulation made pursuant to an Act of Congress shall limit the number of features that may be licensed in a single group, each of the consenting defendants shall be relieved from further compliance with subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree. In either of such events any consenting defendant may at any time make application to this Court, of which notice shall be served upon Petitioner and all other consenting defendants, for an order relieving the consenting defendants, and each of them, from further compliance with Section III or subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree, or both, as the case may be, and vacating the same, and thereupon this Court shall make and enter such an order.

(g) At any time after September 1, 1943, any consenting defendant may move to vacate the then effective provisions of Section III and subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree by filing an application under oath stating that during any consecutive twelve months period preceding the filing of such application either (1) distributors of motion picture films have licensed 25 percent or more of the features released for exhibition in the United States otherwise than in accordance with the then effective provisions of Section III and subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree [1] or (2) 12½ percent or more of the total gross income from [fol. 3469] licenses for the exhibition of motion pictures in the United States, excluding the gross income of states rights exchanges, has been derived from pictures licensed otherwise than in accordance with the then effective provisions of Section III and subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree.[1]

Petitioner and all other consenting defendants shall be served with notice of the filing of such application.

Upon such application the Court shall enter an order relieving the defendants from further compliance with the provisions of Section III and subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree, unless within sixty (60) days after service of such application Petitioner shall establish to the satisfaction of the Court that during said twelve months period less than 12½ percent of the total gross income from licenses for the exhibition of motion pictures in the United States, excluding the gross income of states rights exchanges, had been derived from pictures licensed otherwise than in accordance with the then effective provisions of Section III and subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree.[2]

(h) At any time after September 1, 1942, any consenting defendant may apply to the Court to vacate the provisions of Section III and subdivision (a) of Section IV of this decree, or the provisions of either of such Sections, and upon such application, the Court shall enter an order relieving the consenting defendants from further compliance with

[1] Or with corresponding then effective provisions of a decree against the defendants, United Artists Corporation, Universal Corporation and Columbia Pictures Corporation, referred to in subdivisions (c) and (d) of this Section.

[fol. 3470] such provisions, upon such defendant showing to the satisfaction of the Court that, subsequent to said date and by reason of the competition of persons not selling exclusively in accordance with said provisions of said Sections, or of either of them,[2] compliance by the applicant defendant with such provisions of said Sections, or of either of them, has substantially and adversely affected the applicant defendant's business.

XIII

Nothing contained in this decree shall apply to operations or activities of any consenting defendant outside of the continental United States[1] or to operations or activities of any consenting defendant within the continental United States in so far as they relate to the disrtibution or exhibition of motion pictures outside of the continental United States.

XIV

Nothing contained in this decree shall be construed to limit or affect the right of any distributor defendant, prior to the general release of a motion picture, to road show such picture or to license or otherwise arrange for the road showing[1] of such picture upon such terms and conditions as may be fixed by the distributor.

[fol. 3471]

XV

The provisions of this decree shall not apply to any franchise which was signed prior to June 6, 1940, or to any license entered into pursuant to any such franchise, except that Section VIII hereof shall apply to all such franchises and such licenses between parties bound by this decree other than licenses referred to in Section XVII hereof.

---

[2] See footnote 1 to this Section.

[1] (Section XIII) The continental United States as used herein means the territory within the boundaries of the forty-eight states and the District of Columbia.

[1] (Section XIV) Road showing is an exhibition at a theatre where a majority of the main floor seats for each evening performance are reserved and sold at an admission price of not less than one dollar.

XVI

No consenting defendant and no officer, director, agent or employee of any such defendant, shall be deemed to have violated any provision of this decree if the arbitration of disputes or controversies arising relative to the subject matter thereof is herein provided for, unless such defendant has refused to arbitrate such a dispute or controversy in the manner and under the conditions specified in this decree and in the Rules of Arbitration and Appeals which are filed herewith, as amended from time to time, or has failed or refused to abide by and perform the final award [1] made and entered in such an arbitration proceeding.

XVII

Nothing contained in this decree shall be construed to limit, impair or restrict in any way whatsoever the right [fol. 3472] of each distributor defendant [1] to license the exhibition, or in any way to arrange or provide for the exhibition in such manner, upon such terms and subjected to such conditions as may be satisfactory to it, of any or of all of the motion pictures which it may at any time distribute (1) in any theatre in the ownership, lease, management or operation, or in the proceeds or profits from the management or operation, of which it directly or indirectly, by stock ownership or otherwise, owns a financial interest at [1] (Section XVI) For the purposes of this Section the final award in any arbitration proceeding under Section X of this decree shall be only a final award for damages as therein provided.

[1] (Section XVII) For the purpose of this Section (1) defendant RKO Radio Pictures, Inc., or its successors, shall be deemed to have the same interest in the ownership, lease, management or operation or in the proceeds or profits from the management or operation of any theatre which Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, or its successors, directly or indirectly, has; and (2) defendant Vitagraph, Inc., or its successors, shall be deemed to have the same interest in the ownership, lease, management or operation or in the proceeds or profits from the management or operation of any theatre which Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., or its successors, directly or indirectly, has.

the time of the entry of this decree and also at the time of such license, and (2) in any theatre in the ownership, lease, management or operation, or in the proceeds or profits from the management or operation, of which such distributor defendant accquires after the date of the decree and owns at the time of such license directly or indirectly by stock ownership or otherwise, a financial interest of not less than 50 per cent and (3) in any theatre in the ownership, lease, management, or operation, or in the proceeds or profits from the management or operation, of which a company in which such defendant owned not less than 42 per cent of the common stock at the date of the decree and at the [fol. 3473] time of such license,[2] acquires after the date of the decree and owns at the time of such license, directly or indirectly, by stock ownership or otherwise, a financial interest of not less than 50 per cent.

XVIII

For the purpose of securing compliance with this decree, and for no other purpose, duly authorized representatives of the Department of Justice shall, on the written request of the Attorney or the Assistant Attorney General in charge of antitrust matters, and on notice to any consenting defendant, reasonable as to time and subject matter, made to such defendant at its principal office, and subject to any legally recognized privilege, (1) be permitted reasonable access, during the office hours of such defendant, to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of such defendant, relating to any of the matters contained in this decree, and (2) subject to the reasonable convenience of such defendant, and without restraint or interference from it, be permitted to interview its officers or employees regarding any such matters, at which inter- [fol. 3474] view counsel for the officer or employee interviewed and counsel for the company may be present. Without in any way limiting the rights granted in the foregoing provisions of this Section each of the distributor defendants shall keep at its principal office current records, which shall be accessible for the purpose aforesaid, showing——

[2] In the case of the distributor defendant Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, or its sucessors, the defendant National Theatres Corporation, or its successors, shall be deemed to be such a company if said distributor defendant owned not less than 42 per cent of its common stock at the date of the decree and not less than 35 per cent of its common stock at the time of such license, provided not less than 42 per cent of its common stock is owned by Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation, or its successors, and by present or future officers or directors of National Theatres Corporation, or its successors.

(1) The dates when and the places where each of its features is trade shown, the names of the trade publications wherein notice of each trade showing was published, and the dates of publication; the name and location (by town and exchange district [1]) of each theatre in which each feature is licensed for exhibition, and the date of license thereof;

(2) As to each license entered into by it, the date thereof and the names and location (by town and exchange district [1]) of the theatres involved, the names of the parties thereto and of the distributor's sales representative who negotiated the license, and the names of the features licensed for exhibition;

(3) All arbitration awards rendered against the distributor with a statement showing what the distributor has done to comply therewith.

Information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this Section shall not be divulged by any representative of the Department of Justice to any person other than a duly authorized representative of the Department of Justice except in the course of legal proceedings to which the United States is a party, or as otherwise required by law.

[fol. 3475] XIX

Except as otherwise expressly and specifically provided in this decree, nothing herein shall be construed to limit the right of any distributor defendant to select its own customers, to bargain with them in accordance with law, or to negotiate with or to license to or to accept any offer from any exhibitor to license its motion pictures or any number thereof upon such terms and conditions as it deems advisable or to its best interests.

XX

The provisions of Section III, of subdivision (a) of Section IV, of Section V and of Section X of this decree shall have application only with respect to features released in the United States after August 31, 1941.

XXI

Petitioner, by its counsel, has represented to the Court that the public interest requires that the provisions of this decree shall operate for a trial period of three years from the date of entry hereof. Petitioner has further represented to the Court, and each of the consenting defendants has consented to the entry of this decree upon the condition, that Petitioner will not for a period of three years, after the entry of this decree, either in this action of any other action or proceeding against any such defendant seek either the relief or any thereof prayed in paragraphs (4), (5) and (6) of Section VIII of the Petition filed herein July 20, 1939, or in paragraphs (5), (6) and (7) of Section VIII of the [fol. 3476] Amended and Supplemental Complaint filed herein November 14, 1940, or otherwise seek to divorce the production or distribution of motion pictures from their exhibition; or to dissolve any such defendant or any corporation in which any such defendant has, directly or indirectly, a substantial stock interest and which is engaged in the exhibition of motion pictures or holds directly or indirectly a substantial stock interest in any corporation so engaged, or to dissolve or break up any circuit of theatres of any such defendant or of any such corporation, or to require any such defendant, corporation or circuit to divest itself of its interests or any thereof, direct or indirect, in motion picture theatres in which it had an interest at the date of the entry of this decree.

XXII

1. The method and conditions of and the procedure for the arbitration of claims and controversies hereinbefore provided for in this decree, as well as the arbitration of claims and controversies provided for in any decree referring to this decree which may be entered by the ...rict Court of the United States for the Northern Dis...t of Illinois, Eastern Division, in an action entitled "United States of America, Petitioner, against Balaban & Katz Corporation, et al., Defendants", modifying a consent decree entered in said action on April 6, 1932 and the arbitration of claims and controversies provided for in any decree referring to this decree which may be entered by the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California, Central Division, in an action entitled "United [fol. 3477] States of America; Plaintiff, vs. West Coast Theatres, Incorporated, et al., Defendants", modifying a consent decree entered in said action on August 21, 1930, shall be as specified in this Section and in the Rules of Arbitration and Appeals which are provided for hereinafter.

2. An arbitration system for the arbitration of claims and controversies referred to in this decree shall be administered by an impartial Administrator.

The Administrator shall establish and maintain an Arbitration Tribunal in each city in the United States in which three or more of the distributor defendants shall maintain exchanges.

The Administrator shall establish and maintain a panel of not less than ten arbitrators for each Arbitration Tribunal and shall establish and maintain suitable offices and personnel, including a clerk, for each Arbitration Tribunal and for the Appeal Board provided for hereinafter. The Administrator shall have the power to appoint and remove members of the panels and personnel.

3. No person shall be appointed a member of any panel of arbitrators who has any financial interest in, or has or has had any connection with, the production, distribution or exhibition of motion pictures, or has or has had any interest in any motion picture theatre as landlord, lessor, or otherwise.

4. The American Arbitration Association is appointed Administrator of the arbitration system under this decree, and is authorized and directed to perform the duties and functions of such Administrator until further order of the Court.

[fol. 3478] Any successor to the American Arbitration Association as Administrator shall be appointed by the Court on the joint application and recommendation of the Petitioner and of a majority of the distributor defendants, except that if the Petitioner and a majority of the distributor defendants fail to join in making such application and recommendation the successor Administrator shall be appointed by the Court.

5. There shall be a Budget Committee consisting of three members, one of whom shall be appointed by the Administrator, one of whom shall be appointed by the distributor defendants, and one of whom shall be the Chairman of the Appeal Board. The Budget Committee shall budget the cost of the maintenance and operation of the arbitration system. Such budget for the first twelve months of the operation of the arbitration system shall not exceed four hundred ninety thousand dollars ($490,000.00), except with the consent of a majority of the distributor defendants. The budget for each succeeding twelve months period shall not exceed four hundred sixty-five thousand dollars ($465,000.00), except with the consent of a majority of the distributor defendants, provided, however, that the Court may, on the application of the Petitioner, and for good cause shown, order an increase in the budget for any year in such amount, not exceeding fifty thousand dollars ($50,000.00), as it may find necessary for the effective operation of the arbitration system.

6. Each arbitrator shall be selected and each arbitration proceeding shall be conducted in the manner prescribed by the Rules of Arbitration and Appeals which [fol. 3479] are filed herewith and are hereby approved. Such Rules may be amended or added to from time to time by the Administrator with the approval of a majority of the Appeal Board upon notice to the Petitioner and to the distributor defendants of such proposed amendments or additions and an opportunity for a hearing thereon. No amendment of or addition to such Rules shall change the qualifications of arbitrators as set forth in Rule II of such Rules or deny to any exhibitor or distributor defendant the right to intervene as a party in any proceeding by which it may be affected or deny to any party to an arbitration proceeding the right: to receive notice of all proceedings therein; to participate in the selection of arbitrators; to challenge the qualifications of arbitrators; to be represented by counsel or otherwise; to secure the production of witnesses and of evidence; to examine and cross-examine all witnesses; and to appeal to the Appeal Board from any adverse award. The Rules may provide for the arbitration of claims and controversies between distributor defendants and exhibitors other than claims or controversies referred to in subdivision 1 of this Section which by agreement between the parties thereto shall be submitted to the tribunals.

7. There shall be an Appeal Board which shall have jurisdiction to determine appeals from awards made by the Arbitration Tribunals. It shall consist of three members appointed by the Court, each of whom shall be a person of known impartiality and distinction. Each such member shall be appointed for a term of three years and shall serve during such term unless he shall be removed [fol. 3480] by order of the Court or shall resign. Each member of the Appeal Board shall be eligible for reappointment.

If any member of the Appeal Board is disqualified from passing upon any appeal, or is temporarily unable because of illness, absence or other cause to act as a member of the Appeal Board, the Court may on application of one or more members of the Appeal Board appoint another person of known impartiality and distinction to act as a temporary member of the Appeal Board in place of the member so disqualified or unable to act. The compensation of such temporary member shall be fixed by the Court.

One member of the Appeal Board shall be designated by the Court as the Chairman of the Board.

The members of the Appeal Board shall be compensated on an annual basis. The Chairman of the Board shall be paid twenty-thousand dollars ($20,000.00) per annum, and each of the other members of the Board shall be paid seventeen thousand five hundred dollars ($17,500.00) per annum.

The Appeal Board shall have its offices in New York, New York.

8. The expenses of the arbitration system shall be paid out of a fund administered by the Administrator. Such fund shall be established and maintained: by filing fees provided for by the Rules of Arbitration and Appeals;

by penalties imposed in accordance with the provisions of Sections IV and V of this decree, and by such additional amounts, to be paid by the distributor defendants, as may be determined by the Budget Committee from time to time [fol. 3481] to be necessary. Such amounts shall be assessed by the Administrator to and shall be paid by the several distributor defendants in amounts proportionate to their respective gross receipts from licenses for the exhibition of motion pictures in the United States. The proportionate gross receipts of such defendants during the 1939-40 motion picture season shall be used in determing the amount to be paid by each such defendant for the expenses of establishing the arbitration system and of maintaining it during the first twelve months of its operation. Thereafter the gross receipts for the motion picture season ending on the August 31st immediately preceding the start of the particular twelve months period shall be used in determining such amounts.

Each distributor defendant shall inform the Administrator promptly after the end of each motion picture season of its total gross receipts during such motion picture season from licenses for the exhibition of motion pictures in the United States. Such information shall be treated by the Administrator as confidential and shall not be divulged except as required by law.

9. Any person who has the right to institute an arbitration proceeding under any provision of this decree or of any other decree referred to in subdivision 1 of this Section may institute and prosecute such proceeding in the manner and subject to the conditions specified in the Rules of Arbitration and Appeals, upon the condition that such person file with the Clerk of the Arbitration Tribunal a submission, in the form and executed in the manner prescribed by the Administrator, which shall provide in [fol. 3482] substance that such complainant submits the controversy to arbitration and undertakes to abide by and to comply fully with whatever final award may be entered therein.

Any exhibitor or distributor who intervenes as a party in any arbitration proceeding as provided in the Rules of Arbitration and Appeals, shall file with the Clerk of the Arbitration Tribunal a submission, in the form and executed in the manner prescribed by the Administrator, which shall provide, in substance, that such intervenor submits to the arbitration and undertakes to abide by and to accept whatever final award may be entered therein.

Representatives of the Department of Justice, duly authorized in writing, shall be permitted reasonable access during regular office hours to all books, ledgers, accounts, correspondence, memoranda and other records and documents in the possession or under the control of the Appeal Board, of the Arbitration Tribunal, and of the Administrator, which relate to the arbitration system and to the arbitration of claims and controversies under this decree.

XXIII

Jurisdiction of this cause is retained for the purpose of:

(a) Enabling any of the parties to this decree to apply to the Court at any time for such orders and directions as may be necessary or appropriate for the construction or carrying out of this decree, for the enforcement of compliance therewith, and for the punishment of violations thereof;

[fol. 3483] (b) Enabling any of the parties to this decree to apply to the Court at any time for a modification of this decree in order to conform it to any Act of Congress enacted after the entry of this decree;

(c) Enabling any consenting defendant to make any application to the Court referred to in any provision of this decree;

(d) Enabling any of the parties to this decree to apply to the Court at any time more than three years after the date of the entry of this decree for any modification thereof;

(e) Enabling any consenting defendant to apply to the Court at any time more than three years after the date of the entry of this decree, to vacate this decree, or any modification thereof, or to vacate or modify any provision thereof, on the ground that under the economic or competitive conditions existing at the time of such application, this decree or any modification thereof, or any provision thereof, is inappropriate or unnecessary, or oppressive or unduly burdensome, regardless of whether or not such economic or competitive conditions are new or unforeseen. The right of each consenting defendant to make any such application and to obtain such relief is expressly reserved by them and is hereby expressly granted.

Whenever obligations or prohibitions are imposed upon the defendants by the laws of any State or by rules or regulations made pursuant thereto, with which the defendants by law must comply, the Court, upon application of the defendants, or any of them, shall from time to time enter orders relieving the defendants from compliance with any requirement of this decree in conflict with such laws, [fol. 3484] rules or regulations, and the right of the defendants to make such applications and to obtain such relief is expressly granted.

Any application by any party to this decree under the provisions of this Section shall be made in open court upon notice to all of the other parties to this decree, and each such party, upon such application, shall have the right and privilege of requiring the production of witnesses upon whose testimony such application is sought or opposed, and of examining and cross-examining such witnesses in accordance with the rules of the Court.

Dated November 20th, 1940.

Henry W. Goddard, United States District Judge.

[Title omitted]

RULES OF ARBITRATION AND APPEALS PURSUANT TO SUB-DIVISION 6 OF SECTION XXII OF THE DECREE IN THE ABOVE ENTITLED ACTION

I. Initiation of arbitration

An arbitration proceeding shall be initiated by filing with the Clerk of the Tribunal having jurisdiction of the controversy a Demand for Arbitration and a submission as provided in subdivision 9 of Section XXII of the [fol. 3488] Decree, and by paying a filing fee of $10.00 to the Clerk of the Tribunal.

Filed herewith and made a part of these Rules is a map[1] showing the territory throughout which each Arbitration Tribunal shall have jurisdiction (each of which territories is hereinafter called an Arbitration District), and the city in each such Arbitration District in which the Arbitration Tribunal shall be located. The Tribunal having jurisdiction in a particular proceeding shall be the Tribunal maintained pursuant to Section XXII of the Decree in the Arbitration District in which the complainant's theatre is located, excepted that when a distributor institutes an arbitration proceeding the Tribunal having jurisdiction shall be the Tribunal in the Arbitration District in which the theatre involved is located.

[1] Not printed herein.

The Demand for Arbitration shall be signed by the complainant and shall set forth:

The name and address of the complaining party; the name and address of each theatre involved in the controversy; the name and address of each exhibitor or distributor against whom complaint is made (hereafter sometimes referred to as a defending party); the name and address of each other exhibitor and distributor whose business or property it is believed by the complainant may be affected by an award in the proceeding; and a brief statement in simple language of the claim and the relief sought.

At the time of filing the Demand the complainant shall deliver to the Clerk of the Tribunal sufficient copies of the Demand to enable the Clerk to deliver one copy to each [fol. 3489] defending party and to each other exhibitor and distributor named in the Demand, and the Clerk shall forthwith make such delivery.

Within seven days after the date on which the Clerk of the Tribunal delivers a copy of the Demand to a defending party, such party may sign and file with the Clerk of the Tribunal a list giving the name and address of each exhibitor or distributor not named in the Demand whose business or property it is believed by such party may be affected by an award in the proceeding.

The Clerk of the Tribunal shall forthwith deliver a copy of the Demand to each exhibitor and distributor named in any list filed by a defending party.

Any exhibitor or distributor named either in the Demand or in any list filed by any defending party and any other exhibitor or distributor whose business or property may be affected by an award in the proceeding may, at any time prior to the commencement of the first hearing, intervene and thereby become a party to the proceeding by filing with the Clerk of the Tribunal a statement which shall set forth his interest as an intervenor in the proceeding and a submission as provided in subdivision 9 of Section XXII of the Decree and by paying a filing fee of $10.00 to the Clerk of the Tribunal. The Clerk of the Tribunal shall forthwith deliver notice of each intervention to each other party to the proceeding.

Any party who intervenes more than fifteen days after the filing of the Demand shall not be entitled to participate in the selection of the arbitrator.

[fol. 3490] If, at any time after the fifteenth day following the filing of the Demand and prior to the appointment of an arbitrator, all parties to a proceeding who became parties, by intervention or otherwise, on or before said fifteenth day shall by written agreement select another Tribunal as the Tribunal having jurisdiction and file such agreement with the Clerk of the Tribunal originally having jurisdiction, jurisdiction of the proceeding shall thereby be transferred to the Tribunal so selected. Thereafter no further proceedings shall be had in the Tribunal originally having jurisdiction except that the Clerk thereof shall forthwith deliver notice of such transfer to the American Arbitration Association and shall forthwith deliver the entire file in such proceeding to the Clerk of the Tribunal so selected, who shall forthwith take the action prescribed in Rule III for the appointment of an Arbitrator from the Panel of Arbitrators for his Tribunal.

II. Qualifications of arbitrators

No person shall be appointed a member of a Panel of Arbitrators established in accordance with the Decree who has any financial interest in, or has or has had any connection with, the production, distribution or exhibition of motion pictures, or has or has had any interest in any motion picture theatre, as landlord, lessor or otherwise.

No member of a Panel shall serve as an arbitrator in any proceeding if he has or has had any financial or other relations with any party to the proceeding, or has any interest in the result of the proceeding, or has any personal [fol. 3491] bias, which might prejudice the right of any party to a fair and impartial award.

III. Appointment of arbitrators

Not less than fifteen nor more than seventeen days after the filing of the Demand in accordance with Rule

I, the Clerk of the Tribunal shall deliver to each party an identical list of arbitrators selected from the Panel of Arbitrators, for the purpose of enabling the parties to indicate thereon their preference of arbitrators. If the Clerk of the Tribunal does not receive the list from any party within seven days after the delivery of the list to such party, all the names on such list shall be deemed acceptable to such party.

The Clerk of the Tribunal shall forthwith appoint an arbitrator from the names indicated as acceptable to all parties. In the event no name appears from the lists to be acceptable to all parties, or that none of those shown to be acceptable is available, the American Arbitration Association shall appoint an arbitrator from the remaining members of the Panel.

Not less than sixteen days after the filing of the Demand and prior to the appointment of an arbitrator, (or in the case of an arbitration of a controversy under either Section IV or Section VII of the Decree, at any time prior to the appointment of an arbitrator) the parties to any controversy may by written agreement unanimously appoint one or more arbitrators from the Panel of Arbitrators to arbitrate such controversy, by filing such agreement with the Clerk of the Tribunal.

No irregularity in the appointment of an arbitrator [fol. 3492] shall affect the validity of the proceeding or of the award.

Notice of appointment shall forthwith be given to the arbitrator by the Clerk of the Tribunal, and a signed acceptance obtained.

IV. Removal of arbitrator and filling of vacancy

Upon written application of any party prior to the date the arbitrator's award becomes final, the American Arbitration Association shall, upon proof satisfactory to it that an arbitrator is disqualified under Rule II, revoke the appointment of such arbitrator and declare the office vacant and the award, if any, vacated. No such action shall be taken by the American Arbitration Association in any case where an award has been made unless the applicant party shall have given five days notice of its application to all other parties. Unless application for disqualification is made immediately following a party's discovery of the reason therefor, such party shall be deemed to have waived such disqualification.

The American Arbitration Association also may revoke the appointment of an arbitrator at any time by reason of his neglect, refusal or failure to perform the duties of his office.

If the appointment of an arbitrator is revoked, or if by reason of resignation, death or illness an arbitrator is unable to perform the duties of his office, a new arbitrator shall forthwith be appointed by the Clerk of the Tribunal from among the names acceptable to the parties or by the American Arbitration Association, in accordance with the second paragraph of Rule III.

[fol. 3493] V. Hearings

Hearings shall be held at the office of the Arbitration Tribunal having jurisdiction of the controversy involved or at such other place in the same Arbitration District as may be agreed upon by the parties with the consent of the arbitrator.

Hearings shall commence as promptly as possible after the appointment of the arbitrator.

The arbitrator shall fix the time of the beginning of the hearing and may adjourn the hearing from time to time.

The Clerk of the Tribunal shall deliver to the parties written notice of the name of the arbitrator and of the time and place of the beginning of the hearing at least five days prior thereto, unless such notice is waived by the parties.

VI. Procedure at hearings

The arbitrator shall take the oath of office in the form prescribed by the Administrator before commencing the hearing.

Parties may be represented by counsel or by others.

Each party shall have the right to examine or cross-examine all witnesses.

Witnesses shall testify under oath or its legal equivalent.

Evidence shall be received only at hearings of which all parties shall have had due notice and the arbitrator in making his award shall consider only evidence so received and such inspections as he may make hereunder.

[fol. 3494] The arbitrator shall have power to require any party to produce such records or documents as the arbitrator may deem necessary to a proper determination of the controversy. In lieu of producing or offering original records or documents, any party may, with the approval of the arbitrator, produce or offer sworn copies thereof or sworn excerpts of the relevant or material portions thereof. If any party challenges the authenticity, correctness or adequacy of such documents or excerpts, the arbitrator shall determine such authenticity, correctness or adequacy. All exhibits offered in evidence shall be numbered and so marked as to indicate whether or not they were received.

The arbitrator shall be the judge of the relevancy and materiality of the evidence offered and conformity to legal rules of evidence shall not be necessary.

Whenever the arbitrator deems it necessary he may make an inspection in connection with the subject matter of the controversy upon notice to the parties.

The arbitrator may hear argument and receive briefs.

VII. Closing and reopening the proceeding

After all parties have indicated that they have no further evidence to offer, the arbitrator shall declare the proceeding closed.

Prior to the expiration of the time for making an award the arbitrator may reopen the proceeding upon his own initiative, or for good cause upon the written application of any party on five days' notice to all other parties.

At any time within twenty days after the award has been filed the arbitrator may also reopen the proceeding [fol. 3495] for the purpose of correcting inadvertent errors in the award.

VIII. Defaults and withdrawals

If any party to a proceeding defaults by failure to comply with the fourth paragraph of Rule XI or withdraws from the proceeding after an arbitrator is appointed, the proceeding shall nevertheless continue to an award unless all other parties to the proceeding consent to a dismissal. A party who defaults or withdraws shall not be entitled to participate further in the proceeding but shall be bound by the award.

IX. Powers of arbitrators

The arbitrator shall have the powers and shall perform the duties granted to and imposed upon him by the Decree and these Rules, and in making his award he shall comply with the Decree and these Rules.

X. Awards

The award shall be filed with the Clerk of the Tribunal within thirty days from the date of closing the proceeding, or from the date fixed by the arbitrator for the filing of briefs, whichever is later.

The award shall be specific, shall contain such findings as are required by the Decree and shall be signed by the arbitrator and acknowledged before a notary public or other officer duly authorized to administer oaths.

In his award the arbitrator shall assess costs against the losing party or parties or apportion them among the parties as he may deem proper. Costs shall be limited to the arbitrator's fee and the filing fees.

[fol. 3496] The Clerk of the Tribunal shall forthwith deliver a copy of the award and any corrected award to each party, with the date of filing endorsed thereon.

The award, or, if corrected, the corrected award, shall become final and binding upon the parties upon the expiration of the time for filing a notice of appeal therefrom, unless an appeal is taken in accordance with these Rules.

XI. Arbitrator's fees

The American Arbitration Association shall fix for each Arbitration District the per diem rate of the arbitrator's fee, which in no event shall exceed $50.00 per diem. The arbitrator shall be entitled to the per diem fee for each day or part thereof that he shall attend a hearing or make an inspection.

Any expenses incurred by an arbitrator in making inspections as provided in Rule VI, and in conducting hearings at other places than the Tribunal office as provided in Rule V, shall be borne equally by the parties.

No other compensation or expenses and no gratuities or benefits of any kind shall be paid to or conferred upon an arbitrator by any party.

Prior to the commencement of each day's hearing or inspection, each party to the proceeding shall deposit with the Clerk of the Tribunal a sum equal to the arbitrator's per diem fee. Failure to make such deposit shall constitute a default.

After the award is filed, the arbitrator shall be paid his fee out of the sums deposited by the parties to the proceeding. The Clerk of the Tribunal shall return any undis- [fol. 3497] bursed sums to the parties entitled thereto upon the final disposition of the controversy.

XII. Stenographic Cost [1]

The Clerk of the Tribunal shall make the necessary arrangements for the taking of a stenographic record of the testimony when such a record is requested by one or more of the parties, who shall deposit the cost thereof with the Clerk of the Tribunal.

Any party desiring a transcript of the stenographic record of the hearing shall pay the cost thereof and in the event that such party did not pay the cost of taking the stenographic record it shall reimburse the other party or parties for the cost thereof.

XIII. Extensions of Time

The parties may in writing unanimously agree to extend the time specified in any of the foregoing Rules and, except as to Rule X, the arbitrator may extend such time upon the written application of any party upon five days notice to all other parties.

XIV. Notice of Appeal

Any party to a proceeding may apeal from an award by filing a notice of appeal with, and paying a filing fee of $25.00 to, the Clerk of the Tribunal in which the award was made, not later than twenty days after the date of filing of the award or the corrected award. The Clerk of the Tribunal shall forthwith deliver a copy of the notice of appeal with [fol. 3498] the date of filing endorsed thereon to each party to the proceeding and to the Clerk of the Appeal Board.

The appellant shall have made at his own expense, and, within ten days after filing the notice of appeal, shall file with the Clerk of the Tribunal in which the award was made, three copies of the transcript of the stenographic record of the hearing or such abbreviation thereof as may be agreed upon by the parties.

XV. Record on Appeal

Upon receipt of the three copies of the transcript or an agreed abbreviation thereof filed by the appellant, the Clerk of the Tribunal shall forthwith prepare the record on appeal which shall consist of the following:

1. The Demand for Arbitration and the submission.

2. Statements and submissions of intervening parties.

3. Notice of appointment and signed acceptance of the arbitrator.

4. Clerk's record of hearing.

5. Three copies of the transcript of the stenographic record of hearing or such abbreviation thereof as may have been agreed upon by the parties.

6. Exhibits received in evidence and exhibits offered but not received in evidence, except such as may be omitted by stipulation of the parties.

7. The award.

Unless otherwise directed by the Appeal Board, the record on appeal shall remain on file in the Tribunal until the expiration of the time for filing of all briefs as provided in Rule XVI.

[fol. 3499] Immediately upon the expiration of such time the Clerk of the Tribunal shall transmit the record on appeal to the Clerk of the Appeal Board.

XVI. Proceedings on Appeal

Within thirty days after the filing of the notice of appeal, each party shall deliver a copy of his brief on appeal to every other party and file with the Clerk of the Appeal Board six copies of such brief with proof of delivery of a copy thereof to each other party.

Within forty days after the filing of the notice of appeal, each party shall deliver a copy of any answering brief to each other party and file with the Clerk of the Appeal Board six copies of such brief with proof of delivery of a copy thereof to each other party.

Upon the written agreement of all parties the Appeal Board shall, and upon its own initiative may, order oral argument. At any time not later than five days after the expiration of the time for filing answering briefs any party may apply to the Appeal Board for permission to present oral argument. Such application shall be in writing, shall state the reasons therefor and shall be filed with the Clerk of the Appeal Board, together with proof of delivery of a copy thereof to each other party. Any objection to such application shall be made in writing and filed with the Clerk of the Appeal Board, together with proof of delivery of a copy thereof to each other party, within five days after the filing of the application. The ruling on such application shall be made by the Appeal Board forthwith after the expiration of the five day period allowed for the filing of objec- [fol. 3500] tions and a copy of the ruling shall forthwith be delivered by the Clerk of the Appeal Board to all parties.

When the Appeal Board has ordered oral argument it shall fix the date thereof. The Clerk of the Appeal Board shall deliver to the parties notice in writing of the time and place of such argument, at least ten days prior thereto.

Oral arguments shall be heard by the Appeal Board only in New York, New York.

XVII. Decision and Opinion of the Appeal Board

All members of the Appeal Board shall pass on all appeals and, except as provided in Rule XIX, on all other matters, and the concurrence of two shall be necessary to a decision.

The decision of the Appeal Board together with an opinion stating the reasons therefor shall be in writing and signed by the members of the Appeal Board or a majority thereof. The decision shall be acknowledged before a notary public or other officer duly authorized to administer oaths. The decision and opinion shall be filed with the Clerk of the Appeal Board, who shall forthwith file a copy thereof with the Clerk of the Tribunal and shall forthwith deliver a copy thereof to each of the parties. The Clerk of the Tribunal shall forthwith notify each of the parties of the date of filing with him.

The Appeal Board in its decision may affirm, modify, correct or reverse the award of the arbitrator, including provision for costs therein, or may remand the proceed-[fol. 3501] ing to the Tribunal for a rehearing or for further action in accordance with the decision of the Appeal Board.

The Appeal Board in its decision may assess the cost of the stenographic record and of the transcript thereof against the losing party or parties, or apportion it among the parties as it deems proper.

XVIII. Proceedings Subsequent to Decision of Appeal Board

Unless the Appeal Board remands the proceeding to the Tribunal or reopens the proceeding as hereinafter provided, the decision of the Appeal Board shall become the final award and shall become binding on all parties ten days after it is filed with the Clerk of the Tribunal.

When the Appeal Board remands a proceeding the arbitration shall thereupon proceed in accordance with the decision of the Appeal Board.

Within ten days after the decision of the Appeal Board has been filed with the Clerk of the Tribunal the Appeal Board may reopen the proceeding for the purpose of correcting inadvertent errors. In such case the corrected decision shall be signed and acknowledged and copies thereof shall be delivered and filed as provided in Rule XVII. Such corrected decision, unless it remands the proceeding to the Tribunal, shall become the final award and shall become binding on all parties when it is filed with the Clerk of the Tribunal, or ten days after the decision corrected thereby was filed with the Clerk of the Tribunal, whichever is later.

XIX. Extension of Time

The parties may by written agreement extend the time specified in any of the Rules relating to appeals, and any [fol. 3502] member of the Appeal Board may do so upon the written application of any party made upon five days notice to all other parties.

XX. Submission of Other Controversies

Controversies between exhibitors and distributors other than those referred to in subdivision 1 of Section XXII of the Decree may be submitted to the arbitration system by the parties thereto, provided:

a) At least one of the parties thereto is a distributor defendant as defined in the Decree; and

b) A submission in writing setting forth the controversy to be arbitrated is signed by all the parties thereto and filed with the Clerk of the Tribunal having jurisdiction.

These Rules in so far as they are applicable shall apply to the arbitration of such controversies except as the submission may otherwise provide and except that no exhibitor or distributor may intervene therein.

XXI. Access to Records

At no time shall access to the record of any proceeding or appeal be permitted to any person not a party, except that awards, decisions and opinions may be made public.

APPLICATION FOR MODIFICATION OF DECREE—Filed August 7, 1944

The United States of America, plaintiff herein, hereby applies to the court for modification of the consent decree heretofore entered herein on November 20, 1940, pursuant to section XXIII thereof, in the manner hereinafter set forth for the reasons set forth in paragraph 1 hereof.

1. Sections III and IV (a) of said decree have been inoperative since September 1, 1942, and the restraining provisions of Section XI of said decree have been inoperative since November 20, 1943. Said decree is now inadequate to perform its intended function of restraining the violations of law alleged in the complaint and conforming the operation of the decree defendants [1] to the requirements of the Sherman Act. Plaintiff respectfully submits that in order to perform said function said decree should be modified in the respects set forth in the following paragraphs. Where no mention is made of an existing section, no change is requested. As to section III, no change in the form thereof is requested but plaintiff prays that said section may again be made operative.

2. Plaintiff prays that subsection (a) of section IV of the decree be stricken therefrom and that the following subsection (a) be substituted therefor:

> [fol. 3505] No distributor defendant shall condition the licensing of one feature or group of features upon the licensing of another feature or group of features.

Plaintiff further prays that the last two paragraphs of subsection (b) of section IV, which appears on pages 6 and 7 of the decree, be sticken therefrom. Said section IV, if modified as prayed herein, would read as follows:

> (a) No distributor defendant shall condition the licensing of one feature or group of features upon the licensing of another feature or group of features.

[1] The term "decree defendants" as used herein refers to all of the parties which consented to the decree entered herein on November 20, 1943.

(b) No distributor defendant shall require an exhibitor to license short subjects, newsreels, trailers, or serials (hereinafter collectively referred to as shorts) as a condition of licensing features. No distributor defendant shall require an exhibitor to license reissues, westerns,[1] or foreigns[2] (hereinafter collectively referred to as foreigns) as a condition of licensing other features.

3. Plaintiff prays that section V of the decree be stricken therefrom and that the following section V be substituted therefor:

(a) No decree defendant shall condition the licensing of films in one theatre or group of theatres upon the licensing of films in another theatre or group of theatres.

4. Plaintiff prays that section VIII of the decree be modified by striking therefrom the sentence, "It is recognized that clearance, reasonable as to time and area, is essential in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures" and substitute therefor the following sentence: "Clearance shall be deemed to be unreasonable whenever its effect is to restrain competition between two or more theatres unreasonably."; by adding the following clause to the provisions [fol. 3506] defining the power of the arbitrator: "An award providing that a theatre holding clearance found to be unreasonable should take no clearance over the complainant's theatre may be made regardless of whether or not there is substantial competition between said theatres."; and by striking the following two provisions:

Subject to the provisions of Section XVII hereof, the award may fix such maximum clearance under any then existing franchise or any license entered into pursuant to such franchise between such distributor defendant and any other party bound by this decree.

---

[1] Westerns are those western pictures which are not of the usual character and type of, and are inexpensively produced as compared with, the distributor's general line of features.

[2] Foreigns are features produced outside of the United States except such as are produced in the English language by the distributor or a subsidiary or affiliate thereof.

Nothing contained in this Section shall be deemed to restrict, and no award made in any arbitration under this Section shall restrict, the exhibitor's right to license for any theatre any run which he is able to negotiate with any distributor, nor the distributor's right to license for any theatre any run which it desires to grant.

Said section VIII, if modified as prayed herein, would read as follows:

Controversies arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that the clearance applicable to his theatre is unreasonable shall be subject to arbitration under the following provisions:

Clearance shall be deemed to be unreasonable whenever its effect is to restrain competition between two or more theatres unreasonably.

In determining whether any clearance complained of is unreasonable, the arbitrator shall take into consideration the following factors and accord to them the importance and weight to which each is entitled, regardless of the order in which they are listed:

(1) The historical development of clearance in the particular area wherein the theatres involved are located;

(2) The admission prices of the theatres involved;

(3) The character and location of the theatres involved, including size, type of entertainment, appointments, transit facilities, etc.;

(4) The policy of operation of the theatres involved, such as the showing of double features, gift nights, giveaways, premiums, cut rate tickets, lotteries, etc.;

(5) The rental terms and license fees paid by the theatres involved and the revenues derived by the distributor defendant from such theatres;

(6) The extent to which the theatres involved compete with each other for patronage; and

[fol. 3507] (7) All other business considerations, except that the arbitrator shall disregard the fact that a theatre involved is affiliated with a distributor or with a circuit of theatres.

The power of the arbitrator in deciding any such controversy shall be limited to making (1) a finding as to whether or not the clearance complained of is unreasonable; and, if the finding be in the affirmative, (2) an award fixing the maximum clearance between the theatres involved which may be granted in licenses thereafter entered into by the distributor defendant which is a party to the arbitration. An award providing that a theatre holding clearance found to be unreasonable should take no clearance over the complainant's theatre may be made regardless of whether or not there is substantial competition between said theatres.

Any distributor defendant or any exhibitor affected by such an award may institute a further arbitration proceeding for a modification thereof upon the ground that since the making of the award the conditions with respect to the theatres involved therein have so changed as to warrant modification, and, in the event that the arbitrator finds that there has been such change, he shall make a redetermination of the maximum clearance.

Nothing contained in this Section and no award hereafter entered in any arbitration in accordance with its provisions shall apply to licensing the exhibition of any special feature, provided such special feature is licensed under an exhibition contract applicable only thereto, or to the right of a distributor defendant to include in such contract and to make a part thereof such special terms and conditions, including such special clearance provision or provisions, as such distributor shall fix, establish and enforce for and in connection with the exhibition of such special feature.

5. Plaintiff prays that sections IX and X of the decree be stricken therefrom and that the following section be substituted therefor.

No distributor defendant shall license or make available for exhibition in theatres any films released by it upon terms which have the effect of unreasonably restraining competition between two or more theatres in exhibiting said files. Controversies arising on a complaint by an exhibitor thereby affected that a distributor has so licensed or made available such films for exhibition in the complainant's theatre or in a theatre competing with his theatre shall be subject to arbitration in accordance with the terms of this decree. If the arbitrator finds that this section has been so violated, [fol. 3508] he shall make an award which will describe the specific course of conduct found by him to violate this section and will require the payment of an amount by such defendant or defendants as he finds have engaged in such conduct which in his judgment will compensate the complainant for any pecuniary loss sustained as the result of such a violation or violations and discourage the recurrence of such violations.

6. Plaintiff prays that section XI of said decree be stricken therefrom and that the following section be substituted therefor:

(a) No decree defendant shall hereafter acquire, directly or indirectly, any financial interest in any theatre.

(b) Each decree defendant which is directly or indirectly engaged in the production, distribution and exhibition of films shall within three years from the date of this modification completely divorce its exhibition business from its production and distribution business to the end that no defendant directly or indirectly engaged in producing or distributing films shall then own any financial interest in theatres and no defendant directly or indirectly engaged in operating theatres shall then own any interest in the production or distribution of films.

(c) Each decree defendant directly or indirectly engaged in operating theatres shall within such time and upon such terms as the court may deem reasonable divest itself of such theatre interests as the court may in the course of supplemental proceedings hereunder, find should be divested in order to insure theatre operating competition in the communities where they are now monopolizing theatre operation.

(d) All of the theatre-operating agreements, implied or expressed, by which any two or more of the [fol. 3509] decree defendants share in the financial benefits from the operation of theatres jointly owned or controlled by any two or more of them are hereby declared void, and each decree defendant is enjoined from entering into or enforcing any similar agreements.

7. Plaintiff prays that section XII of the decree may be stricken therefrom.

8. Plaintiff prays that section XV of the decree may be stricken therefrom and that the following section be substituted therefor:

> All franchise and any licenses entered into pursuant thereto by any of the decree defendants are hereby declared illegal and void and the said defendants are hereby enjoined from making or enforcing any similar agreements.

9. Plaintiff prays that section XVII of the decree may be stricken therefrom and that the following section be substituted therefor:

> No distributor defendant shall license its films to any affiliated theatre upon terms which unreasonably restrain the ability of an unaffiliated theatre to compete with such affiliated theatre.[1]

10. Plaintiff prays that section XX of the decree may be stricken therefrom.

11. Plaintiff prays that section XXI of the decree may be stricken therefrom.

Attached hereto is a copy of the proposed modified decree with the sections thereof renumbered to conform to the omissions proposed herein.

United States of America, by Robert L. Wright, Special Assistant to the Attorney General. Francis [fol. 3510] Biddle, Attorney General. Wendell Berge, Assistant Attorney General. James B. M. McNally, United States Attorney.

[1] For the purposes of this section an affiliated theatre is one in which a distributor defendant owns, directly or indirectly, a financial interest. All other theatres are unaffiliated.

MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR TEMPORARY RELIEF WITH RESPECT TO UNREASONABLE CLEARANCE

I. Prior Proceedings

On August 7, 1944, plaintiff filed its application for modification of the consent decree of November 20, 1940, setting forth in detail modifications which it deemed essential to make that decree adequate to perform its function of restraining violations of law by the consenting defendants. The arbitration provisions of that decree have continued to remain in effect by agreement of the parties since the expiration of the three-year trial period on November 20, 1943, but since the defendants have declined to concede expressly the existence of law violations, even for the purpose of determining the proper scope of temporary relief, the plaintiff is remitted to a trial of the suit on the merits for any permanent relief and to such additional temporary relief as the Court may grant on a motion therefor. As no trial on the merits was imminent and the violations which led to the entry of the decree continued, the plaintiff moved orally on December 20, 1944, for temporary relief pending the entry of a final judgment. On that date, March 5, 1945, was set as the date on which plaintiff's motion for temporary relief against the consenting defendants with respect [fol. 3515] to unreasonable clearance would be heard and written notice of motion for such relief is attached hereto and served herewith.

As stated by plaintiff's counsel on December 20, the Government will not offer oral testimony in support of this motion but will rely principally upon a consideration by the Court of facts which have been established in the course of the arbitration proceedings under Section VIII of the decree, the section which deals with unreasonable clearance. The purpose of this memorandum is to advise the defendants of the particular arbitration decisions on which the plaintiff will rely at the hearing, as directed by the Court, and to apprise them of the particular relief which will then be sought. It is our understanding that we shall be advised by February 20 of their position with respect to the relief sought, and particularly as to what, if any, testimony they will seek to introduce at the hearing.

II. Plaintiff's Theory of the Motion

In the absence of express agreement between the plaintiff and the defendants as to either the necessity for injunctive relief or its form, plaintiff is now proceeding upon the assumption that its case for additional temporary relief requires a showing to the effect that (1) the consenting defendants have, since the suit was filed, imposed unreasonable clearances which, prima facie, violate the Sherman Act, and (2) the decree in its present form fails to give adequate temporary relief against such violations. Upon such a showing, we think it is clear that relief additional to that provided by the present Section VIII should be granted, pending the entry of a final decree. As the use of the arbitration system as a mechanism for enforcement of any provision of the decree is dependent upon an agreement of the parties, the provisions that we propose for the purpose of this hearing would normally be enforced by contempt proceedings. Although the issue to be decided here is thus what the substantive provisions of the temporary decree shall be which deal with unreasonable clearance, the [fol. 3516] parties will be free, in any event, to agree to implement whatever substantive provision the Court adjudge the plaintiff to be entitled to by the existing arbitration system, or such other enforcement mechanism as the Court may approve.

III. What Unreasonable Clearance Is Under the Decree and Under the Sherman Act

Clearance, as defined in the consent decree, is "the period of time, fixed by agreement between a distributor and an exhibitor, prior to the expiration of which a feature licensed for prior exhibition in a theatre may not be exhibited in another theatre or theatres." Such an agreement obviously restricts the ability of one theatre to compete with another in licensing, booking and exhibiting a particular distributor's films. As the agreement is one which restrains interstate commerce in films it is a violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act unless the restraint is a reasonable one. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 209.

Clearance restrictions have traditionally been imposed by distributors in this industry on the theory that their ownership of copyrights on the films distributed entitled them to impose such restrictions on the exhibition of the films in theatres as are necessary and appropriate to realize maximum revenue from the exploitation of the copyright. Upon this theory distributors have customarily undertaken to fix the minimum admission prices at which their films should be exhibited to the public in all of the theatres they license and maintenance of these minimum prices is made a condition of the enjoyment of such run (priority of exhibition in a particular competitive area) and clearance privileges as the license grants.[1] Such a use of run, clearance and admission price restrictions is keyed to the existing [fol. 3517] system of distribution, which involves the playing of the same film on successive runs in various theatres in the same competitive area at successively reduced admission prices. Obviously the first-run exhibitors would not ordinarily be expected to pay film rentals based upon the receipt of the highest admission price in a competitive area unless there were some assurance that the films they exhibited would not be exhibited elsewhere in the area at substantially lower prices until after the lapse of some reasonable period of time. Nevertheless, even such price-fixing has been held to be illegal when used to protect a theatre operating monopoly from independent competition by destroying an existing price differential between subsequent runs in the same city. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306. U. S. 209.

As the minimum admission price fixed in the film license is not a price paid for the privilege of vending, performing or reproducing the copyrighted film, such a price restriction does not appear to be a bona fide exercise of any of the exclusive privileges granted by the copyright laws under any circumstances. The price paid for such a privilege is the sum paid by the exhibitor to the distributor for the use of the film in his theatre, designated in the license as film rental. Whether this sum is stated as a flat figure or a percentage of the gross receipts, it will vary with the ability of the film to attract patrons to the theatre and the distributor thus had a financial stake in the exhibitor's admission prices, which determine the extent and value of that patronage. However, this kind of stake in the price at which a product is ultimately merchandised does not permit an interstate distributor of the product to fix the price at which others will vend it to the public. Such price-fixing violates the Sherman Act. Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons, 220 U. S. 373.

Such price-fixing is also outside the protection of the copyright laws where the product is copyrighted (Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 210 U. S. 339) and outside the protection of the patent laws where it is patented (Straus v. Victor [fol. 3518] Talking Machine Co., 243 U. S. 490) although a patentee has been held to possess the right to fix the price at which its own product is to be sold by its agents and it imposes a similar requirement on a manufacturing license. General Electric Co. v. United States, 272 U. S. 446.

A film distributor does not sell its film to exhibitors but merely grants the exhibitor a license to use a positive print of its film for commercial exhibition in his theatre for a specified period of time. The exhibitor does not sublicense the film but sells to his patrons the right to witness a performance in his theatre of which the exhibition of a single feature film may be only a part. The exhibitor, who possesses the theatre, determines the program of entertainment to be offered and collects the admission fees which make the exhibition of the film profitable; would normally determine independently the price at which that entertainment should be made available to the public. There appears to be no sound legal reason for permitting any of the persons who do not make the ultimate sale to the public, but merely contribute to the production of entertainment created by the combined use of a theatre investment, copyrighted film, patented equipment and various special skills, to fix the price to the public in contracts made with the exhibitor covering the use of their respective contributions.[2]

[fol. 3519] The monopolistic consequences of permitting these defendants to use their copyrights to fix admission prices and impose other restrictions on theatre operating competition are apparent when the prior use of patent rights to dominate the industry is considered. In 1915 a decree was entered in United States v. Motion Picture Patents Co., 225 Fed. 800 dissolving a combination of film distributors and projection equipment manufacturers which had effectively monopolized the motion picture business in this country as it then existed by the use of patent licensing restrictions. One form of these restrictions was the tying of the use of essential patented projection equipment controlled by the combination to the use of films distributed by them, which was declared to be outside the scope of the patent laws in Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Universal Film Co., 273 U. S. 502. The problem with which we are immediately concerned on this motion is the extent to which five theatre-owning distributors may restrict the terms on which their films are made available to competitive theatres by license agreements made with their theatres and theatres unaffiliated with them. If no limitation is placed on the use of such restrictions it is self-evident that they will be used to promote the business of these distributors, their theatre affiliates and other theatre circuits with large film buying power at the expense of the small independent theatre operators.[3]

[2] The film rental terms, of course, determine how much of the admission price stays with the owner of the theatre and how much goes to the distributor for his share in producing the entertainment sold. How much of these respective shares are further distributed by the theatre owner to those who supply him with the patented equipment that he employs in the course of the performance and by the distributor to those who created the copyrighted film, of course, depends upon such contractual arrangements as the exhibitor and distributor respectively make with others. But it seems clear that neither the ownership of a patent nor a copyright on any feature of the entertainment gives such owner any legal right to restrict the terms on which that entertainment is sold by others no matter how desirable such restrictions may be from the standpoint of the patent or copyright owner.

[3] Monograph 43 of the TNEC states, at pp. 40-45:

"Powerful exhibition interests competing with weaker rivals have demanded extended clearance periods from distributors, and have insisted that they be granted protection over geographical areas larger than could be warranted in any economic sense. In view of the larger aggregate rentals paid by these dominating exhibition units as compared with their smaller competitors, and the fear that these rentals might be reduced or withdrawn, distributors in many cases have acquiesced to these demands.

The primary reason for the negotiation of extended protection has been, of course, the simple desire to hear the cheery ring of the bell in the cash register. A theatre able to negotiate extended clearance without being required to pay correspondingly higher rentals tends to draw patronage away from competing subsequent-run exhibitors. That this practice may render the competitor's business wholly unprofitable may not be an undesirable aspect of the situation. If the large exhibitor is able to acquire cheaply the properties of his competitors, he may achieve a local monopoly of the exhibition field. In this case the admission prices and clearance periods which are established will be designed solely to enhance his profits at the expense of all motion picture patrons in the locality, so far as this may be permitted by the distributors.

The consumer interest in unfair clearance is quite clear. The consumer desires to see each picture as promptly as possible and at the lowest admission price compatible with continued desirable service. It is quite evident that unfair clearance, whether present as such or carried through to [fol. 3520] In partial recognition of the foregoing facts, the system of clearance arbitration provided by Section VIII of the decree was established in the hope that it would afford substantial relief for exhibitors suffering from unreasonable clearances imposed by the five theatre-owning distributors and that such relief would benefit the public. The decree was set up on a temporary basis for a three-year trial period in order that it might be modified in the light of experience gained during that period and its arbitration provisions have been continued in effect since November 20, 1943, by agreement of the parties, pending a judicial determination of such additional relief as the law may warrant.

Section VIII provides that upon the complaint of an exhibitor subject to the clearance complained of an arbitration may be had in which the reasonableness of the clearance is determined and an award may be made which limits the clearance that may be imposed upon him in future licenses. The award is made subject to modification upon rearbitration in the light of such changes in conditions occurring subsequent to the award as may warrant such relief. An appeal [fol. 3521] as of right from all such awards to a three-man board appointed by this Court is provided by the Rules of Arbitration. The Appeal Board, on such appeals, reviews the entire record made before the arbitrator, de novo.

the ultimate objective of a local monopoly, directly contravenes the interests of the consumer.

Unfair clearance is not primarily a question of producer-distributor control of exhibition. It has been employed repeatedly by large independent theatre organizations. Nevertheless, the practice has been closely identified with the theatre operations of the major companies. As has been already indicated, the five major companies control and operate a great number of large prior-run theatres throughout the United States. Since unfair clearance is most usually instituted by such theatres over subsequent-run competitors, this control is most significant. Moreover, since these major companies in general do not compete with each other in their theatre operation activities, the mutual advantages to be derived from reciprocal permission to enforce unfair protection terms on subsequent-run exhibitors must not be disregarded.

IV. The Defendants Have Repeatedly Granted Unreasonable Clearance Since This Suit Was Filed

In demonstrating that the consenting defendants have granted unreasonable clearance, in violation of the Act, during the pendency of the suit, we shall rely only upon those arbitration proceedings in which clearance imposed by one or more of these defendants was found by the Appeal Board to be unreasonable. As each of the defendants respectively involved in each case was a party to these proceedings in which the facts were carefully reviewed by an able board appointed by the Court for that purpose, we think that the facts found by them bind the defendants for the purpose of this proceeding, although the legal conclusions to be drawn from these facts are, of course, for this Court to determine.

The only standard set up by the decree for determining the reasonableness of clearance was a declaration that "clearance, reasonable as to time and area, is essential in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures" and an enumeration of seven factors to be considered by the arbitrator which may be summarized as follows: (1) historical development, (2) admission prices, (3) general character of the theatres, (4) their policies of operation, (5) film rentals, (6) extent of competition for patronage, and (7) general business considerations, excepting circuit and distributor affiliations. The relief granted was limited to a finding that the clearance complained of was unreasonable, and the only award that may be made is one fixing the maximum clearance which may be granted in future licenses. Clearance granted by one of these defendants in favor of its own theatres was expressly exempted from any relief as were existing license agreements made by them except those made with each other pursuant to franchises with each other. Licenses for the exhibition of special features to be shown at advanced admission prices are also exempt from the [fol. 3522] operation of the provision. The decree also provided that this relief should in no way restrict the rights of exhibitors and distributors to negotiate for or license any run that the distributors desired to grant. The relief available consists solely of a finding that the clearance complained of is in fact unreasonable plus a declaration of the maximum amount of clearance that may thereafter be imposed in favor of the theatres enjoying the unreasonable clearance. Violation of an award is punishable by contempt proceedings.

That such relief only ameliorates rather than prohibits violations of law resulting from the imposition of unreasonable clearance by the defendants is implicit in the mere statement of these provisions. However, they have served the purpose of recording the facts concerning such unreasonable clearance abuses as were brought to arbitration, for the guidance of the Court in dealing with this problem. These decisions do not, of course, constitute a record of all of the unreasonable clearances which exhibitors have been subjected to by these defendants as the proceedings were instituted only by such exhibitors as believed that the prospect of securing the extremely limited relief held forth by the decree warranted the substantial expenditure of money and effort required to carry an arbitration through to final decision.

In a number of these cases one or more of the defendants was found to have imposed substantial clearance between theatres in entirely separate communities which were in only slight competition with each other. Under the decree, as interpreted by the Appeal Board, relief was limited to a more reduction of such clearance rather than its elimination. These holdings are tabulated as follows:

In holding that there should be some clearance between theatres which were not in substantial competition but merely drew some patronage from the same general area, the Board apparently assumed that entering an award prohibiting a distributor from granting clearance in favor of one theatre over another in the same competitive area was an unwarranted interference with the distributor's right to license the competing exhibitors on such runs as he may deem necessary to exploit his films properly. Whether this conclusion was compelled by the language of the decree or not,[2] the result has been that the defendants have been expressly allowed to impose clearance between theatres only slightly competitive even though, in such circumstances, there is no public justification whatsoever for contractual arrangements of this character.

In this connection, it should be understood that a prohibition against the imposition of clearance in favor of one theatre against another does not compel the distributor to do business with either theatre or both except upon such terms as he finds profitable. While Section VI of the decree, and the Sherman Act, itself, does prohibit him from refusing to deal with one theatre for the purpose of protecting another from competition, if his refusal to deal is based solely on the protection of his total revenue from a [fol. 3525] particular competitive area he does not run afoul of Section VI.

The distributor may, as he frequently does, deal with the two theatres upon an open booking basis; that is to say, permit each to book the films licensed for exhibition to his theatre without regard to the time at which they are exhibited in the other. The mere mechanics of booking films for exhibition from eight or ten different distributors, all of whom serve numerous customers with each positive print, may seldom permit the playing of the same film simultaneously in the two theatres, but they may be served without discrimination by supplying prints as the prints and playing time in the theatres involved become available. Thus, the pictures released by a particular distributor may alternately be made available first to one theatre and then the other so that at the end of the season, although they have never played the same pictures simultaneously, neither theatre has been relegated to a fixed inferior position by the distributor in question. Thus all that the elimination of clearance in a particular situation does is to permit service of prints to the theatres involved upon a non-discriminatory basis, if the distributor licenses them both. It does not compel him to license either or restrict him in any way from charging such rentals and imposing such admission price, and other restrictions as may be appropriate to the protection of his combined revenue from both.

The primary evil inherent in the imposition of any clearance between theatres which are not substantially competitive is not that it suppresses competition for patronage but that it establishes a discriminatory sequence of exhibition which has no relation to the legitimate needs of the distributor or the public. What it does is simply give the theatre enjoying the clearance booking control over the theatre against which it is held. The latter thus becomes entirely dependent upon the manner in which the former books pictures as they may not be made available in the second theatre until after they have been played in the first and this is true whether the clearance is one day or thirty days. Such control is indubitably desired by the [fol. 3526] theatres enjoying such clearance and to the extent that they may insist upon it as a condition of doing business with the distributor, the granting of it might be regarded as beneficial to him in the sense that, without it, he might not obtain the exhibitor's business. But the Interstate Circuit case, supra, clearly establishes that neither the Sherman Act nor the copyright statute permits the use of agreements restricting the use of a copyrighted film merely to satisfy the demands of a dominant theatre owner, who owns no copyright, at the expense of the public interest. The public supplying the bulk of the patronage for the controlled theatre suffers with the exhibitor discriminated against from his inability to respond to their demands in booking films for exhibition in the controlled theatre while the public patronizing the theatre exercising the control enjoys no corresponding benefit whatsoever.

We respectfully submit that a provision prohibiting the imposition of any clearance between theatres not in substantial competition with each other should be added to the existing decree.

As previously noted, the ostensible public justification for clearance is that its use is essential to support a structure of varied entertainment at varied admission prices. A theatre playing films on first run at a high admission price might ordinarily be expected to require clearance over a second run charging a lower price, and so on down the scale of runs and admission prices. However, there is clearly no legitimate purpose in granting clearance between theatres which charge the same admission price, whether they draw from precisely the same area, or whether they are twenty miles apart. The only effect of imposing clearance between such theatres when they are highly competitive is arbitrarily to divert patronage from one to the other. Prices being the same, there is only one way in which they can compete at all and that is by offering a better entertainment value for the money and the public clearly suffers from the imposition of any restriction upon that [fol. 3527] competition.

As for the distributor, he has no interest, putting aside the question of circuit-buying power and theatre affiliation, in such arbitrary diversion of patronage from one theatre to another. His only legitimate aim is obtaining the maximum revenue from the exhibition of his films in both theatres. To the extent that one pays a greater rental by virtue of superior physical facilities, superior management, better rental terms or any other reason, he may regard one theatre as a superior customer to the other. Even so there is clearly no occasion for him to restrict arbitrarily the ability of the inferior operator to compete with the other in exhibiting his films by compelling the latter to play behind the former at the same or a greater admission price, unless he decides to promote the business of the favored customer as against the inferior one instead of promoting his overall film revenue from both.

[fol. 3528] Cases in which the Board found that unreasonable clearance had been imposed between competing theatres charging substantially the same admission prices but left some clearance between them in effect are tabulated as follows:

We respectfully submit that the foregoing experience demonstrates that the general problem of unreasonable clearance is inadequately dealt with in the existing section [fol. 3530] VIII of the decree and that an adequate temporary provision must also flatly prohibit the granting of any clearance between theatres charging substantially the same admission price.

If this be deemed an interference with the distributor's right to discriminate among its customers in granting runs that objection has no support in law. Any relief granted in this case necessarily circumscribes the right of these defendants to discriminate among their customers in imposing one or more of the restrictions that they customarily incorporate in their license agreements. That such relief is necessary and appropriate when such restrictions have been used to violate the Sherman Act is established by Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 209, and United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., 323 U. S. —, December 11, 1944.

The determination of the maximum length of clearance permissible in competitive situations where admission price differentials exist should be so adjusted that the period of clearance between any two theatres is proportionate to the admission price differential between them if there is to be any public justification of such clearance. This may be accomplished by a prohibition of all clearance in excess of that reasonably related to the maintenance of competition between two or more competing theatres charging different admission prices.

Apart from these general provisions, specific temporary relief expressly directed against unreasonable clearance arising from distributor affiliation is urgently required. There is no dispute that (1) each of the distributor defendants Fox, Loew, Paramount, RKO and Warner controls a large circuit of theatres, (2) each licenses films to its own circuit, the circuits owned by the others and theatres competing with them by license agreements which fix the minimum admission prices to be charged by all of the theatres licensed, (3) maintenance of those admission prices is tied to run and clearance provisions determining the relative time at which the films licensed become avail-[fol. 3531] able for exhibition in competing theatres.[4]

We submit that such a system of admission price fixing by cross licensing is prima facie illegal because it is in effect a means by which affiliated theatre operators, through their distribution affiliates, agree with each other as to the admission prices that should be charged by their various theatres in the competitive areas in which each operates and as to those to be charged by independent theatre operators who compete with these affiliated theatres. Such a price-fixing system is unreasonable per se and may not be justified under the Sherman Act by any proof that these defendants might offer. See United States v. Socony Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150, 219-224; United States v. Masonite Co., 316 U. S. 265, 274. Pending the elimination of that system by divorcement of the distributor defendants from their theatre operating affiliates or such other permanent relief as may be granted at a trial on the merits, we believe that the use by them of clearance restrictions which adversely affect unaffiliated theatres attempting to compete with their theatres must be prohibited, at least where such a distributor cannot demonstrate that a particular clearance in favor of an affiliated theatre is essential to secure for the distributor the maximum film rental available from the competitive area involved. Such relief would be comparable in form to that granted by the Supreme Court in United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., supra, although the substantive test is less exacting than that of showing no unreasonable restraint of competition imposed by the Crescent decision.

Such a provision is one which is far short of the ultimate clearance relief to which the plaintiff is entitled as a matter of law as it would permit a temporary justification of individual licensing agreements which the plaintiff expects ultimately to have declared void as unreasonable per se. Cf. Interstate Circuit v. United States, 306 U. S. 209. All [4] See the Appendix hereof and standard forms of license attached. Precise extent of theatre ownership is disclosed by defendants' answers to plaintiff's interrogatories 50 and 52.

[fol. 3532] that this temporary provision would do is to deprive affiliated theatres of such unfair clearance advantages as they now derive by virtue of affiliation with these large distributor owner circuits in a limited class of cases. It is, in effect, merely an extension of the doctrine now in force in section VI of the decree which prohibits a refusal to license a run on any terms except where the distributor can show that such a refusal will have the effect of reducing its total film rental in the competitive area in which the theatre refused the run is located. Such refusals to license a run on any terms are merely an exaggerated form of the protection against competition afforded by clearance and are based upon essentially the same considerations which lead a distributor to impose clearance which unreasonably restrains the ability of an independent theatre to compete with affiliated theatres and large independent circuits.

Insofar as the clearance abuses inherent in the suppression of the business of smaller independent operators by large independent circuits are concerned, the plaintiff believes that the ultimate relief required to obviate such violations lies in dissolution of such circuits. Cf. United States v. Crescent Amusement Co., supra. To the extent that such violations involve licenses made by the distributor defendants here they may be dealt with in this proceeding and for that reason unreasonable clearances which result from the use of independent circuit-buying power should also be outlawed in this suit. The general provisions previously suggested should be adequate temporary relief for this purpose but they do not deal specifically with the problem of clearance discrimination arising from the affiliation of theatres with distributors, which is at the heart of this case, and for which a special provision directed at unreasonable clearance in favor of affiliated theatres is necessary.

In the following cases the Board, under the limitations imposed by the decree, was prevented from eliminating entirely clearance found to be unreasonable which had been granted in favor of affiliated theatres, although the theatres [fol. 3533] involved were so located as to compete only slightly with each other or charged substantially the same admission prices:

V. The Consent Decree Is Inadequate To Prevent the Defendants from Violating the Sherman Act by Granting Unreasonable Clearance.

A serious defect in the existing section VIII of the consent decree is that the burden of showing a particular clearance imposed by these defendants to be improper is placed upon the complaining exhibitor instead of upon the defendant imposing it. Any system which relieves them of the burden of sustaining the reasonableness of restraints of trade of this character gives them a considerable immunity merely because of the procedural obstacles placed in the way of bringing such restraints into the open. In some cases the complaining exhibitor has not been aware of certain clearances with which he was confronted in the course of the arbitration proceedings until the defendants offered proof of it.[5] In all cases the complainant goes into the proceeding without any information whatsoever as to what the distributors experience with film rentals received from other theatres in the area would indicate as to [fol. 3536] the necessity of any particular clearance to protect overall film revenue.

In addition to this fundamental procedural difficulty, the many qualifying limitations of the present clearance provision cut down the scope of the complaints which may be arbitrated and the relief which may be granted. How the provisions preserving the distributor's right to discriminate in licensing runs has prevented the elimination of clearance in situations where it would otherwise be eliminated has already been pointed out in the decision cited under section IV of this brief. We have also referred there to the cases in which the exemption of affiliated theatres as contained in section XVII of the decree has prevented the arbitrator from granting relief against some of the defendants even though the clearance they imposed in favor of their own theatres was found to be unreasonable. Adjustment of unreasonable clearances has also been prevented in many cases by the existence of franchise agreements exempted by section XV of the decree, which defect has been noted by the Appeal Board in Case No. 54.

In Cases Nos. 25 and 50 the Board has also noted the inability of complainants who do not currently license the films of a defendant to arbitrate the unreasonableness of the clearance imposed against it in contracts made with the defendant by another competitor. Cases Nos. 17, 54, [5] In case No. 104 the Board said:

"In prior cases, as in this, the Board has had to consider a situation where the complainant did not know of some of the clearances granted by the defendants against his theatre, since they were contained not in contracts with him but in contracts with other exhibitors giving them clearances against his theatre. While the Board finds itself in no position to grant the relief which complainant asks, our comment is that this method of granting clearances seems unfair to us."

96, 103 and 104 have noted that clearances by which a theatre in one community is subjected to clearance of theatres in two or more other communities is unreasonable on its face but the awards merely give relief to the particular exhibitors involved in these cases with the result that the distributors are still free to impose unreasonable clearance of this character until and unless other exhibitors learn of them and attack them.

The manner in which the distributors successfully rely upon arbitrary limitations in the decree to frustrate the granting of equitable relief is illustrated by the following comment in Case No. 71, a Section VI proceeding:

> Counsel for Paramount makes no attempt in his brief either to answer or to mitigate the severe criticisms made by the Arbitrator of his client's conduct. He [fol. 3537] confines his argument wholly to the lack of power of the Arbitrator under the Decree to redress an injustice clearly shown by the record to have been done to the Welden. We share the Arbitrator's conviction that the Welden deserves a first run ahead of the Empire, and were it not for the limitations imposed by the Decree we should either direct the restoration of first run to the Welden, which is what the complainant really desires and deserves, or else we should affirm the award without question on the ground that it does equity and justice between the parties concerned. Section VI of the Decree, however, grants no authority to an Arbitrator or to the Board to make an award directing the offer to an exhibitor of any specified run. The Decree unquestionably reserves to each distributor, where two theatres are in the same competitive area, the right, subject only to the provisions of Section X which are not applicable here, to decide which theatre shall have the prior run.

The persistent use by the consenting defendants, during the pendency of this suit, of clearance provisions as a means of unreasonably restricting the terms on which theatres may compete in licensing their films and the inadequacy of the present decree to afford adequate relief against such violations of the Sherman Act are beyond dispute. We respectfully submit that the provisions suggested are the minimum which the Court may properly grant if the persons now subjected to the illegal restrictions in question are to be given adequate protection pending the entry of a final decree in this case.

Respectfully submitted, Wendell Berge, Assistant Attorney General; Robert L. Wright, Philip Marcus, Special Assistants to the Attorney General; Kenneth R. Lindsay, Horace Morrison, Special Attorneys.

[fol. 3538] Appendix

Attached hereto and marked Exhibits A, B, C, D, and E, respectively are photostatic copies of sample license agreements voluntarily supplied by Loew, Paramount, RKO, Fox, and Warner, respectively, in response to a letter dated July 28, 1944, from the plaintiff requesting the printed forms of feature license agreements currently in use.

Each form contains on its face appropriate blank spaces for the insertion of the evening and matinee, children and adult admission prices of the theatre licensed, the run licensed and the applicable clearance. The printed provisions containing the exhibitor's agreement to observe these prices, the penalties for noncompliance, and the general run and clearance provisions are found in the following excerpts from these forms.

IV. Clearance and Run. Unless otherwise provided, clearance is to be computed from the last licensed date of exhibition of each picture. During the life of this contract Loew's agrees not to exhibit or license the exhibition of any of said pictures in conflict with the "run" or prior to the expiration of the clearance period, if any, in the Schedule specified, but any violation hereof shall not affect this contract except as to the particular picture involved, and the damage which may be claimed by Exhibitor and which may be awarded in any arbitration or litigation shall not exceed the amount of the license fee herein provided for such picture, or, if it is a participating picture, the amount of damage claimed or awarded shall be limited as stated in the last sentence of the "Default" clause. Such claim for damage (as limited above) shall be Exhibitor's sole and exclusive remedy on account of such violation. If other than a first run is granted hereunder Loew's shall have the right to license and/or exhibit any or all of said pictures as a "continued first run" (i. e., a run either at the initial first run or a moveover theatre immediately after [fol. 3539] the initial first run and prior to any run except first, with admission prices not less than those of the initial first run), whereupon Exhibitor's availability shall be postponed accordingly and any clearance herein provided over the theatre where such continued first run occurs automatically modified. If a second or subsequent run is herein granted, Exhibitor shall exhibit any of the pictures on an earlier run if Loew's so requires.

. . . . . .

IX. Admission Prices. Exhibitor agrees: (1) During the entire engagement of each picture to charge for each admission not less than the respective prices shown in the Schedule, and that if without Loew's prior written consent any of them are reduced Loew's may proceed as stated in 2(a) below; and (2) as to each participating picture to account to Loew's on the basis of the respective admission prices in the Schedule for each person admitted (a customary and reasonable number of free admissions is permitted), except that if any admission price charged is greater than herein scheduled Exhibitor shall account on the basis of the larger amount; and that if any scheduled admission price is reduced without such consent, or Exhibitor does not account as above provided with respect to any one or more such pictures, Loew's may either (a) forthwith change or modify the run, availability and/or clearance herein provided for or (b) may exercise the remedies provided under "Default."

. . . . . .

XV. Default. If Exhibitor violates any of the provisions of this agreement or becomes insolvent or is adjudicated bankrupt or executes an assignment for creditors or a receiver is appointed for any of Exhibitor's property, or if Exhibitor violates any of the provisions of any other exhibition contract(s) heretofore or hereafter made with Loew's, then in any of said events Loew's may either (1) terminate this contract or (2) terminate this and such other contract(s) or (3) suspend delivery of further pictures hereunder (and, if Loew's elects, also under any or [fol. 3540] all such other contracts) pending compliance by Exhibitor.

Paramount

If during any such period less than said admission prices is charged, the Distributor in addition to all other rights hereunder shall have the right: (a) to immediately terminate the license of the motion picture then being exhibited and of all the remaining motion pictures not theretofore exhibited hereunder, by written notice to such effect to the Exhibitor and upon the giving of such notice, the license of such motion pictures shall forthwith terminate and revert to the Distributor and the Distributor may, at its option, declare such failure or refusal a breach of the entire contract entitling the Distributor to recover from the Exhibitor as damages therefor the license fees payable in respect of all motion pictures not theretofore exhibited hereunder; or (b) forthwith to revoke the run, availability and clearance, if any, herein provided for and to fix the run, availability and clearance applicable to each motion picture thereafter deliverable hereunder, and the Exhibitor agrees to exhibit each such motion picture in accordance with the run, availability and clearance so fixed; and (c) if the license fee of any such motion picture is to be computed either in whole or in part upon a percentage of the gross admission receipts of said theatre, then the Exhibitor shall account to the Distributor for all admissions to said theatre during the exhibition of such motion picture upon the basis of the said admission prices specified above. The Exhibitor shall not be entitled hereunder to any change in the run, availability or clearance, if any, herein provided for, by reason of any increase in admission prices at said theatre after the signing of this application by the Exhibitor.

It is expressly understood and agreed that the above minimum admission prices are exclusive of any State, Federal or local taxes which now are or may be imposed upon admission to the theatre or theatres licensed hereunder.

. . . . . .

[fol. 3541] Clearance and Run—Seventh: (a) Subject to the provisions of paragraph (b) of this Article, the Distributor agrees not to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit any of said motion pictures for exhibition in conflict with the run or prior to the expiration of the clearance period if any in the Schedule specified at any theatre therein named or within the territorial limits therein specified. Such period of clearance as to each of said motion pictures shall be computed from the last date of the exhibition thereof licensed hereunder, disregarding any "roadshow," "try-out" or "preview," or special "midnight" exhibition. If clearance is granted against a named theatre or theatres indicating that it is the intention of the Distributor to grant such clearance against all theatres in the immediate vicinity of the Exhibitor's theatre then unless otherwise provided in the Schedule, such clearance shall include any theatre in such vicinity thereafter erected or opened.

(b) The Distributor shall have the right to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit any of said motion pictures as a "road-show," "try-out" or "preview" or special "midnight" exhibition at any time prior to the exhibition thereof hereunder. Any such 'road-show," "try-out" or "preview" or special "midnight" exhibition shall not be deemed a run of said motion picture, nor shall the run, availability or clearance provided herein with respect to said motion picture to be governed thereby.

. . . . . .

Remedies—Fourteenth: If the Exhibitor shall otherwise fail or refuse to perform any of the terms and conditions on the part of the Exhibitor to be performed hereunder or if the Exhibitor shall fail or refuse to perform any other license agreement with the Distributor, then upon the happening of any one or more of said events, the Distributor may at its option (1) suspend the delivery of additional motion pictures hereunder until such default or defaults should cease and be remedied, or (2) declare this license agreement breached by the Exhibitor entitling the Dis-[fol. 3542] tributor to recover from the Exhibitor as liquidated damages for such breach the license fees payable in respect of all motion pictures not theretofore exhibited under this agreement and the Distributor shall be under no obligation thereafter to deliver or offer to deliver any motion picture or motion pictures hereunder.

R. K. O.

If during the exhibition of any picture hereunder, the Exhibitor should charge lower admission prices than those hereinbefore specified, the Distributor, in addition to all other rights hereunder shall have the right (a) to immediately terminate the license for the picture then being exhibited by giving written notice to that effect to the Exhibitor, and upon giving such notice the license for such picture shall thereupon terminate forthwith and revert to the Distributor; or (b) to reduce by not more than one-half any clearance period granted herein to the Exhibitor in respect of each picture thereafter deliverable hereunder; or (c) if no clearance is granted herein, then to withhold for not more than sixty (60) days the availability notice to the Exhibitor in respect of all pictures thereafter deliverable hereunder, and as to each such picture the "run" thereof, if any, granted the Exhibitor, shall be deemed revoked and the Exhibitor agrees to exhibit each such picture after notice of the availability thereof upon the date or dates determined as provided in Article Ninth hereof.

. . . . . .

Clearance and Run

Fourth: If the Exhibitor is granted a specific run or clearance of the pictures hereunder and is not in default hereunder, the Distributor will not license the exhibition of any such picture in conflict with the run or prior to the expiration of any clearance period so granted the Exhibitor.

. . . . . .

[fol. 3543] Exhibitor is granted herein a period of "clearance" to reduce such period by not to exceed one-half in respect to each of the licensed pictures thereafter deliverable hereunder; or (c) provided no period of clearance is specified in the Schedule to withhold, for a period not to exceed sixty (60) days notice of the date when each picture thereafter deliverable hereunder will be available for exhibition by the Exhibitor; and as to each such picture the "run" thereof, if any, granted the Exhibitor, shall be deemed revoked and the Exhibitor agrees to exhibit each such picture after notice of the available date thereof upon the date or dates determined as provided in paragraph 7 hereof;

if Distributor does not elect to terminate the license of the picture then being exhibited, as provided in subdivision (a) of this paragraph, the Exhibitor shall account for all admissions to said theatre during the exhibition of such picture on the basis of the admission prices hereinabove stipulated.

• • • • • • • •

8. Clearance and Run—The Distributor agrees not to exhibit or license the exhibition of any of said licensed pictures in conflict with the run or prior to the expiration of the clearance period, if any, specified in the Schedule at any theatre therein named or within the territorial limits therein specified. Such period of clearance as to each of said licensed pictures shall be computed from the last date of the exhibition thereof herein licensed.

• • • • • • • •

16. Remedies—If the Exhibitor shall fail or refuse to perform the terms and provisions of this agreement, or any of them, or if the Exhibitor becomes insolvent or is adjudicated a bankrupt, or executes an assignment for the benefit of creditors, or if a receiver is appointed for any of the property of the Exhibitor, or if the Exhibitor voluntarily or by operation of law should lose control of the said theatre or of his said interests therein, then, upon the happening of any one or more of said events, the Distributor may at [fol. 3544] its option: (1) terminate this license agreement, or (2) suspend the delivery of pictures hereunder until such default or defaults shall cease and be remedied.

• • • • • • •

Warner

Clearance—Eighth: Distributor agrees not to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit any picture in conflict with the "run" or prior to the expiration of the "clearance period," if any, in the Schedule specified for any theatre therein named or within the territorial limits therein defined. The period of clearance as to each picture shall be computed from its last date of exhibition and unless otherwise provided in the Schedule shall cover any theatre thereafter erected or opened in the immediate vicinity of Exhibitor's theatre.

• • • • • • •

Admission Prices—Eighteenth: Throughout the exhibition period of each picture Exhibitor shall charge for admission to said theatre as a minimum, the prices specified in the Schedule and unless a greater minimum is therein specified the minimum shall not be less than fifteen cents (15¢) for each adult person for each matinee and evening performance. If during any such period less than such minimum admission is charged, Distributor, in addition to all other rights of Distributor hereunder in the event of a breach, may at its option by written notice to Exhibitor, either terminate this license in its entirety or with respect to the picture then being exhibited.

* * * * * * *

Remedies for Breach—Seventeenth: If Exhibitor violates any of the provisions of this agreement * * * Distributor, in addition to all other rights may at its option (1) terminate this license agreement or (2) suspend the further delivery of pictures until such default or defaults cease and be remedied.

[fol. 3548] The Court: Mr. Wright, I suppose we will hear you first.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I believe we have two motions here today. One of them is the hearing on our motion for interim relief with respect to unreasonable clearance and the other is the motion to set the entire case down for hearing on the merits on a day certain. Insofar as we are concerned the latter is the more important motion of the two. The motion for preliminary relief deals with only a small aspect of the case and I think we should first proceed to dispose of the trial date if we could.

Your Honor will recall last December that we asked to have the matter set down for trial on the merits and that we again served a formal notice of motion for this hearing, as the representatives, I think of three of the defendants, were not present at that December hearing. But we now have served a formal notice of motion on them and I think the date should now be set.

Mr. Proskauer: Will you Honor ask Mr. Wright to speak up so we can hear him? I don't know what he is saying.

Mr. Wright: I am sorry, Judge.

The Court: Well, what do you suggest? What do you [fol. 3549] ask for, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: We should like to have as early a date as possible with this qualification: That we have the Griffith case to try in Oklahoma City which is now set for May 7th. So I would assume the earliest date would be some time in September. I assume your Honor won't sit during the Summer.

The Court: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Wright: I assume your Honor will not be sitting in the Summer.

The Court: Nor in September I hope.

Mr. Proskauer: Not too early I hope, your Honor.

The Court: Mr. Wright, I usually get my vacation that time. October I think would probably be better. That is probably what you yourself prefer although you asked for an early date.

Mr. Wright: Whatever is agreeable with the court schedule here and——

The Court: I should think early in October. Of course I have to make that subject to conferring with Judge Knox because I am afraid it is going to be a very long trial and we will have to rearrange our assignments. It will be long, will it not?

Mr. Wright: I think how long it is depends on what [fol. 3550] we can accomplish in pretrial proceedings, but I should think we should have a definite date fixed now in order to make the pretrial procedure effective.

The Court: Yes. How about, say, the second Monday in October?

Mr. Wright: That would be agreeable to the Government.

Mr. Seymour: I think that will be agreeable to the defendants, your Honor.

The Court: Just see. That would be the 8th of October.

Mr. Davis: October 8th?

The Court: Yes, sir, Mr. Davis.

Mr. Wright: It is important that we get a general idea of how long this case is going to take. We make up our schedules of assignments—they have been made—and will have to be changed if I am engaged in this case for a substantial period.

Mr. Wright: I should think, if the Court please, it would be very difficult to give an accurate estimate of the time until we have a pretrial conference at which the question of how much of these issues are going to be seriously disputed will be discussed. I would hope that if it is agreeable to your Honor we could have such a conference at a very early date, let's say next month.

[fol. 3551] The Court: I will cooperate in every way. We will set it down now for October 8th. Now that is subject, however, to a possible change if it is going to interfere too much with the schedule.

Mr. Wright: Could we have a date for a pretrial conference now too?

The Court: Yes. Most any time would suit me.

Mr. Proskauer: That is perfectly agreeable to us, your Honor. We would like very much to have it.

The Court: Supposing we leave that until we finish with this matter. But you would like to know before you return to Washington?

Mr. Wright: Yes, we would.

The Court: We will talk it over later during the day. If I forget it you remind me, will you?

Mr. Wright: I shall.

I assume that your Honor has read the memorandum that we filed on February 5 in support of our motion for preliminary clearance relief.

The Court: I have read it, Mr. Wright. I have read it and I thought I read it carefully, but I have read it only once and I can't say that I am entirely familiar with it.

Mr. Wright: I simply wanted to point out at the outset that we did file that memorandum and served copies on the [fol. 3552] defendants so that there would be a fairly clear statement of the issues here before we arrived in the hearing room. Now in addition to our memorandum a response was filed by the defendants, I believe on February 20th, which I assume your Honor has also read, consisting of two or three pages.

The Court: That was a letter.

Mr. Wright: It was in the form of a letter of a couple of pages.

The Court: Yes, on February 19th I received a letter from Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett enclosing a copy of a letter written by various counsel for the defendants to Mr. Berge. That is the letter you refer to?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Your Honor will recall that in our memorandum we pointed out that we would not seek to offer any oral testimony at this hearing, that our case would be made by offering and relying upon the decisions of the Appeal Board which was established by the order of this Court to review the decisions of arbitrators made in the course of the arbitrators' disposition of disputes under the provisions of Section 8 of the consent decree, and that in addition to that we should also rely on the answers to interrogatories filed [fol. 3553] by these defendants which show the extent of the theatre ownership of each of these distributor defendants which own theatres,—that is, the defendants who have consented to the decree—and we would of course also rely upon the license agreements which were attached to the memorandum—that is, the photostatic copies are attached —and the provisions which we thought pertinent are also attached as an appendix to the memorandum.

Now as we understand the defendants' position on this clearance question from their formal response they contend that all that the Court can do at this hearing is to look at the decisions of the Appeal Board.

The Court: Is to what?

Mr. Wright: As I understand the defendants they concede that your Honor may examine the decisions of the Appeal Board which we shall offer, but apparently only for the limited purpose of determining whether or not the arbitration provisions of the decree have been operating satisfactorily within the limits of the existing decree. Apparently if the Court decides that they have so operated then the defendants assert that we can have no more clearance relief no matter how inadequate those provisions of the decree may be in terms of Sherman Act enforcement.

Then if the Court finds that the system has not been oper- [fol. 3554] ating satisfactorily apparently the defendants insist that the decree still has to be left alone as they do not concede that a determination that the present provisions of the decree are inadequate in dealing with clearance is in itself any basis for granting further temporary relief.

Now the Government's position is that the decree and the arbitration provisions can only justify themselves as an effective law enforcement method—that is, that your Honor is not sitting here in this proceeding to determine whether or not a satisfactory method of adjusting trade disputes has been set up and operated by the American Arbitration Association. Our contention here is that notwithstanding the undisputed merits of the functioning of the system as such that the decree within which it functions simply does not do the job that it was intended to do under the Sherman Act, and that is, prohibit and restrain the granting of unreasonable clearance.

The Court: I wish one of the first things you would do is to define affirmatively what unreasonable clearance is.

Mr. Wright: That is something that most of us I think have been struggling with for years without getting very satisfactory results.

[fol. 3555] The Court: You tell me what it is not, but what is unreasonable clearance?

Mr. Wright: That is it. But I should say that the answer that we propose and the petition for modification we filed on August 7, 1944, is that unreasonable clearance is clearance which unreasonably restrains competition. I don't think you can come any closer in a broad general definition than the terms of the Sherman Act itself.

The Court: That means that each instance has to be determined on its own particular facts, doesn't it?

Mr. Wright: I think that is quite correct but I think the fundamental mistake in approach that the present decree makes to the problem is starting out with the assumption that the burden is on some exhibitor complainant or someone who challenges the clearance arrangement to say that the restraint is an unreasonable one. I think that normally these restrictive provisions which embody clearance are prima facie illegal restrictions which can only be justified if those who impose them can show that there is some public benefit or that the arrangement is somehow necessary to the promotion of fair competition—that is, that on their face [fol. 3556] every clearance arrangement that these defendants make does restrain competition between two or more theatres in licensing their films.

We have pointed out as conspicuous examples of clearance which is unreasonable the situations where the defendants by these clearance provisions divert patronage from one theatre to another on a completely arbitrary basis which does not have any reasonable relationship either to the needs of the theatre-going public or to the needs of these distributors in protecting their film rental.

The Court: May I ask you, if you don't mind my interrupting, do you take the stand that all clearances are unreasonable?

Mr. Wright: We don't take the stand that all clearances are unreasonable but I think it is perfectly clear that all clearances are direct restraints of trade which fall within the prohibition of the Sherman Act unless they may be affirmatively shown to be reasonable in their nature and the real issue here is, who has the burden of justifying those restraints. Whether the Court in evaluating them may assume that the restraint is reasonable simply because it is used and is in existence, or whether the defendants have got to show that imposing a restraint of that kind is a proper and reasonable thing to do.

[fol. 3557] Now we say that clearly insofar as these defendants impose clearance in favor of each other's theatres by a system of cross licensing that is currently in effect, that those agreements, highly restrictive in their nature, are invalid on their face. Ultimately we would expect to obtain a decree in this suit which would outlaw completely the making of any such restrictive licensing agreements between these defendants, that is, through licensing each other's theatres.

As for the temporary relief, at this stage, we say that we will have shown when we introduce this material a prima facie case of illegality which would warrant the Court in prohibiting all of such arrangements except insofar as these defendants may come in and justify them as reasonably necessary for the conduct of the business.

Now the argument as to how and why we think these restraints are unreasonable I, of course, would prefer to leave until after we have offered this material that we expect to rely on. All I wanted to do first was to simply review how we got to this particular point in the litigation where we are now and to comment on one particular statement in the response that to us was rather startling.

[fol. 3558] As your Honor may recall that particular statement was that they were surprised at our suggestion that this arbitration system by which the present decree is enforced was in effect by agreement of the parties. Now we think that it is perfectly clear that the only way in which such system as this may be set up as a public law enforcement device is with the express consent of the Government and in no event are the defendants entitled to the particular means of enforcement that we adapted here on an experimental basis for a three-year trial period as a matter of judicial right.

Now in order to illustrate the fundamental difference between the defendants' view of the proper function and purpose of this arbitration system and ours I think it is necessary to review the previous action in this connection in the suit. Your Honor will recall that when this consent decree was established in November 1940 it was expressly established for a three-year trial period. The provisions with respect to the methods of selling pictures were limited to a one-year period, that 1941-1942 season. Those restrictions in blocks of five trade showing all expired at the end of that season although the defendants have continued to use that method of distributing films because it apparently [fol. 3559] has been more profitable to do so. Again at the end of three years the right was expressly reserved on our part to proceed to litigate the main issues of the suit, that is, the trade divorcement of the distributors from their theatre ownership and dissolution of their circuits and at the end of that period the restriction on the defendants' acquisition policies which had been incorporated in Section 11 of the decree also lapsed. There is also a provision in the decree which said at the end of three years any party was free to move for any modification of the decree whatsoever.

Now the arbitration provisions did not lapse automatically but in our view have been continued only because of the failure of either the Government or the defendants to move to set them aside, and that is what we mean when we say that they continue by agreement plus the fact that the continuance of the Appeal Board, as your Honor knows, has been twice extended by express stipulation of the parties.

Now after the expiration of the three-year period there were extensive negotiations between the parties looking toward a new decree and a proposal for a new decree was submitted by the defendants to the Department which suggested certain minor improvements in the arbitration system and [fol. 3560] in the restrictions which the decree had contained, but still left untouched the main issues of the suit, that is, the theatre divestiture which is sought by the plaintiff. But these improvements in the functioning of the arbitration system and in extending the scope of the decree were expressly conditioned upon a further immunity of not less than five years against the prosecution or from the prosecution of the main issues of the suit.

Now that proposal received very careful consideration by the Department, by the Attorney General himself, and was rejected by him and that led to our filing last August a petition for modification in which we set forth the kind of provisions that the Department thought would be necessary to convert the existing decree into one adequate to enforce the Act. Then your Honor will recall that the opportunity which we offered by the proposal for modification to permit these defendants to continue under a decree which was made by consent and which avoided an adjudication of the issue of violation of the Act by simply submitting to your Honor for adjudication the question of what proper relief is—assuming violations of the Act—that opportunity was rejected by these defendants. So at that stage modification [fol. 3561] of the consent decree as such became impossible, as without consent, at least in some aspects, no such procedure was possible, and we were then driven to the point where in order to obtain any adequate relief at all we must, as we see it, actually try the case, establish violations, and secure the relief that those violations warrant.

As to this particular proceeding the clearance violations in themselves are only one minor aspect of the main problem, that is, clearance discrimination is only one of a dozen forms of discrimination in licensing films which arises out of the control of theatres by these defendants and the aggregation of other theatres in large circuits by independents who do business with them. So that in no event is this relief that we are seeking here anything more than, as we see it, a mere stop gap as to one particular aspect of the case in which the violations have been fairly continuous and frequent.

Now I don't think that I need say anything more at this time with respect to the theory of the motion other than that we expect to show by the material we offer for your Honor's consideration prima facie violations of the Act with respect to unreasonable clearance since the decree was filed and the failure of the existing decree to [fol. 3562] deal adequately with those violations.

The first thing we want to offer, your Honor, are these 104 decisions of the Appeal Board. I have asked Mr. Braden to bring over a set and I don't think there will be any dispute as to the authenticity.

Mr. Proskauer: You may assume we won't have any question about that.

Mr. Wright: I think for the purposes of the record we ought to have the volumes offered.

Mr. Proskauer: You are offering them. We have an objection to their going into evidence.

Mr. Seymour: If your Honor please, the defendants have a fundamental objection to receiving these in evidence. We have indicated in our letter to Mr. Berge, which your Honor has a copy of, that we do not make any question as to the authenticity of the decisions, nor would we object to their consideration merely on the question of the way the decree has worked. But as evidence, evidence of violations of law, we have a fundamental objection. It would seem to me that for your Honor's convenience perhaps the way to proceed at this stage would be to have Mr. Wright mention these decisions, your Honor look at them, but not receive them in evidence at this time, and hear the argument on the defendants' side [fol. 3563] in which the objection will be discussed. If your Honor would prefer to have the objection stated more fully at this time I am prepared to do so.

The Court: No, I should think that would be all right. Wouldn't that be satisfactory to you? Have them marked for identification and then consider a little later whether we receive them in evidence?

Mr. Wright: It is immaterial to us at what point your Honor rules except we want it understood that our position is that those Appeal Board decisions are admissible for all purposes to prove violations of law and for whatever other conclusions your Honor may legitimately draw from the examination. And we are offering them not for any limited purposes but for all purposes in the suit.

Mr. Raftery: Are they being offered against the non-consenting defendants or against just the consenting defendants?

Mr. Wright: I think it is perfectly clear by the fact that the non-consenting defendants are not parties to the proceeding they would be in a somewhat different position to challenge the facts that are stated there than the parties that were. But I repeat they are being offered for whatever they may be worth against every defendant in the suit for all purposes.

[fol. 3564] The Court: On just what theory would they be admissible against the defendants who had no part in those proceedings?

Mr. Wright: I don't suppose they would be admissible to show any particular act of any of those defendants. However they are, I think, quite admissible in the suit for the purpose of acquainting the Court with a general course of business in the industry of which these other defendants are a part, and I suppose to that extent they might be said to be admissible against them, although that issue it seems to me is wholly academic at this point where we are seeking no temporary relief against these defendants.

Mr. Raftery: We would like to be heard on that later.

Mr. Caskey: Will it be understood that we all have the benefit of the objection?

The Court: What was that?

Mr. Caskey: I say may we all have the benefit of Mr. Seymour's objection?

Mr. Proskauer: May we not have an understanding that any objection made by defendants' counsel redounds to the benefit of all defendants' counsel?

The Court: Yes, but I think you ought to make a dis-[fol. 3565] tinction between the consenting defendants and the others.

Mr. Proskauer: I am speaking only for the consenting defendants, the good ones.

(Government's Exhibits 1 to 5 marked for identification.)

Mr. Wright: (To Clerk) You might state what each of those is in terms of numbers of decisions covered by each volume so we have in the record a statement of what each one has in it.

The next material that we wish to offer in evidence, if the Court please, is the consenting defendants' answers to plaintiff's interrogatories numbered 50-A and 52. 50-A is an interrogatory which called for a statement of the defendants' financial interests either direct or indirect in theatres in the United States.

The Court: Mr. Wright, did you say answers to interrogatory 50-A and——

Mr. Wright: 50-A is one number and 52 is the other.

The Court: That is Exhibit 6.

Mr. Seymour: May that be handled in the same way, your Honor?

The Court: Yes, but why would they not be admissible—interrogatories taken in this proceeding?

Mr. Seymour: Well, a technical objection perhaps [fol. 3566] would not lie, but the question of their relevancy to an injunction application, which is the kind that is before your Honor; is one which I think ought to be argued out in connection with the general argument.

The Court: Mark it for identification then.

Mr. Wright: As to marking I was informed that we were unable to locate the original interrogatories in the clerk's office which are on file and I have with me only our own copies which we of course don't want to surrender. So that I would suggest that if we could assign numbers to the documents now to be applied to the originals on file when they are located that would be sufficient in making the record.

Mr. Proskauer: Well, your Honor, just as a matter of convenience for your Honor and counsel in the brief that we are going to file we have referred to these by the number that the Appeal Board uses. Wouldn't that be a convenient way to refer to them?

Mr. Wright: I not having seen your brief have no idea——

Mr. Proskauer: Naturally you haven't seen it because it is still in proof. But I am suggesting, whether you have seen it or not, that it might be a convenience to both counsel and the Court if we refer to the numbers [fol. 3567] used by the Appeal Board. If it is not agreeable all you have to say is it is not agreeable.

Mr. Wright: I beg your pardon. I thought you were referring to the interrogatories. We of course have referred to them by their numbers and I assume that is the most convenient way for anyone to refer to them.

Mr. Caskey: Now how are you going to mark this?

Mr. Wright: Only the volumes containing them will be marked with a number and after that we will have a designation in the record which will tell you the numbers of the Appeal Board decisions that are contained in that volume.

As to the interrogatory answers I think we should assign an exhibit number at this time to each one of them even though we haven't the originals present.

Mr. Caskey: There are ten numbers then?

Mr. Wright: There would be ten numbers, yes—no, there would be more than that. Well, I will take them in order here.

You mark the Loew answer to interrogatory 50-A as Exhibit 6 for identification and the Loew answer to interrogatory 52 as Exhibit 7 for identification.

I don't believe I mentioned the difference between the [fol. 3568] two. 50-A is the statement of all of the interests which the defendants have in theatres. 52 is a statement of the interests which are jointly held in theatres in which other defendants are also interested.

Then the Paramount answer to 50-A will be Exhibit 8 for identification and the Paramount answer to 52 will be Exhibit 9.

The Court: What is that, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: That is Paramount.

The Court: The first, Exhibit 7 for identification, is the answer to interrogatory 52 by——

Mr. Wright: Loew. Exhibit 6 is the answer to interrogatory 50-A by Loew and Exhibit 7 the answer to 52 by Loew. Exhibit 8 is Paramount's answer to 50-A and Exhibit 9 is Paramount's answer to 52, all for identification.

(Answers to interrogatories above mentioned to be marked Government's Exhibits 6, 7, 8 and 9 for identification.)

Mr. Wright: Now the Warner Bros. answer to 50-A and 52 I believe is contained in the same document. However I think that all that need be marked for identification in that case is a list which appears in the Warner document marked "Answers to interrogatories" which is [fol. 3569] headed "Theatres owned or leased by Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. and subsidiaries," which consists of twelve typewritten pages. That list I think may be marked Exhibit 10. That would be marked in lieu of Warner's full answer to Exhibit 2, interrogatory 50-A.

(To be marked Government's Exhibit 10 for identification.)

Mr. Wright: Then Warner's answer to 52 will be marked as Exhibit 11 for identification.

(To be marked Government's Exhibit 11 for identification.)

Mr. Wright: And the Fox answer to 50-A will be marked Exhibit 12 for identification and the Fox answer to 52 as Exhibit 13 for identification.

(To be marked Government's Exhibits 12 and 13 for identification.)

Mr. Wright: Then there are three answers for the RKO theatre operating companies. The answer of RKO Midwest Corporation to interrogatory 50-A may be marked as Exhibit 14.

The Court: Mr. Wright, I didn't get that last one. This relates to what?

Mr. Wright: This relates to RKO. RKO has three operating subsidiaries each of which made a separate answer. This one is RKO Midwest Corporation. Ex-[fol. 3570] hibit 14 for identification is the answer to 50-A and Exhibit 15 for identification would be the RKO Midwest Corporation answer to 52.

(To be marked Government's Exhibits 14 and 15 for identification.)

Mr. Wright: Then the answer to 50-A of Keith-Albee-Orpheum Corporation will be marked Exhibit 16 for identification and the answer of the same corporation to 52 will be 17 for identification.

(To be marked Government's Exhibits 16 and 17 for identification.)

Mr. Wright: The answer of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation to 50-A will be 18 and the answer of the same corporation to 52 will be 19.

(To be marked Government's Exhibits 18 and 19 for identification.)

Mr. Wright: Now we have attached to the memorandum that we submitted photostatic copies of the forms of license agreement that are currently in use by these defendants and I don't think there is any occasion to have those separately marked as exhibits unless there is some dispute as to authenticity that I am not aware of or unless the defendants desire to have another set of these contracts marked and placed in evidence.

[fol. 3571] Mr. Caskey: Mr. Wright, I understand that a full photostatic copy is annexed to the original moving papers.

Mr. Wright: Yes, front and back. The whole thing.

And that completes our offers of proof in connection with this motion.

Mr. Proskauer: If your Honor please, I have been asked by my associates to make a general statement to your Honor of our position on this argument. My friend comes in here having asked for quick trial of this case and secured it and asks for the most drastic relief known to the law—a temporary injunction—without a pretense of showing those fundamental things, which I need not argue to a Judge of your Honor's experience are conditions precedent to the granting of this drastic temporary relief. And while in the course of what I shall have to say I may refer to a technical argument or two, and they are destructive of the Government's position, essentially I am making an appeal to your Honor's sense of fairness and justice and common sense.

Now at the very outset then where does the Government get a right to ask for temporary injunction? The statute says that when the parties complained of shall have been [fol. 3572] duly brought into court and pending any such petition and before final decree the Court may issue a temporary injunction. Here we have a final decree.

I might rest there, but as I told your Honor I want to show you the unreasonableness and unfairness of the Government's position, not merely its technical inadequacy.

What is this decree? And what do they say is your Honor's function here? I wrote it down. That you are not to sit here to determine whether this decree has worked well, and the Government makes the concession that it has worked well. And in the face of that they still come here and say, "We are asking for a temporary injunction. We must show immediate need. We must show danger to the public. We have got a quick trial. But the Judge who created or was so valuable to all the parties in creating this magnificent arbitral system, he has nothing to say as to whether this decree is really working. He must not consider the question of whether it is good."

That is an amazing position to be taken by a man who asks for a temporary injunction against a final consent decree.

Now let us go to the next step. What about this decree? [fol. 3573] This is what the Government agreed to: "It is recognized that clearance reasonable as to time and area is essential in the distribution and exhibition of moving pictures." And there was a recital agreed to by the Government, "Controversies arising upon the complaint of an exhibitor that the clearance applicable to his theatre is unreasonable shall be subject to the arbitral provisions."

Now why did the Government agree to that? We are not used to regarding the Antitrust Division as Santa Claus. They develop curious ideologies at times in their pursuit of alleged monopolies. They agreed to that because under the law they had to.

What my friend loses sight of completely in his argument about clearance is that we are not selling merchandise. We are licensing the right to exhibit a copyrighted picture. And all this stuff that we have heard here about price fixing and about the evil implications of price control might have some relevance if we were selling bricks or stone or clothes. But we have based our brief on the law, the copyright law.

Your Honor will find under the Morosco case that the Supreme Court has decided squarely that we got a perfect right to make a restrictive license with respect to the exhi- [fol. 3574] bition of our copyrighted motion pictures, and I just want to find that part of our brief.

(To Mr. Caskey): Find me that in our brief.

I will take it from another memorandum here. In Manners v. Morosco the Court held squarely that the owner of a copyright who licenses it can impose restrictive conditions and at the same time restrain the licensor from granting other licenses which interfere with that.

In the very case that my friend relies on, Manners v. Morosco—I mean Interstate Circuit v. The United States, one of the great cases where predatory practices were involved, which do not exist on this motion because there has been no showing of anything but the ownership of the theatres—and these decisions I shall advert to in a moment—in this Interstate case the Court said, "Under Section 1 of the Copyright Act the owners of the copyright of a motion picture film acquire the right to exhibit the picture and to grant exclusive or restrictive license to others to exhibit it."

I could pile Pelion on Ossa on that point. Your Honor will find it in our brief. I am not arguing for what I am afraid my friend in his enthusiasm will try to put in my [fol. 3575] mouth, that the right to license gives the owner of a copyright any right to enter into other collateral conspiracies which might meet condemnation of the law. But we have no such case here. I am referring to this point merely to illustrate and eliminate the question of why the Government had to consent that clearance reasonable was required in the conduct of this business and why they recognize what was in us a fundamental right so long as we did not do the predatory things which have been condemned in cases like the Interstate case.

Now from there I go on.

What does my friend say is his reason for urging your Honor that he has shown per se a violation of the Sherman law? Now his own brief, your Honor, concedes these two points: He says that he must show that we imposed unreasonable clearances which prima facie violate the Sherman Act and, two, that the decree in its present form fails to give adequate relief against such violations.

I say to your Honor that he has lamentably failed in both those undertakings.

Your Honor asked a question of my good friend here which went to the heart of this thing—what is an unreasonable clearance? And as I go through very generally these cases your Honor will get the import of his inability to answer that question except in a rigmarole that unreasonable [fol. 3576] clearance is unreasonable clearance. That is what his answer came down to, and to suggest that because an Appeal Board in X cases decided that clearance was unreasonable by one day or in X cases by two days or in X cases by ten days—and I am going to give you some of the figures on the brief—that that proves a violation of the Sherman law is just, I submit to your Honor, the reductio ad absurdum of argument. And that contention of mine is not only implicit in the situation; it is explicit: Because here is what the Appeal Board says on that subject:

In No. 76 the matter of Gary the argument was made that because the complainant independent theatre owner had brought a suit in the District Court for violation of the Sherman law for treble damages and had lost his case that therefore the reasonableness of clearance was res adjudicata and that he could not therefore succeed in a subsequent appeal he made for arbitration as to the reasonableness of his clearance.

I am going to read a few lines, with your Honor's permission, from this opinion of the Appeal Board because it is so scholarly, and I may say, so in line with the general scholarly and decent and fair approach of those three members of that Appeal Board that I say to your Honor that [fol. 3577] you never I believe in your experience will find a body of decisions that show a clearer understanding of facts, of law, and a desire to do justice in a complicated situation, so complex that there is practically no other way of handling it than under some such machinery as we devised with your Honor's aid. I am going to show your Honor that they themselves have demolished this argument that the Attorney General here makes.

> "The principle of res adjudicata could not possibly apply"—says the Appeal Board, "The issues in the Federal Court and in this proceeding are entirely different. In the Federal Court the issue is whether a conspiracy could be established in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Law. No such issues are involved in this proceeding. The question here is whether this clearance is reasonable or unreasonable. This issue is not involved in the Federal Court suit and the denial of the Arbitrator of this motion under Section 786 is correct and is affirmed."

And isn't that common sense? How could anybody seriously claim that a court of justice in an activity as complex and as difficult to administer as this would issue the temporary injunction that my friend Wright asks for, to [fol. 3578] restrain us under penalty of punishment for contempt from what he calls unreasonable clearance on a showing of nothing other than that from time to time the Appeal Board decided that certain clearances ought to be modified. What was the purpose of this consent decree? It was to accomplish just that, your Honor. When we sat around the table and when we came before your Honor we all knew that one of the most difficult things in the world to determine was clearance. We all knew that Judge Chestnut had held in the Westway case, and we know that it is the law of this land today, that clearance was right and just and necessary. We all knew that there were certain grievances that certain of the independent theatre owners had and we in good faith sat around the table with the Government and agreed on this machinery, and now the Government comes in and says, "Because you agreed to it and because it is working effectively and because the Appeal Board has done justice and adjusted the clearance provisions to the necessities of each particular situation"—and your Honor intimated in your question that they must be so adjusted, and indeed they must—he comes in and says, "You must not pay any attention to the fact that that decree is working perfectly, you must not pay any attention to the fact that the Appeal Board is redressing slight injus- [fol. 3579] tices time to time,"—and they are slight—"you must just assume as a matter of law that because they found injustices to adjust that therefore the defendants are violating the Sherman Law per se and you must pin them to the earth with an injunction restraining them from unreasonable clearance."

Your Honor, the statement of that claim is its answer.

Now let me go ahead. There is talk in his brief and in his motion papers—a lot of it—about substantial and unsubstantial competition. These Appeal Board members never decided that they were without power to meet that situation. Of course it has always been a fundamental tenet of the motion picture industry that it could not license a picture for simultaneous exhibition in a given area to two conflicting interests. Our copyrighted picture would not be worth very much to us if we did that. And nobody says that we have to. But what the Appeal Board has done is this: —and again I am going to ask your Honor's permission to read one opinion to illustrate the effective approach—and I am accentuating the word "effective"—I mean by effective an approach which does the job decently and honestly and justly. This is what they say on that subject that has agitated Mr. Wright so: "If the area served by the theatres [fol. 3580] are such there is no competition between them no clearance is justified." And when they find such a situation that was so or they have reduced the clearance to one day and they claim repeatedly, continuously in their opinion—and you will find them on our brief—the right to abolish clearance entirely where there is no competition.

"But," they say, "on the other hand if it appears that there is real competition, though perhaps small, the only award the arbitrator is authorized to make under the decree is one fixing the maximum clearance between the theatres involved which may be granted in licenses thereinafter entered into."

This language means that where theatres are in the same competitive area the arbitrator may not eliminate all clearance. In other words, they have reduced the whole proceeding to a common sense treatment. If there is no competition between the theatres the arbitrators can say there shall be no clearance. If there is substantial competition they may say there will be a substantial clearance. If there is slight competition in case after case they have reduced the clearance to one day saying that that was fair and that was the right thing to do. And my friend says that that proves that the defendants are quasi criminals violating the Sher- [fol. 3581] man Law and they have got to take the risk of an injunction restraining them in the general words "unreasonable clearances."

Here is what they say also, and this so much substantiates the implication of your Honor's question: "In the arbitration or clearance controversies under the decree the form of the consideration must always be the determination of what is reasonable in the particular case rather than the formulation of inflexible rules and their application with unyielding rigidity. General principles are to serve as standards but can never be stated so precisely as to exclude the possibility of exceptions demanded by fairness and equity."

Just imagine your Honor sitting where you sit and hearing a motion to punish us for contempt for violating the injunction which he seeks. What are you going to do? Here one man says that reasonable clearance is one day and another says it is twenty days and you take all these things into account and send a man to jail or punish him on a hearsay, vague consideration like that.

Now let's see what the Appeal Board did in these cases. Where the competition was slight—you will find these collated on our brief—in X cases they reduced it to one day, where it was a bit more to three days, in one group [fol. 3582] of cases to five days, in another to seven days depending on the intensity of the competition. And where the competition was greater they reduced it in some cases to ten days, to fourteen days, to twenty-one days, twenty-eight days, or thirty days, deciding each case on its own merits. In over 75 per cent of the cases listed the Board wrote that some clearance was proper. It was only in 25 per cent of the cases that there was any question at all raised as to whether there should be no clearance. There are only six cases in which clearance was reduced to one day.

That is the gravamen of his grievance, that if the Court had had power—if the arbitrators had had power they would not have reduced it to one day but abolished it. In these cases there is no basis for the claim that the Board would have abolished clearance entirely if it had had the power. All they say in those cases, and we have collated them on our brief, is that there being slight competition the clearance should be reduced to one day, and in not a single case does the Appeal Board suggest that clearance should be eliminated even where there is competition though slight.

Now I am a little puzzled about my friend's strategy. [fol. 3583] I think he is, in the vernacular, laying back for me. He wants me to argue first so that he can then come along. But twice armed is he who has a cause as just as ours, and I don't mind that little strategy. I have met it from the Attorney General before. I might just as well anticipate him. He says that there should never be clearance between two theatres which have the same admission price. Well, why not? There are cases where clearance was granted in favor of a theatre charging a lesser admission price. What the Appeal Board says is that the amount of the admission price is a factor and a very important factor in determining clearance. But here are the things they say they must take into account in addition, and again I am giving you a catalog of the ships. The cases that he cites are cases where the Board said they had to take into account larger seating capacities, whether theatres were superior physically, whether they paid higher film rentals, whether they represented a much more substantial investment and engaged in a superior type of operation. Where does the Government, powerful though it be, get the license to come in here and say to this industry, "This Appeal Board does not know what it is talking about. We demand that you change this decree so that equality of [fol. 3584] admission price is ipso facto determinative of the whole question of clearance no matter how important the other factors may be in it."

I have anticipated him on that and if he gets any advantage out of that he can make the most of it.

Now then he makes a point that there should be something done about the fact that the decree excludes from arbitration our clearances to our own theatres. Your Honor will find that in practice we have never insisted on that. And if that was the only thing he had to say I would personally say to your Honor—and I bind no defendant now—de minimis non curat lex. It is such an inconsequential thing in the actual working out and we have never insisted on it and that little change certainly would not hurt anybody. And if he was nice and reasonable in court as he sometimes is out of court and came and talked to us about that I am sure that on that one point there would not be very much trouble.

But my colleagues always say to me that no argument by me on this subject of this arbitration system is complete unless I say that you must not burn down the house to roast the pig, and certainly to get that little result we are not compelled, I think, to destroy this arbitral system by [fol. 3585] a sweeping and vague injunction such as my friend here asks for.

Now then I want to come to the very last thing to which I shall advert; that is, this question of burden of proof. Well, there is very little to that, your Honor. In fact there is nothing to it. I want to begin by reading again what the Appeal Board says on that question of burden of proof. I will put my hand on it quickly. They say it is desirable to avoid legalistic refinements in arbitration proceedings.

Mr. Wright: Excuse me, Judge; what is the number of it?

Mr. Proskauer: That is Samuel Hookberg, No. 68. And in every case the Board and the arbitrators clearly required these defendants to produce evidence and information which was in their control. The importance of that is this: My friend says, "Think of the poor little distributor."

Mr. Wright: Exhibitor.

Mr. Proskauer: Yes, exhibitor. You see, the truth will out. The distributor is the poor little man. It is the exhibitor who is on top under this decree. That just showed a subconsciousness of the truth in me.

Here is the picture friend Wright paints: This little exhibitor comes in and he says, "My clearance is unreasonable, I have to prove it, and I haven't got any evidence [fol. 3586] and I am just miserable."

Well now, your Honor, anybody can require these defendants to produce all the evidence in the world. Nobody is going to object to that, and burden of proof doesn't make any difference to us at all except in one aspect—that if you do put the burden of proof on us, thus entirely reversing the ordinary course of events, we are going to have 15,000 cases. There are 15,000 independent theatres struggling along under the domination of this terrible monopoly and making an awful lot of money and making a good deal of money out of asserting claims under the aegis of the Attorney General's office. We don't want that. That is not fair. If your Honor wants to provide that whenever a claim is made of unreasonable clearance that all the consenting defendants have to produce all their records and information relating to that particular claim you would be directing us to do no more than the arbitrators already direct us to do and that we have been doing and that meets that completely.

You see, when you begin to monkey with a complex structure like this you don't know where you are going to get. Take, for example, going back a moment to this claim of my friend's that clearance ought ipso factor to be denied [fol. 3587] where the admission price is the same. What would we have? A little theatre over there charges 35 cents and the theatre here charges 50 cents and the little fellow who is charging 35 cents sees a chance to make a ten-strike. He just raises his admission price to 50 cents and then he will come along and say, "Now you can't get any clearance over me." Where does the public get off? The dear public which is my friend's concern is going to be robbed by a continuous increase in the exhibition price of the showing of these films.

And so it is wherever you try to change anything by an ipso dixit and what the Appeal Board referred to as rigidity you are doing something that I would say with all the earnestness that is in me, your Honor, works not only to the disadvantage of these consenting defendants, it works to the disadvantage of the American public that today sees every one of these pictures, pictures costing three, four or five million dollars, to be produced ultimately for as little as ten or fifteen cents. That is the job these defendants are doing.

Your Honor, as I listened to my friend I couldn't, much as I love him, escape the feeling that the mountain labored and brought forth a mouse. What is all this about? What [fol. 3588] is the terrible danger to the public between now and the first Monday in October that requires the granting of this temporary relief—this drastic and threatening temporary relief? This vague relief? What is there that actuates us all to get into all this stew when we are going to try this case now and we will find out whether we have to divorce these theatres or not, that being the Government's pet contention?

And there again I wish to convince your Honor that nothing could be more harmful to the general public than the granting of that relief. But that is for the future. For the present what in the world has been shown here to actuate an equity judge, a chancellor, into granting temporary relief when there is question as to his power to do it, when there is no showing whatever of any illegality, when the inference drawn from these opinions is strained and untenable, and where in the final analysis there is not a single thing shown by way of pressing necessity to call on your Honor to exercise or grant this drastic relief?

What I have said will indicate to your Honor what our position is about these opinions. They are no evidence whatever of violation of the Sherman Law and we ask your Honor not to take them as that evidence. But however you [fol. 3589] take them and however you decide the technical points which I have raised I rest my appeal to you to deny this motion fundamentally on the decencies, the equity and the justice of this situation.

Mr. Seymour: May it please the Court, I would like to say just a word about the nature of this decree at this stage before I start dealing with the motion.

There isn't any possible doubt on the face of the decree that the arbitration provisions with respect to clearance are still in effect. The whole decree shows that except for those provisions which fell at a certain date the balance of the decree is still in effect. It is also clear that the decree is fine even though it is a consent decree. That has been authoritatively decided.

Now the only way to deal with anything which is included in this decree is by a modification of the decree under its terms, and this is not a motion for modification. This is a motion for a temporary injunction and is governed by the ordinary rules of temporary injunction except for the serious problem which Judge Proskauer mentioned at the outset that an injunction under an antitrust case under Section 4 is to be considered before final decree.

[fol. 3590] But I pass on from that point.

The matter I want to deal with particularly is the problem of whether these Appeals Board decisions should be received on the basis on which they are offered by the Government. The Government says that on this motion they have two burdens: First, to prove that there have been violations of law; and second, to show that the decree does not appropriately deal with those violations or adequately deal with them.

Now we think that there are further burdens as there always are on an injunction motion, but just to consider those, these Appeals Board decision are offered of course on the first branch of that burden, to attempt to show prima facie violations of law.

Now what have they actually covered? Well, they are selecting out of 106, I think, some 51 in which the Appeals Board has reduced clearance or approved arbitrators' decisions reducing clearance all the way from one day up. They represent decisions on particular facts in particular cases under the standards laid down in Section 8 of the decree. They do not deal, were not intended to deal, and could not deal with questions of violations of the Sherman Act. Section 8 elaborates the considerations which were to be taken into account by the arbitrators and which were [fol. 3591] to be considered on appeal by the Appeals Board. They constitute the various elements which enter into the original business decision as to the length of clearance. The clearance arrangements which were reviewed by arbitration were business decisions, negotiated by distributors and exhibitors, and the arbitration provision, Section 8, the standards which the arbitrators were to apply, were those business standards, and this provided an independent review of the business judgment.

Now it is perfectly apparent that the standards set forth in Section 8 for the review of that business decision, a business decision which as your Honor knows involves intricate problems in the particular area and the particular situation—it is ridiculous to suppose that that review embraced a consideration of Sherman Act violations. If it should be deemed to that would mean that this decree really set up the arbitrators in the place of the Court to pass on questions of violations of law and that the defendants by consenting, knowing that some of the decisions would be bound to go against them, set back after creating a noose which would be used at such time as the Government wanted to use it after a sufficient number of decisions adverse to distributors had developed.

[fol. 3592] Now it is perfectly evident, as Judge Proskauer has pointed out, the Appeals Board has held squarely the other side of this in the Gary case that a court decision that clearance was reasonable does not bind the Appeals Board, and the Appeals Board could nonetheless hold, applying the standards of Section 8, that in the particular situation it was unreasonable.

Now this is an a fortiori case. If a court case which might have all the elements of res adjudicata and stare decisis cannot be used to control the decision of the arbitrators, obviously a decision of the arbitrators under the limited standards of Section 8 cannot be regarded as res adjudicata and stare decisis for the purposes of considering violations of the Sherman Act. It seems to me it is apparent on the face of the decree, it is apparent by the fact that this is an arbitration decision that they were not considering violations of law and that they could not be vested with that power, were never vested with that power by the Court or the Government or by the defendants. Their decisions had none of that aspect. They are not a court. They proceed informally, not under regular rules of evidence. They are not bound to take into account the purpose, the [fol. 3593] nature, the effect of the things that they do consider. They are not bound to take into account the general things that would have to be taken into account in a Sherman Act case.

So it seems to me perfectly apparent that fine as the Appeals Board work is within the sphere in which it operates it cannot be stretched to amount to proof of violations of law to sustain the burden of the Government on this motion. It doesn't on its face, it doesn't as a matter of intent or fair intention of the decree or the purpose of the parties. The Appeals Board has so held the other way, and this is plainly an a fortiori case.

Now in the absence of any proof of violations of law—and these decisions are not proof of violations of law—there is no need to go to the second question at this stage of the case, as to whether the decree needs modification or not, because this is not a motion to modify. This is the typical motion for injunction on the questions raised under Section 4 and there is no other proof adequate to sustain a claim of violation of law. These interrogatories which are mentioned do not deal with anything but a few questions of fact which have nothing to do with violations of law, and the license agreements to which counsel have re- [fol. 3594] ferred are just the ordinary license agreement. There is no dispute that they are in effect, but they do not prove any violations of law and therefore at the very threshold there is a complete failure to show any violations of law. We think that your Honor therefore ought to sustain the objection to receiving these Appeals Board decisions and also to receiving the interrogatories on the grounds suggested.

The problem has one serious aspect, from the point of view of the defendants of course, in addition to that I have mentioned. Section 5 of the Clayton Act, which deals with consent decrees, would create some question perhaps—at least the matter has not been decided—if there were ever a subsequent modification of this decree and evidence was received at this stage of the case. So that our friends on the other side are apparently entirely aware of that. But if evidence should now be received, it might create serious difficulties in the way of any subsequent modification by consent from the defendants' point of view.

That is not a reason why your Honor should exclude the evidence but it is a serious problem for the defendants and a reason for your Honor's giving the greatest serious consideration.

[fol. 3595] The Court: I missed part of your argument on that, Mr. Seymour.

Mr. Seymour: Your Honor is familiar with Section 5 which provides in effect that a consent decree shall not be prima facie evidence of anything in a treble damage case. It also provides in effect that it must be a consent decree before testimony taken. Now it has never been adjudicated, but if evidence should be received at this stage of the case and at some subsequent stage it should be deemed desirable to make some modification in this decree by consent it would raise a serious question as to whether after that testimony was taken, after the evidence was received, a decree by consent would be within the precaution of the statute.

Now that is not a reason for your Honor to exclude the evidence but from the defendants' point of view it is a reason why the objection, if otherwise valid, is of particular importance.

Now we think that there is no adequate compliance with the minimum standards of temporary injunction proof. If your Honor should even be in doubt about that question, we would ask your Honor to permit us to provide affidavits which would show the broad issues of fact that would have to be determined before your Honor could even consider [fol. 3596] granting a temporary injunction involving this clearance practice so general in the industry and which counsel for the Government says he wants to start destroying now and destroying completely by the time of the final trial.

We feel that this is one of those cases that your Honor has so often considered on the question of whether relief of a temporary character ought to be granted whether a full consideration of the disputed questions of fact would have to be given, and to that end I think your Honor will find it unnecessary to come to that. If your Honor came to a conclusion as to what kind of proof had to be taken we would like to know that. We are hopeful that these objections are sound and if they are sound there is no occasion to give further consideration to the motion at this stage.

Mr. Caskey: If your Honor please, I want very shortly to review the origin of Section 8 and the provision in it that clearance——

The Court: Excuse me just a minute.

Mr. Caskey: When the complaint was filed in 1938 it contained numerous allegations respecting the activities of the defendants in granting clearance, both clearance by concert of action or conspiracy and the individual clearance granted by a single distributor. Likewise the clearance [fol. 3597] granted by a distributor to its own theatres and to theatres said to be affiliated with other distributors was attacked. Those allegations were reframed but substantially re-alleged in the supplemental and amended petition that was filed in November of 1940. And one of those allegations was that the defendants had violated the law by making clearance agreements which are calculated to suppress competition between exhibitors rather than to protect the distributors' revenue, which is essentially the same statement that was made here this morning.

Now we filed answers denying those allegations and thus an issue was created. That issue was resolved by entering into a decree, a final decree, true by consent, true subject to modification in the manner provided within the decree, but nevertheless a final determination of the issues between the parties as made by the pleadings. Now the agreement, the consent decree says clearance, reasonable as to time, and reasonable as to area, is necessary in the distribution of motion pictures. And clearance is defined as a contract between the distributor and the exhibitor restraining the right of the distributor to itself exhibit or license the exhibition of its picture within the time and the area specified in the contract.

[fol. 3598] Now when that agreement was made the Interstate case had been decided and whatever it held was known to the Attorney General and his associates. At that time Judge Chesnut's opinion in the Westway case had been affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. So there wasn't any question in the minds of everyone but that this provision in Section 8 correctly stated the then known law.

Now nothing has happened in the five years which have intervened except this remedial machinery has been operating to solve the particular problem that arises between two or more competing theatres, operating now since February of 1940, over four years. There have been over 400 arbitrations. The distributors have placed in funds over a million and a quarter dollars to maintain it, and I may say that they are bearing substantially all of the expense, the cost to the complainant through appeal, which on an average has been less than $45 a case. There has been no proof of any change in economic conditions, any change in law, any change in practice since the agreement was made and embodied in this decree in 1940. Therefore we think that the usual rule that the plaintiff seeking to get a temporary injunction must show cogent proof of emergency applies.

Now one word about these opinions. If they were in [fol. 3599] evidence what would they prove? Well, the first thing they would prove is that in a 106 cases three distinguished lawyers have given of their energy and ability toward the solution of a particular problem and have done it in a manner which is the admiration of everyone who studies it. That they will prove.

Second, they will prove that with respect to clearance there is not the slightest criticism of Section 8 in these 106 reports. They according to my calculation embrace about 111 pages and about 250 words on each page which gets up into the millions of words, but there is not a suggestion that there is anything wrong with Section 8 in the whole bunch. And that is all we are talking about today. It is true they establish that it is the practice in the industry to grant clearance between theatres which are located in the same competitive area even though the amount of the competition is small or slight. That is a fact. That is the universal practice in the industry. It was true in 1940; it is true today. But even there the Government does a little fudging, as they say. For example, one of the illustrations given is a case involving theatres up in Massachusetts—Fitchburg and Gardner and Athol.

Well, it came out in the course of the testimony that four [fol. 3600] of the defendants granted one day clearance to Fitchburg over Gardner and that was the practice. And they gave Athol the same availability. And all that the Appeals Board did was to say to the fifth company which granted seven days instead of one day, "You better go along with the rest and reduce yours to one day."

Now that doesn't establish any violation of law at all.

Now the first thing that these opinions would establish is that the distributors licensed their films sometimes to a subsequent run which charges about the same or occasionally even more than the prior run. Well, there is no significance to that. Take the very first case cited, Canton, New York, and Ogdensburg. Canton of course is the county seat, much the larger town. The other, 15 miles away, was in a university town. It played 14 days later and it charged the same admission price as Canton. I don't know what that establishes as a violation of law. It is just a fact that the exhibitor in operating his theatre in Ogdensburg thought that he could charge the same admission price as the exhibitor operating his theatres in Canton.

And the last thing that is established that would be [fol. 3601] material here is that the distributors grant clearance to theatres affiliated with each other and to independents alike. But there is not the slightest word in all these reports that the clearance which a distributor grants first to its own theatres or second to the theatres affiliated with some other producer is either any longer or greater in area than the clearance which its grants to other first run theatres in other parts of the country. The fact of distinction between the amount or type of clearance granted affiliated theatres and independent theatres is not adverted to once in all these opinions.

We think therefore that your Honor should exclude these reports from evidence and deny the application for the injunction.

The Court: Mr. Wright, how is the injunction that you are asking for—what would it provide?

Mr. Wright: We suggested three possible forms of injunction. Now of course I suppose we have not attempted any detailed discussion of the precise form until we have gotten the decision on the question of the need for additional relief. But with respect to this problem of the affiliated theatre clearance we had proposed a prohibition which would flatly restrain and enjoin the consenting defendants [fol. 3602] from imposing clearance restrictions in favor of each other's theatres until and unless they were first able to make a satisfactory showing that the purpose of that clearance or that that clearance was necessary to protect their revenue as distributors. In other words, that the decision to grant a clearance had not resulted from a desire to protect the theatres owned by each other from independent competition in the form of any exchange of reciprocal privileges, but actually the clearance was imposed in the course of performing a function as distributors.

The Court: Mr. Wright, an injunction is to prevent threatened violations of law as I understand it. Now under our procedure unreasonable clearances are prohibited. There is a good deal of difficulty in determining——

Mr. Wright: If your Honor is referring to the present decree I don't think that is a correct statement.

The Court: I am speaking quite generally, and don't hold me too closely to it because I am not as familiar with the law in this case as you are. But an injunction seeks to prevent a threatened violation of law.

Mr. Wright: Yes.

The Court: Now just what violation of the law is threat[fol. 3603] ened here? Under the machinery which we have set up we have a Board which determines whether or not there has been an unreasonable clearance and if there has been one they hand down a decision and as far as I know and believe then reasonable clearance is remedied.

Mr. Wright: The difficulty with that assumption is, your Honor, that these gentlemen are not free to deal with the problem of unreasonable clearance under the law as such. They operate within a very restricted framework which determines the nature of the relief they can grant and which sets up limited standards for determining whether or not unreasonable clearance exists. That is precisely what we are here arguing about—the inadequacy of that framework to permit that Board and those arbitrators to function in a manner which would effectively restrain and prohibit unreasonable clearance which violates the law as distinguished from clearance which——

The Court: That would seem so and I gather from your brief that you want to include such other situations.

Mr. Wright: We want to broaden——

The Court: I mean broaden. That is a better word. You want to broaden the power of the arbitrators.

Mr. Wright: We want to broaden two things—we would [fol. 3604] first broaden the scope of liability itself, and second broaden the means of dealing with the violations once established.

The system that is presently set up of course provides no penalties whatsoever no matter how——

The Court: Would you say this: So far as our present machinery is concerned, in the cases which the arbitrators and the Board have jurisdiction over, that there is no threat of law violation? Is that so?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, we say there has been a continuous series of law violations.

The Court: Isn't it true that just as soon as it is found that there is an unreasonable clearance that it is remedied? Isn't that true?

Mr. Wright: I think your Honor has to make a distinction between the concept of unreasonable clearance as it is reachable under the existing decree and the term unreasonable clearance as it exists as a matter of law. Our whole argument is based upon the proposition that unreasonable clearance, clearance which is unreasonable as a matter of law, which violates the Sherman Act, is not prohibited by the existing decree and may not be adequately dealt with under the provisions that are in the existing decree.

The Court: That would seem to be an indication that you [fol. 3605] thought that facts which might be unreasonable so far as the arbitrators were concerned or the Appeal Board, that those same facts might not be a violation of the Sherman Act, doesn't it?

Mr. Wright: There isn't any question about that. I think our position with respect to the Appeal Board's decision has been misinterpreted by counsel. We don't suggest that anything the Appeal Board decides is res adjudicata so far as your Honor is concerned on any issue of law whatsoever. They don't sit there, they were not appointed for the purpose of determining what the law is or what it is not. Their sole function, as I understand it,—and I think it clearly appears from the decree—is to sit and review these findings of fact, determine what the facts are in any particular situation, and in their view make an ultimate decision as to whether or not a particular clearance was reasonable or unreasonable as a matter of fact.

Now whether or not the facts as revealed by their decisions constitute violations of law, those are matters which of course are committed exclusively to your Honor for decision, and that is why we offer these simply as evidence and then propose to show that upon a consideration of the facts that have been reported and developed in the course of those [fol. 3606] proceedings there have been a continuing series of law violations which have not been effectively prohibited or restrained by the awards that the arbitrators and the Board have been empowered to make under the limitations of the existing decree. That in no sense is the fault of the arbitration system or the Board. We accept entire responsibility for that because of the limitations in the decree which we assented to at that time but which we assented to for a three-year fixed trial period only.

Mr. Proskauer: With your Honor's permission, I didn't quite understand from what Mr. Wright said whether he is abandoning his claim for an injunction restraining us for unreasonable clearance.

Mr. Wright: No, I am not abandoning it at all.

Mr. Proskauer: You are still asking for that?

Mr. Wright: Yes. One thing more. I want to say this before I sit down.

We had furnished these defendants 30 days in advance of the hearing with a fairly comprehensive statement of our position and evidence. Now I assume the purpose of that was to facilitate the hearing here and so that we would also be notified in advance as to what their evidence would be and they said in their statement they might wish to submit an affidavit or some testimony. I would suppose that before [fol. 3607] we get into full argument on this thing we ought to know what the defendants' proof as distinguished from their argument is going to be, and I think we ought to get to that if there is going to be any.

Mr. Proskauer: I thought we had had full argument.

Mr. Wright: All that I am doing is what I concede to be making an opening statement simply outlining what proof we were going to offer.

The Court: Now Mr. Davis.

Mr. Davis: If the Court please, may I say with great respect to the learned counsel for the Government his opening statement confused me and his supplemental statement has completely obfuscated me. I think I know less of what the Government's position on this motion is than I did before I came into the courtroom.

First as to these exhibits here. I now understand from my friend that they are offered to your Honor not simply to prove that the Appeal Board has found unreasonable clearances to the number of 51 but they are now offered that your Honor may take the recital of facts contained in these opinions as facts proven on this motion and by a consideration of those facts may determine whether there has or has not been a series of violations of the Sherman Law. [fol. 3608] Now that seems to me to broaden the purpose for which counsel desired to offer these opinions beyond anything that I had conceived to be possible, and certainly for the defendants we object to having the recital of facts in these opinions treated as though they were proven in this court—originally proven as facts on which your Honor should adjudicate violation or non-violation of the law.

I take it for granted there is not a defendant here who has not participated in these particular proceedings who would not insist that he had the right to cross-examine the witnesses who appeared if their testimony was to be received against them. And the manifest impropriety of presenting against all of the defendants in solido these investigations as to each particular defendant is enough without more saying to condemn the whole tender so far as the purposes of this whole motion are concerned.

Now when we get to the motion itself and the attitude of the Government, again with the deepest respect, it seems to me a pure play on words. This decree says in terms that clearance, reasonable in time and reasonable in area, is necessary and good. By necessary implication it says that clearance unreasonable in time and area is bad. And to [fol. 3609] correct such infirmity it erects a whole arbitral system.

Now I don't understand my friend attacks the arbitral system at all. I haven't heard from him at all any word that he wants to abolish these arbitrations and this Board of Appeal. On the contrary I think I had understood him to say that it had worked well. If he didn't say that, if he has a contrary view, he stands solitary and alone on that question, because so far as I know there isn't a defendant or counsel or arbitrator or litigant who does not admit that this has been an excellent, operative, just system. What my friend wants is to reverse a formula and that is all there is to it. He wants the decree to be amended to read, "Clearance being a restraint of trade is per se bad, but if reasonable it may become good." Those are the two sides of the shield. The decree says good unless unreasonable. My friend wants by this elaborate motion to make it read clearance is bad unless reasonable. What is the difference? It is merely the reversal of the formula and nothing more, but leading, says the Government, to a shift in the burden of proof.

I have a great deal of respect for the burden of proof just as I used to have a great deal of respect in an earlier and better day for stare decisis. There are certain legal ideolo- [fol. 3610] gies which we part with with great regret, and I don't deny that there is still some vitality left in the burden of proof. There is vitality in the burden of proof on the criminal side of the court because of the presumption of innocence that attends the accused who may sit silent until the Government or the prosecuting officer has made out a complete and perfect case against him. And that burden never shifts. There is the burden of proof in the old-fashioned common law ejectment where the defendant in possession may sit in perfect silence until the plaintiff has proved a chain of title absolutely perfect in every respect and his inability to meet that burden of proof defeats his recovery. But in the modern equity problem with our new rules for discovery and interrogatories it must be confessed that the burden of proof, which simply means who goes forward first, has lost most of its vitality. It may perhaps influence a wavering mind on the bench, of the jury, or the referee to furnish a makeweight by which ultimate decision may be arrived at and uncertainty dissolved. But between the parties involved it makes precious little difference, and in arbitral systems where the arbitrators sit on it and put their probe into both of the individuals it makes no difference at all except that the complainant must inaugurate the proceeding and set the machinery in motion.

[fol. 3611] Now to accomplish that stupendous reform of having the distributor set the machinery in motion instead of the exhibitor setting the machinery in motion my friend brings forward this portentous motion to amend this decree. And that seems to me the last bit of juice that there is in this orange and it is inconceivable to me that the Court should overleap all the tremendous obstacles to accomplish that reform.

The Court: Anyone else wish to be heard?

Mr. Wright: If the Court pleases, it doesn't seem to me that we are any clearer on this evidentiary point as far as the defendants' evidence is concerned than when I sat down before. Am I to understand that the defendants are resting their case simply on our presentation and relying on obtaining a ruling from your Honor to exclude our evidence? Or do they suppose at some future date when your Honor rules there will be given an opportunity to offer evidence? If the latter is the case I think we ought to have the ruling on the evidence here and now. I had supposed that if the ruling was deferred that they were going to offer what they had to offer. Otherwise I don't see how we can defer——

Mr. Seymour: If your Honor please, I think the matter [fol. 3612] will probably be disposed of by a ruling on this tender to which we have objected on the serious grounds that we have stated to you. I would suggest if your Honor would consider that any part of the weight necessary to be carried had been carried the defendants would want an opportunity to tender evidence on the disputed issues of fact. We would then want to submit these affidavits. If this evidence is not received and your Honor decides to sustain the objections, because they are so plainly reasonable, there won't be any occasion to burden your Honor with these affidavits. Rather than elaborate the hearing by suggesting that the affidavits be considered along with this ruling I should suppose that that matter ought to await your Honor's ruling.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please there was no occasion whatsoever for us to furnish this elaborate statement of what our position was if we were going to be met here at the hearing with the suggestion that the defendants still can't make up their minds as to what if anything they want to offer until they know what this ruling is going to be. Now it seems to me that it is a useless waste of time to split this proceeding into a possible two hearings by deferring this question of whether or not they shall be permitted to go forward. It seems to me they have to decide now that [fol. 3613] they are willing to take their chances on the record as made or add to it whatever they have.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, I want to add one word to that go forward or take their chances. We are not playing a game here. It is perfectly evident why we are very chary about putting in evidence. We are concerned with the possibility that if evidence is offered here and this consent decree were ever amended so that some theatre owner claiming to be injured will come in and say, "You offered evidence, therefore this consent decree is prima facie against you under Section 5 of the Clayton Law."

We have nothing to conceal. That is why we are walking on eggs a little bit about putting in evidence. I don't think the claim is serious, but somebody might make it and our clients are very sensitive about it and we have a great many treble damage suits to defend and the attorneys are right here in this courtroom looking for bits of help that they might pick up here. Now that being so we are pressing this objection to the offer of the evidence of these reports even though we have discussed them and said to your Honor, "Look them over instead of deciding. See what they really show or don't show. If they don't show any- [fol. 3614] thing exclude them from evidence. That is why we are putting it in that form. All we have got to say about an affidavit is that we have got an affidavit prepared here so that if your Honor admitted these in evidence and indicated that you thought there was any question here we would like to put before you just the plain evidentiary facts that you are already familiar with as to the way clearance works and what it is, as to the number of prints we make and how they are distributed, and how the composite of prints requires—just those formal things. We don't want to offer it unless we have to do. That is why we are throwing ourselves a little bit on your Honor's consideration to give us an opportunity to mark it hereafter if it becomes necessary. If it is not necessary we don't want to.

Mr. Frohlich: May I say a word?

The Court: Yes.

Mr. Frohlich: I want to make a formal objection at this time to the offer of proof for the Government for the reason that Columbia was never a party.

The Court: May I have it on the record that you represent a non-consenting defendant?

Mr. Frohlich: I represent a non-consenting defendant and on behalf of that non-consenting defendant I want to make a formal objection to the proof offered for the reason that [fol. 3615] Columbia whether rightly or wrongly never wanted to be a party to this decree and never was a party to any of these arbitrations, has never had a chance, as Mr. Davis said, to cross-examine any witnesses or defend itself in any of these proceedings. And for the Government to offer this proof at this time would be tantamount to placing upon Columbia the stigma of having been in some way guilty of wrongful clearance. Now I think that under very elementary rules Columbia should not be bound by that kind of proof and I want to press my objection.

The Court: Isn't there something in that, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Yes, I think there is, your Honor, except that it is wholly academic at the moment. I don't think we come to any question as to admissibility as to Columbia when we are not seeking any relief against Columbia on this motion. It seems to me that would only arise at a later date in the course of the trial of the suit on the merits.

Mr. Raftery: I didn't think I would say anything until Mr. Wright said he wasn't seeking any relief against Columbia.

Mr. Wright: On this motion.

Mr. Raftery: Every bit of relief he gets against the big [fol. 3616] five he indirectly gets against the little three, because even though we do not participate or have anything to do with the arbitration proceedings when Mr. Caskey mentioned a few towns such as Fitchburg and said it was cut down one day over Athol, United Artists and Universal have to give the same consideration by indirection. It is for that reason we are opposed to trying one of the important issues of this lawsuit on the merits on a motion. Clearance is an important part of this litigation. Just as some of the legal rules have passed out, as Mr. Davis has so well put it, Mr. Wright wants to pass clearance out of the picture. Forget it. Clearance is an essential part of the business. We had over 2000 contracts last year with clearance on one way or the other. Every one of those is a matter of negotiation just as profits and the other things that go into it. Now for your Honor to try ex parte—I just couldn't draw an affidavit to answer the contentions that he made in this particular situation. We submit he has shown no necessity for an injunction. You have set the case for trial for October. From what Mr. Proskauer has said all the exhibitors are having a field day. There is no necessity now for any injunction. This summary disposition of an issue [fol. 3617] as important as clearance on a motion the only factual support of which being some decisions by an Appeal Board at which not even all the five companies were parties in many and in some there would only be one of them—that is the sole evidence before your Honor to support a summary application to right a decree, and you ask Mr. Wright what type of injunction order would he suggest. It would clearly have to be a don't-beat-your-wife order because there is nothing that could be drawn except that the defendants are restrained from granting unreasonable clearance. He has not cited any cases that need temporary relief now. So we submit on behalf of Universal and United Artists that the motion now should be denied and the case, as your Honor has done, set for trial and we try this issue on the merits. And we actually filed the same objection Mr. Frohlich has to the introduction of these affidavits.

Mr. Casey: In amplification of what has just been said I find that of the 106 decisions in 31 Twentieth Century-Fox was not a defendant, not a party at all. And undoubtedly the same statistics would apply to all the other companies.

The Court: Mr. Wright, I don't think I should decide the question of the admissibility of these exhibits which have [fol. 3618] marked for identification. My impression is that the decisions of the Appeal Board are not proof there has been a violation of the Sherman Antitrust Law.

Mr. Wright: There is no contention on our part that it is.

The Court: Substantially so, isn't it?

Mr. Wright: We merely say that it is at least, certainly, prima facie proof of the facts therein contained as to these defendants who were parties to that proceeding, and for the purpose of this suit, when these men were especially designated to hear and determine these cases and to make these awards and if that arbitration system does not at least serve the function of legitimately bringing to your Honor's attention what is going on in this industry for the purpose of determining what kind — relief we ought to have in this suit, then it has no legitimate function whatsoever. As it is we were willing to consent to its institution and its continuance with that consideration in mind. You must remember that what this system does is to effectively insulate these defendants from these proceedings. To that extent it is very valuable to them and it is well worth the million and a half dollars they have put into it. Actually the arbitrators have no power to punish. All they can do is to [fol. 3619] make an award as to what should be done, as to future conduct. There is no violation of a contempt except a violation of the award occurs. That is a very nice thing for a defendant to have but it does carry at least some corresponding responsibilities. You can't have that system set up to determine those facts on that basis and still it seems to me come in here and say, "Yes, it is all right to have this system and have these awards to protect us from proceedings designed to punish us for violation of the Act but they can't be considered by this Court for the purpose of determining what we have done in order to see whether or not we have violated the Act." If that contention were accepted by your Honor we should move to set that entire system aside very promptly.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, I don't understand my friend. He undertook the burden of showing that we were violating the Sherman Law. As I understood him, first he came in and said he was offering these opinions as proof of that. Now he says he is not offering them as proof of that, and if I follow him what he means is he is not offering them as adjudications but he is offering them to show what the facts they found were so that you can make an independent determination from those facts as to whether we have vio- [fol. 3620] lated the Sherman Law.

I am trying to translate it into language which even the defendants' lawyers can understand. I think at last I have done so.

Our point about that is this: You can't determine a motion on these 51 isolated opinions, whether the unreasonable clearance is to the extent of one day or two days, constitute violations of the Sherman Law. That is involved with countless other questions just as the arbitrators point out.

And further than that, as has been so effectively stated here particularly by Mr. Davis, who is always effective, you just can't assume that where some of those defendants go into an informal arbitration and say, "Well, to get through with this thing we will agree that those are the facts," that if we were trying the serious issue with all of us there as to whether we were committing a quasi criminal offense, as to whether we were violating the Sherman Law—you can't assume that we would let those facts go in in that way. Why that is really an absurdity.

And, if your Honor please, it is a comfortable thing for us not to be threatened with an injunction on vague a thing as unreasonable clearance and it is worth a million and a half dollars to us to do that, but we didn't buy the court [fol. 3621] with that million and a half dollars or buy the Attorney General's office. We put it up because they subject to the Court's approval agreed that by putting it up we were effectively creating a machinery under your Honor's guidance for really handling in a practically common sense way these things which come up from day to day. And the amazing thing to me is that in all my friend's argument he pays no attention to the practical side of this at all. He just ignores the day to day turning of this great machinery. He says, "You can't punish us." What is the use of punishing us? If we make a mistake of four days in a clearance contract and the Appeal Board reduces that clearance by four days what is the point in punishment? Is he so hungry for blood or thirsty for blood that somebody has got to go go to jail if he makes a mistake of four days in a clearance which is immediately corrected by the summary process of this appeal? And I still don't know what he is asking for here. If he is still pressing his claim for the injunction I am sure that that must be out under the considerations that we have brought forth for your Honor's consideration.

That is all I can see he is moving for. He talks about [fol. 3622] modifying the conditions. Just think of the absurdity of the one he claims. Before I can grant a clearance to the biggest theatre in New York which I own—let us assume I own the Rockefeller Center Theatre; I don't—my clients don't; I wish they did—let us assume they own it and they give a first run with clearance of 20 days to that great theatre. My friend is actually so impractical with the cob webs of the Antitrust Division—somebody used the word obfuscate—that before I could give that theatre clearance I have got to come into court and I have got to apply to you and you have got to sit there and give me your permission to give clearance to the Rockefeller Center Theatre. Now I don't like to use the word "nonsense" but really, your Honor, that is it.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I repeat that if these decisions of this Board are not to be admissible in this court for the purpose of showing to your Honor what the facts are as to what these defendants have done in those proceedings in which they were involved then that system has no further justification insofar as the Government is concerned.

The Court: Isn't that a pretty big statement? The very purpose of this arbitration plan was this: It is known clearance is something that must stay in this business. I think you can concede that. That is pretty general. [fol. 3623] The great difficulty is that you can't lay down any yardstick; it depends upon which particular case. Now in order to decide where there was unreasonable clearance it was thought as a fair, reasonable and practical matter to submit it to an impartial Board to decide. That is what the purpose of this arbitration and the Appeal Board is—to decide whether or not the clearance is unreasonable. If it is found that it is unreasonable then the defendants ought to change the clearance. Now I don't understand what you would substitute for that.

Mr. Wright: The difficulty of this scheme as it is set up is simply this, your Honor: Had these arbitrators been given the power to consider each claim of unreasonable clearance on its merits and it——

The Court: It seems to me you confuse two things. Perhaps I am confused, I am not sure. But you come here asking for an injunction. This is not a motion to revise the decree. I think there are some things in this plan of arbitration that might be improved, but that is not before us just now. We are here now on a motion for granting an injunction.

Mr. Wright: That is right, and I take it if the defendants could point to the decree that is now in effect as an [fol. 3624] effective and adequate means of dealing with this problem then we would not be entitled to any further objection.

Mr. Proskauer: That is exactly what we do.

The Court: I would be very much interested—it is perhaps not a legal question—but I have been interested in this industry, had to be for some years now. I would like to know what you would substitute for the present plan of deciding whether there is unreasonable clearance. That is such an important question. I think it is very difficult to get a better answer than we have. If you have a better answer I would be very much interested in hearing it.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, we have made a very specific concrete suggestion within the limits of the present plan in the petition we filed for modification of Section 8 in August of last year. We there spelled out what we thought ought to be done. In the existing section we said the first thing to be done would be to remove any presumption that clearance in any particular situation is necessary, that might be spelled out in the present phrase of the decree that clearance reasonable as to time and area is essential to the industry. We advocated arguing that clause. We also advocated an express statement to the [fol. 3625] effect that the arbitrator should have the power to abolish all clearance in any situation where he found it to be inequitable regardless of whether or not the theatres were in direct competition with each other or not. As the system now is if you are in the same competitive area it doesn't matter how unreasonable the fact may be that A in that area takes clearance over theatre B, the maximum area that theatre B can get under this section is to be told, "Well, you will still play one day behind theatre A," even if the equities are such that he ought to be playing well ahead of theatre A instead of behind him.

Mr. Proskaue : There is no ground for this statement.

Mr. Wright: From that inequity arises a third limitation in the existing Section 8 which we propose to strike. That is, the present limiting section says that nothing the arbitrator did should affect the distributor's right to license any run it shows. As far as we are concerned, and I am sure your Honor will see, if you consider these decisions closely and see what has happened in the industry during this three-year period, that run and clearance are actually inseparable. Clearance merely determines the interval between runs.

The Court: I know that.

[fol. 3626] Mr. Wright: And it is ridiculous to exempt priority of run from any arbitration system which purports to deal with unreasonable clearance. It can't be done and still give effective relief to anybody.

The Court: Those suggestions of yours, Mr. Wright, seem to have more to do with broadening and limiting matters which are referred for arbitration rather than having any bearing on the question of injunction.

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, I repeat, suppose that as a condition to further injunctive relief we show that the existing relief is inadequate doesn't do the job of restraining law violations that it is intended to do—and the comments I just made are directed at that end of demonstrating to you that there are violations of law—there are unreasonable clearances which do violate the law which are being imposed by these defendants every day which cannot be effectively reached and remedied under the setup that we have now got. Now we concede that improvement in the arbitration system as such could probably be had only by consent. The consent is not forthcoming from these defendants for any improvement unless it is conditioned upon further immunity from trial of the main issues of this suit for a substantial period [fol. 3627] of time. That is a condition that the Attorney General has rejected and will not accept. Therefore there is no possibility of improving the existing arbitration provisions by consent, and I might say that in connection with the defendants' concern about the offer of evidence here foreclosing full protection to them from any such future consent decree as might be entered that that is a hazard that really is primarily one for us to determine, and we would not be here asking for this relief or offering this evidence at this time if we hadn't satisfied ourselves completely through these prolonged negotiations that having gone on since November 20, 1943, there isn't any possibility of obtaining adequate relief through consent.

Now that is not a reason—this Section 5 as far as I can see is no reason at all for excluding or failing to rule at this time on the offer of this material that we are offering for your Honor's consideration.

The Court: If I had to do it now I should exclude it. I would like to look into it a little further before I rule against you. That is the only reason I am not ruling now. If you force me to rule now—you can't force me because I am not ready to.

Mr. Wright: If we had the ruling now, as I say, we [fol. 3628] would promptly move to set aside these arbitration proceedings under the decree because in our view the only way we could have justified—the only way we could have ever justified the setting up of a system of settling and arbitrating disputes as a matter of consent decree enforcement, something that has never been heard of before in any Government agency, was on the assumption that we were doing it only on an experimental basis and that further action in the suit could be taken on a consideration of the whole facts which that experiment revealed to the Court. At least whatever might be said about its inadequacy, which we recognized from the start, to deal as fully with violations as contempt proceedings might, that is, in the way of imposing penalties, that it at least brought to the light of day and made a record of the practices that were going on in the industry and the officers of this court appointed to consider and review those practices we assume certainly had the function of supplying your Honor with the data that you would need at the end of the trial period to determine to what extent the activities of these defendants had violated the law and to what extent additional relief might be needed to handle those violations.

[fol. 3629] The Court: Mr. Wright, it seems to me that the proper and fair disposition of this motion at the present time would be this: It would be, if I do receive this in evidence, allow the defendants to file an affidavit and also allow you to file a replying affidavit. I think that would be fair.

Mr. Proskauer: That is right. We will give you a copy of the proposed affidavit immediately.

Mr. Wright: The only objection to that plan is that it defers consideration of our proof. I think it would be appropriate to mark this material now and they could make their objections and you could consider their objections to our material at the same time you consider our——

Mr. Proskauer: We are not going to offer anything in evidence. We are going to offer an affidavit conditioned on your Honor's receiving this evidence. If you don't receive the evidence we do not ask that you receive the affidavit. We will give a copy to Mr. Wright and we don't want it considered if you exclude the evidence. If you receive the evidence we would like our affidavit considered. And we have a brief from which I was cribbing as I argued which we will put in final shape and give to your Honor tomorrow.

[fol. 3630] (To Mr. Wright): We will give you a proof of it today.

The Court: Does that seem all right?

Mr. Wright: That procedure I think resolves the procedural problem. We would of course like time to reply to this brief which we haven't yet seen.

The Court: Certainly. Now the defendants will file a brief. Now when did you say?

Mr. Proskauer: We will give Mr. Wright a proof of it today. We will give it to him in final form tomorrow. We will file it with your Honor tomorrow.

The Court: You will have your brief tomorrow?

Mr. Proskauer: Yes.

The Court: That is the sixth. Now Mr. Wright, this is your brief, isn't it?

Mr. Wright: That is our main memorandum. It was submitted on February 5. You have had it at hand. The photostatic copy is attached.

The Court: This is it?

Mr. Wright: Correct.

The Court: You have another copy of it, have you?

Mr. Wright: Yes. I would be glad to supply one.

The Court: Now the defendant is submitting briefs [fol. 3631] tomorrow?

Mr. Caskey: Yes, sir.

The Court: And you want to reply to it?

Mr. Wright: Yes, your Honor.

The Court: Now when would you like to reply to it, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: I should suppose 15 or 20 days would be sufficient.

Mr. Proskauer: I thought you were in a hurry.

Mr. Wright: That is about as fast as we can get anything typed.

The Court: Well, Mr. Wright, don't pay any attention to him.

Mr. Proskauer: Well, it is an illustration, your Honor, of the terrible danger that threatens the public that requires a temporary injunction. We would be delighted to give him 20 days or 20 weeks.

The Court: When do you want to file it? That would be the 26th?

Mr. Wright: That will be March 26.

The Court: March 26, is that all right?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

There is one other thing that is still undisposed of and that is this question of pretrial conference.

The Court: I thought that we would dispose of that [fol. 3632] after lunch. It is five minutes after one. Shall we come back here at half-past two?

Mr. Wright: I don't know that there is anything to come back for.

The Court: I don't know what you want.

Mr. Wright: I wanted to get a date set when we could have a pretrial conference and see if we could get an idea of how much time is going to be taken in the trial of this case.

The Court: Tell me what you want and I will try to meet you.

Mr. Wright: May we have some date in April? The early part of April?

The Court: Would you rather do it before these briefs are in?

Mr. Wright: I think it would be better to do it afterward.

The Court: Afterward. Now I think in April I am holding court in the motion term.

Mr. Wright: I suppose that could be done in chambers.

Mr. Proskauer: Oh yes, couldn't we have some date in April in chambers? I may be away in May.

The Court: I have the motion term, and as you all know when a judge is in the motion part he has a good many [fol. 3633] troubles and he doesn't want to add to them.

Mr. Proskauer: Well, we will protect you against the Attorney General as far as we can.

The Court: For the first two weeks in April I am in the motion part and I prefer to have that some other time. How about the latter part of this month?

Mr. Proskauer: (To Mr. Wright) Will you be ready by then?

Mr. Wright: Well, we will be working on this reply brief until the 20th.

The Court: Why not set it down for the same day, March 26th? How about that?

Mr. Wright: March 26th? All right.

The Court: How about that?

Mr. Proskauer: All right, excepting I don't suppose either of us is going to be very ready. I don't think we are going to have this thing analyzed to make it worth the trouble, but I am willing——

Mr. Wright: I would suppose that more than one such conference will be necessary in any event and I would suppose we might as well get started on March 26th. Whatever needs to be done I don't suppose will be done then anyway.

The Court: Monday, March 26th. Put it down at 2:15. So that, Mr. Wright, if that is convenient for you and [fol. 3634] everyone else I have set Monday, March 26th, for this pretrial conference at 2:15 in this room just to have some room designated. This is 1506. But it is quite likely we won't have anything formal to do and we will adjourn to my chambers.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Marcus reminds me there is also pending and undisposed of some objections that we made to some interrogatories directed to us by three of the defendants—I believe Columbia, Universal, and United Artists—which were generally continued for disposition at the time we continued the trial date shortly after we entered the consent decree, and I suppose those should be disposed of at some reasonably early date too.

The Court: Are they before me?

Mr. Wright: They were before you as I recall, your Honor, the last time they were up.

The Court: I don't recall anything about them. I don't know what you want me to do.

Mr. Raftery: Neither does counsel. We have forgotten about them.

Mr. Wright: If you say that we all forget about them that is fine.

Mr. Raftery: You just answer them.

Mr. Wright: We filed objections to these interrogatories and unless counsel is willing to withdraw the interroga[fol. 3635] tories why we want the objections disposed of.

The Court: Well, I don't know what they are.

Mr. Raftery: We will look them up and report back on the 26th.

Mr. Wright: All right.

The Court: Is that satisfactory, Mr. Wright?

Mr. Wright: Yes.

Mr. Ernst: If your Honor please, I represent the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers. They are not as poor as Judge Proskauer's clients; they are doing well. The Society includes Selznick, Goldwyn, Disney, Orson Welles, Walter Wanger, and I represent others. We ask leave to file a brief amicus with respect to the motion that was made today. It is apparent I think to everybody that the independent producer of motion pictures has a direct interest in any restrictions in the market-place which impede the free flow of his commodity to that market-place in violation of the Sherman Law.

Mr. Caskey: If your Honor please, we ask you not to accept the brief. It is not yet in being and so we cannot comment on it. But we have had tender-- to us a brief from another group,——

Mr. Stern: I am appearing——

[fol. 3636] Mr. Caskey: —which contains a great many purported statements of fact, inflammatory and demagogic arguments which are not supported by testimony and should not be received. We think there is no need for briefs amicus when the plaintiff is the Government of the United States.

The Court: I don't think we need any help when we have got five live defendants with eminent counsel.

Mr. Ernst: May I ask if Mr. Caskey is speaking for all five companies?

Mr. Caskey: No.

Mr. Ernst: Or just for his own?

Mr. Caskey: Just for my own.

Mr. Stern: If your Honor please, I represent the Conference of Independent Exhibitors. It is the brief which Mr. Caskey refers to. I think your Honor has a copy.

The Court: It was left in my office——

Mr. Stern: It was left in your office Friday afternoon.

The Court: It was left in chambers when I came up from court. I haven't looked at it at all.

Mr. Stern: With that brief is an application for leave to file it would your Honor and copies of the brief have [fol. 3637] already been served on all the attorneys representing the defendant including a copy for the Government. We think we have a direct interest in this litigation, perhaps a more direct interest than anyone else outside of the defendants themselves. The purpose of this brief, if your Honor please, is to set forth to your Honor the views of the independent exhibitors throughout the United States and to conserve the time of the Court in obviating the submission of a great many briefs and a great many arguments. We represent 21 regional——

The Court: You realize that if you were to be allowed to file a brief there might be a hundred others wishing to do the same thing. How could I grant you the right and not grant everybody the right? Of course as you know the Attorney General is supposed to represent and I think Mr. Wright does ably represent the public and everyone else.

Mr. Stern: We are pretty nearly the everyone else.

Mr. Proskauer: That immediately raises a question of fact. You are not pretty nearly the everyone else. There are thousands and thousands of independent exhibitors who are not you at all and who do not believe in you.

[fol. 3638] Mr. Stern: Those are your own exhibitors. Those are the ones controlled by your——

The Court: Mr. Wright, don't you represent everyone including these defendants?

Mr. Wright: If the Court please, we do in theory but in this particular case I would prefer not to accept the responsibility. We of course try to give effect to all of the views of all of these other people who are vitally interested in the industry. However there are many conflicts between them. It is impossible to give adequate expression to all these various viewpoints that are involved. At the time this consent decree was entered we recognized that fact and your Honor will recall we had a hearing before your Honor to which everyone was invited to express his views with regard to this consent decree. In connection with any proposed modification or additional relief I think it would be quite proper and we think desirable for your Honor to again receive the views of those who are interested. As I understand it, these people do not seek to intervene. That we might oppose. All they wish to do is to present briefs, and insofar as that is concerned we think it would be a desirable thing for your Honor to have their views before you.

Mr. Proskauer: Your Honor, I could understand counsel [fol. 3639] in good faith asking for leave to file amicus briefs if we were trying this case—if we were deciding the particular issue. But we are just here on a motion for a temporary injunction. That is all there is before you. What is the good of amicus briefs on that? We are going to get into a situation where we have a lot of stuff in these briefs that we are going to have — say things about. Your Honor is not going to know what the facts are. And we are going to say that some things he says are facts and some are not facts. That always happens in amicus briefs. We have a simple motion here.

Mr. Davis: May I make a remark based on what Judge Proskauer has just said?

I have long held the view that after the amoeba the lowest form of animal life is the amicus curiae. Now I have discovered after these long years that the amoeba should be elevated from that low gradation and that the amicus curiae is the lowest of the genus.

Mr. Ernst: Your Honor, if I could reckon the calendar as Judge Proskauer does I would have to agree with them. It seemed to me that when he said that this is just a little temporary thing, all will be disposed of on the second Tuesday of October he was just forgetting the basis of our [fol. 3640] judicial machinery in this country. The pattern of determination of this motion may well determine the pattern of economics in this industry for years to come before there is a final determination pending appeal, and the glib suggestion that it is just temporary is flying in the face of the realities of the market place, a market-place dominated as we contend by five major companies owning brick and mortar——

The Court: You are now being heard. If you wish to argue this I will be glad to hear you.

Mr. Ernst: I am arguing against the position that the amicus curiae is the lower form of amoeba. I am willing to say this:——

The Court: I think I might do this. After recess if you wish to argue this I will be glad to hear you. Recess until 2:15. I wanted to avoid receiving any further briefs.

(Recess to 2:15 p. m.)

[fol. 3641] Afternoon Session

Mr. Ernst: If your Honor please, I hesitate to take the time of the Court because this seems to me such a small matter. There are two applications before you for leave to file amicus briefs. I am talking for only one. If there were 50 or 100 then Judge Proskauer's bewildered plea a thousand that might have to be listened to would carry weight. But there are just the two of us. The brief we will file is for substantial people in the industry. The Government has said that it will be helpful to the Government and to the Court to have such brief.

The Court: Whom do you represent?

Mr. Ernst: I represent the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers. These are a lower grade in the industry even than the companies called satellites. These people are Selznick, Goldwyn, Orson Welles, Cagney and Disney, who produce pictures and have no theatres and have no distribution system of their own. They are nevertheless of necessity vitally affected by the decree that is now in existence and would be extremely affected in my opinion if the Court should determine that the evidence proffered by the Government is inadmissible and if as a result of that the Government pursued its present intention of then [fol. 3642] asking for a vacation of the consent decree. I am in no position to argue fully on this question because I do not know what evidence will be before the Court. Our brief will take on one nature if you accept the analysis of the arbitrations. We have had in behalf of our clients at considerable expense our own independent analysis of the arbitrations made by competent researchers. I may say parenthetically that within the limitations imposed on the arbitrators there can be no objection, as I see it.

On the other hand when Judge Davis indicated that he knew of no objection to the present situation all I can say is that he is not aware of the very profound objections raised by a score or more of independent producers of substance, of quality and of importance in the market-place.

If the Court should accept the Government's proffer of evidence and thereupon the affidavit which Judge Proskauer said he has drafted is also before the Court's mind for consideration we would like in our brief in behalf of these independent producers of pictures to address the Court. That we have a position in the situation goes beyond question. We are the lowest of the producers insofar as we are also using the monopoly of copyright referred to by [fol. 3643] Judge Proskauer, but we are in no position to have an accord in regard to price maintenance to which clearance is merely a corollary, and a necessary corollary no doubt in many instances. We are in no position to address ourselves to the operation of the decree and the operation of the restricted market-place today as are these five giants. What we would like the opportunity to do as one, and we understand there is only one other before you, is to submit within ten or twelve days a page proof of our brief to everybody and the final brief on the day when the Government's reply brief is due.

The Court: Well, if there are only two I think I will receive them—give you a chance to be heard. Mr. Myers? Is he here?

(No response.)

Mr. Bickford: Mr. Stern.

The Court: Mr. Abraham L. Myers, the gentleman this morning.

Mr. Wright: I think, if the Court please, that was Mr. Stern who appeared this morning. I believe the gentleman who appeared this morning is Mr. Stern whose name is on the brief submitted by Mr. Myers.

The Court: Is he or his representative present now?

(No response.)

[fol. 3644] The Court: In any event I will allow those two to submit briefs, so that there may be no feeling that they have not been given an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. Seymour: What is your Honor's pleasure about these affidavits? Shall we hand them up now and your Honor hold them until you have decided whether you want to consider them?

The Court: I suppose that is about the best.

Mr. Seymour: We will hand them up to the clerk and furnish the Government with copies.

Mr. Wright: I think they should be marked for identification.

Mr. Seymour: I don't see any occasion that they be marked. These are affidavits that we are submitting on the basis your Honor has indicated this morning. We are not going to offer them in evidence. One never offers affidavits in evidence.

Mr. Wright: Just so they are properly identified.

Mr. Seymour: I will be glad to state what they are. One is an affidavit by James L. Donohue, verified March 2, 1945. The other is an affidavit of J. Noble Braden verified March 5, 1945. And we will furnish you with copies later. [fol. 3645] The Court: There is no objection to them I take it?

Mr. Wright: Well, it is very difficult to say until we have seen them. I have read the affidavit of Mr. Braden and I don't think there is any question about the facts that are set forth. I haven't seen the other affidavit at all. There may be objection on their part.

The Court: Anything further now, gentlemen?

(No response.)

The Court: That is all.

Mr. Wright: I still haven't had the copy of the other affidavit.

Mr. Proskauer: You are going to have an opportunity.

Mr. Wright: And I assume anything we have to say by way of objections to these affidavits may be said in our brief inasmuch as we haven't yet been furnished with the copy of this one.

The Court: They have not been received in evidence yet.

Mr. Wright: That is right.

Mr. Proskauer: May it be understood if we desire to comment on these amicus briefs that we may do so on the same day that the Government files its final brief?

[fol. 3646] The Court: That is on the 26th, isn't it?

Mr. Proskauer: Yes.

(To Mr. Ernst): When are we going to get the page proof?

Mr. Ernst: Ten days I thought.

Mr. Proskauer: Ten days is the 15th. That allows us about ten days.

Mr. Ernst: I will split it in half.

The Court: Anyway as far as advising the Court you may do that on the 26th when we have your briefs.

(Conference at the bench.)

The Court: Mr. Seymour wants to know if you want those affidavits filed in the clerk's office. You don't, do you?

Mr. Seymour: I just think they should be filed with your Honor. If your Honor does not admit the Government's offer you won't have any occasion to consider them and therefore they need not be filed.

Mr. Wright: There is one thing more that we prepared for our own use that you may find helpful, and that is the summary of the 104 decisions which we have prepared and which you may wish to use in connection with our memorandum. (Handing to Court.)

I will furnish copies to counsel (handing to counsel).

[fol. 3647] The Court: Mark these what, Mr. Wright? Summary of Appeal Board decisions?

Mr. Wright: 1 to 104 inclusive.

(Adjourned to March 26, 1945, at 2:15 p. m., for pretrial conference, in Room 1506.)

(Adjourned to October 8, 1945, for trial.)

[fol. 3648] In the District Court of the United States

[Title omitted]

Expediting Certificate of the Attorney General of the United States—Filed June 13, 1945

To the Clerk of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York:

I, Francis Biddle, Attorney General of the United States, hereby certify that the above entitled case now pending in said court is a civil action brought by the United States of America against Paramount Pictures, Inc. and other defendants named in the complaint herein, under the Act of Congress approved July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. 209), entitled "An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," as amended, and that, in my opinion, said case is of general public importance.

I, therefore, request that, complying with the provisions of the Act of Congress entitled "An Act to expedite the hearing and determination of suits in equity pending or hereafter brought under the Act of July second, eighteen [fols. 3649-3651] hundred and ninety, entitled 'An Act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies'; "An Act to regulate commerce approved February fourth, eighteen hundred and eighty-seven; or any other Acts having a like purpose that may hereafter be enacted," approved February 11, 1903 (32 Stat. 823), as amended by the Act of Congress approved April 6, 1942 (56 Stat. 291); you file this certificate among the records of the above entitled case and immediately furnish a copy thereof to the senior Circuit judge (or in his absence, the Presiding Circuit Judge) of the Second Circuit, to the end that three judges in such circuit, of whom at least one shall be a circuit judge, be designated to hear and determine said case, and that said case be assigned for hearing at the earliest practicable date and in every way expedited, as provided in said act of February 11, 1903, as amended.

(S.) Francis Biddle, Attorney General.

Washington, D. C., June 12th, 1945.

Company, Inc., is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of New York, with a place of business at 1250 Sixth Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in the business of distributing motion pictures.

8. United Artists Corporation is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, with its principal place of business at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, New York, and is engaged in distribution of motion pictures in various parts of the United States and in foreign countries.

The five major defendants—Paramount Pictures, Inc., Loew's, Incorporated, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation and their subsidiaries—were charged in the amended and supplemental complaint with combining and conspiring unreasonably to restrain trade and commerce in the production, distribution and exhibition of motion pictures and to monopolize such trade and commerce in violation of the Sherman Act. The three minor defendants —Columbia Pictures Corporation, Universal Corporation, and their subsidiaries, which are producers and distributors, and not exhibitors, and United Artists Corporation, which is a distributor only, were likewise charged with combining and conspiring with the five major defendants and with each other unreasonably to restrain and to monopolize trade and commerce in motion pictures. As it appeared upon the trial that there was no violation of the Sherman Act in respect to production of motion pictures and that there was on the contrary active competition in production, the charge in respect to production was formally abandoned by the plaintiff. The issues therefore are whether there have been illegal restraints or monopolization in the distribution and exhibition of motion pictures.

[fol. 3659] The plaintiff contends that an illegal conspiracy and monopoly were effected by: (1) concertedly fixing the license terms before the licensees have had a fair opportunity to estimate the value and character of the films licensed and before such films were completed or shown; (2) concertedly fixing the run, clearance, and minimum admission price terms on which an exhibitor may show pictures through license agreements covering periods of a year or more; (3) concertedly conditioning the licensing of one film or group of films upon the licensing of another film or group of films and by conditioning the licensing of films in one theatre or group of theatres upon the licensing of films in other theatres or group of theatres; (4) concertedly discriminating with respect to the license terms granted to theatres in large circuits because such theatres are part of a circuit. The means of such discrimination are said to be the licensing for exhibition in theatres of the five defendant exhibitors of runs ahead of those granted to competing independent exhibitors, and the continuance of these prior runs from season to season to the prejudice of independent exhibitors. As a result independent exhibitors are systematically excluded from the opportunity to procure preferred runs of pictures distributed by the defendants in the localities in which defendants' theatres operate and at times refused any run at all in order to protect defendants' theatres from competition.

It is further charged by the plaintiff that the distributor-exhibitor defendants have combined with each other: (1) by conditioning the licensing of film distributed by one defendant in theatres operated by another upon the licensing of films distributed by the latter in the theatres operated by the former; (2) by excluding independently produced films from affiliated theatres and by excluding unaffiliated exhibitors from competing with first run or other run theatres in cities and towns where affiliated theatres are located; (3) by excluding unaffiliated exhibitors from operating theatres on the same run as affiliated exhibitors; (4) by using the first and early runs of affiliated theatres to control the film [fol. 3660] supply, runs, clearances and admission prices of operators of competing unaffiliated theatres in cities and towns in which affiliated theatres are located; (5) by pooling or otherwise sharing with each other the profits of affiliated theatres owned or controlled by two or more exhibitor defendants located in the same competitive area and frequently by together operating on the same run in cases where they would be in competition with one another except for such pooling or profit sharing agreements; (6) by effecting a division of the territory of the entire United States among them for theatre operating purposes.

The amended and supplemental complaint prays: (1) That each of the contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of trade, together with attempts to monopolize the same, be declared illegal; (2) that the defendants and their subsidiaries be perpetually enjoined from continuing to carry out attempts at monopolization and all restraints of trade in distribution and exhibition of motion pictures; (3) that a nation-wide system of impartial arbitration tribunals, or such other means of enforcement as the court may deem proper, be established in order to secure adequate enforcement of whatever general and nation-wide prohibitions of illegal practices may be contained in the decree; (4) that the five major defendants and their subsidiaries be directed to divest themselves of all interest and ownership, both direct and indirect, in any theatres which the court shall find to have been used by one or more of them unreasonably to restrain trade and commerce in motion pictures.

After the amended and supplemental complaint was filed, the plaintiff and the five major defendants and their subsidiary corporations that were parties to the suit, executed a written consent to the entry of a decree by the District Court, signed November 20, 1940. A decree was made in accordance with the consent reciting that no testimony had been taken, that no provision of the decree should be construed as an admission or adjudication that any of the plaintiff's charges were true, or that the consenting defendants [fol. 3661] had violated any law, or that the doing or the failure to do any of the acts or things enjoined or directed to be done would constitute a violation of law.

The decree enjoined the consenting defendants as follows:

(1) No distributor defendant shall license feature motion pictures for public exhibition within the United States at which an admission fee is to be charged until the feature has been trade shown within the exchange district in which the exhibition is to be held.

(2) No distributor defendant shall offer for license or shall license more than five features in a single group. The license of one group of features shall not be conditioned upon the licensing of another features or group of features, nor shall any distributor defendant require an exhibitor to license shorts, reissues, westerns, or foreigns as a condition of licensing other features. Disputes as to violation of these provisions shall be subject to arbitration. The power of the arbitrator shall be limited to a determination of whether the offer to license or the license was conditioned and, if found to be conditioned, to imposing a penalty against the distributor of not to exceed $500.

(3) No license for features to be exhibited in theatres located in one exchange district shall include theatres located in another exchange district.
